LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Wednesday, July 31.

Re HARLAND, a Lunatic.

Practice—Sale of gravel.

White supported a petition, praying the confirmation of the commissioner's report. The commissioner had reported that it would be beneficial to the lunatic's estate to sell a quantity of gravel which is found upon the property. There was a mortgage of 330*l*. on the estate, which it was proposed to pay off out of the money received for gravel. It had been valued at 60*l*. an acre, and would require an outlay of 300*l* which the tenant of the property was willing to make upon such terms. The money as received to be carried to a separate account, to be entitled the "gravel fund." Costs to be paid out of the general estate.

Ordered.

WINDSOR v. WINDSOR, Re WINDSOR, a Lunatic.

Practice—Lunatic tenant for life—Sale of estate—Title-deeds.

The estate had been sold under a decree in this cause, of which the lunatic was tenant for life. The deeds had been in the hands of trustees, who had deposited them in the Master's office.

James Parker supported a petition, praying that the deeds might be delivered out to the purchaser.

Ordered.

WILLIS v. OLIVER, Ex parte ANN TAYLOR.

Contempt in not producing deeds—Discharge of prisoner—Master's report

A defendant in custody for non-production of documents, which are not within his power, but in the hands of his mortgagee, cannot apply for his discharge under the 17th rule of 3 Wm. 4, c. 36, but must apply to the judge who made the order for production to rescind it.

Blunt, a counsel for the suitors' fund, moved to discharge the defendant, Ann Taylor, out of custody, upon the ground of irregularity; or in the alternative that she might be discharged and her costs paid out of the suitors' fund. She had been committed in 1839 for not depositing deeds in the Master's office according to an order made to that effect.

The suit had been instituted against the assignees of an insolvent debtor and a Mr. Mitchell; and Ann Taylor, as assignee from Mitchell of a leasehold estate of the insolvent's, was made a defendant at a later stage of the proceedings. The suit had been originally commenced by James Willis and John M'Lean, who were also assignees, as co-plaintiffs, but James Willis was dead at the time Ann Taylor was made a defendant. M'Lean had become an insolvent. Under these circumstances he contended that the suit had become abated, and consequently Ann Taylor's commitment was altogether irregular. The order by which she was required to deposit the papers in the Master's office was entitled in the suit of "Willis and another." The writ of execution is in a suit wherein James Willis and another are plaintiffs, and Oliver and others are defendants. The defendant was also in custody for another contempt, in nonpayment of costs to "James Willis and others."

Chandless, contrà.—The words "since dead" should have been added after the name of James Willis in the title to the cause, but the omission was unimportant. The bill was filed, in 1829, by the plaintiffs as assignees; one of them died in 1831; all his interest survived, and it is quite clear a surviving assignee may continue the suit. There is no abatement. (Lord Redesdale's Book on Pleading, pp. 58, 59, 4th ed.)

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What do you say to the insolvency of the other plaintiff?

Chandless.—He is a mere trustee, and therefore his insolvency does not determine his interest in the subject-matter of the suit. As to costs, payment must be made to the solicitor.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Mr. Chandless is right. The defendant is in mercy. You must proceed on the other part of the motion.

Blunt.—She is unable to produce the deeds, which are in the hands of a mortgagee.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If she is in custody for not producing the deeds, and she is unable to do so, the Master, on visiting the prison, will advise her what to do.

Blunt.—The Master's report on her case states that the deeds are in the hands of her mortgagee, that she has nothing to subsist on but a charitable allowance of 6s. a week, and that hers is a proper case for the Act. She states that in 1835, being indebted to one Pearce, she deposited these deeds with him as a security for his debt.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—She can get the deeds by paying off the mortgage debt, and must apply to the Vice-Chancellor to discharge the order. I cannot order the costs to be paid out of the suitors' fund. The 17th rule does not apply to such a case as this. The motion is wrong altogether. The plaintiff's costs must be costs in the cause.

WOODBURN v. FISHER.

Injunction—Contempt—Vacation judge—Practice.

Where an injunction has been granted by the vacation judge acting for another judge, applications to dissolve the injunction must, according to the 15th order of the 8th of May, 1837, be made to the Lord Chancellor, and not to the judge to whom the cause properly belongs.

In August, 1843 (the vacation), an injunction had been granted by the Vice-Chancellor of England, acting for Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, to restrain the defendant and his servants from carrying away stones, gravel, sand, and other substances, from the bank or mound in the plaintiff's bill mentioned. The plaintiff is the owner of a small property in the island of Walney, on the Lancashire coast; and the defendant is the occupier of another property lying to the north of the plaintiff's. There is a sea-bank of sand, stones, and gravel, on the west of the island, which protects it, and especially that part of it where the plaintiff's property is situate, from inundation by the sea during high tides. This bank extends along the whole of the western coast of the island, between high and low watermark, and the bill alleged, that thereby that part of the island called the Division of Biggar, including the plaintiff's property, has been, and still is, protected from being overflowed and damaged by the sea. In the affidavits filed on the part of the plaintiff, the sea-bank is described as "a natural bank or mound called the White Horse Scarr." The defendant had put in his answer at the beginning of the present year, and had since gone into evidence to shew that there are three scarrs or precipices in the division of Biggar, and that the scarr from which the defendant took stones is situated two miles to the north of the plaintiff's property, which is opposite the White Horse Scarr. The defendant had acquiesced in the injunction until last May, when he had again removed large quantities of stone, and thereby committed a breach of the injunction. For that breach he had been committed under an order made by Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce. He had then moved to be discharged from custody, upon the ground that he had not committed any breach of the injunction, and that motion had been refused.

Cooper now moved that the injunction might be dissolved, and that the order of the Vice-Chancellor for the committal of the defendant for the breach of it in May last might be discharged.

Phillips objected, that this was an original and not an appeal motion. The defendant had moved before the Vice-Chancellor for his discharge, upon the allegation that he had never committed a breach of the injunction; but he had never applied to dissolve the injunction.

Cooper.—On appeal motions it is usual to add also an original motion, and to produce fresh affidavits. The defendant had a right to come here at once.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Under what circumstances was the injunction granted?

Phillips.—The Vice-Chancellor of England, as vacation judge, granted the injunction for Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is an original motion, and must be heard by the Vice-Chancellor.

Cooper would proceed with the other part of the case, and contended, that by the terms of the injunction the defendant was only restrained from taking material from the White Horse Scarr. The defendant, by an affidavit filed the 29th of July, stated, that he had no intention to commit a breach of the injunction, which he apprehended to restrain only from taking stones at the White Horse Scarr. The plaintiff had affixed a notice-board to the White Horse Scarr only, and which was the only weak part of the island. That the parts of the sea-bank to the north of the White Horse Scarr, from whence the defendant had taken the stones, was bold and rocky, and that it was beneficial to carry away the stones, as the sea then formed a natural bank of gravel and sand.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—That goes to the merits of the injunction.

Cooper.—Even if the injunction did extend to restrain the defendant from the acts he had lately done, the 17th rule of the 15th section of Sir Edward Sugden's Act (1 Wm. 1, c. 36), if the party in contempt had no other detainer against him which rendered it necessary for him to procure his discharge under the Insolvent Act, enabled the Court to discharge him, and make the costs costs in the cause. Besides, the application must necessarily be made here, for by the 15th order of May 1837, it is directed that, "in the interval between the close of the sittings after any Term and the commencement of the sittings of the next ensuing Term, applications for special orders may be made to any judge of the court in the same way as if those orders had not been made," and the order afterwards directs that "no order so made by one judge for another will be reheard for the purpose of being discharged or varied otherwise than by the Lord Chancellor." The application to dissolve the injunction must, therefore, of necessity be made to this Court.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case ought to stand over. But what is to be done with the man?

Phillips.—The defendant's wife and servants are still hovering on the coast with a ship, and they intend to carry off more of the sea-bank. The plaintiff will produce affidavits within a week to meet the defendant's application.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

(Before Mr. Commissioner EVANS.)

Thursday, Sept. 26.

Re PORTINGTON.

Vesting order in Insolvent Court—Effect of remand when petition dismissed.

The insolvent in this case was a prisoner in the Queen's Bench prison, where he had been detained three years. A vesting order had been obtained by the creditors, but he had refused to file a schedule. He had appeared on his first examination, having in the meantime been discharged according to the Act.

Woodroffe, in opposition, stated this fact, adding that as the whole of the petitioner's property was in the hands of the provisional assignee of the Insolvent Court, the creditors could not benefit under the present schedule.

Mr. Commissioner EVANS said the insolvent had no locus standi in that (the Bankrupt) Court, and that if the facts had been previously known the discharge would not have been granted. He considered that a fraud had been practised on the Court, and dismissed the petition.

Woodroffe applied for an order to remand the insolvent to his former custody.

Mr. Commissioner Evans directed the order.

The insolvent observed the vesting order was at an end by the discharge, but the Court ruled the contrary.

Hughes suggested to the Court that, according to previous decisions,(a) the Court could not order a remand to former custody, as the petition was dismissed.

Mr. Commissioner Evans refused, however, to rescind his order in the present case, which was one of gross imposition on the Court.

Re Blond.

In this case the insolvent had also been discharged from custody, having petitioned the Insolvent Court. The commissioner dismissed the petition, and made an order to remand him to his former custody, when

Levy, in support, called the attention of the Court to the 6th and 24th clauses of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, as shewing that it was only when certain facts were found that the Court had the power to remand to former custody, and that when the petition was dismissed, then, the interim protection having ceased, the prisoner could only be taken again in execution.

Mr. Commissioner Evans.—I say that the man got his discharge by fraud, and that being so, I make an order, if the creditors like to take advantage of it.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

The quantity and importance of the Legislation of the last session compels us still to devote a large portion of our columns to its record: we hope to complete the publication of the remaining statutes of general interest before the business of the Term begins to occupy our columns. We have yet to present to our readers some Bills which were laid upon the table of the House of Commons for the purpose of being considered during the recess, but hitherto matters of more urgency have compelled their postponement. The earliest opportunity shall be taken for their appearance here.

NEW STATUTES.

Of the Session 8 Victoria.

[In this record of actual Legislation, we adopt the plan of giving the titles alone of the statutes of no general or professional interest; and analyses of the more important changes in the law, printing at length such statutes or parts of statutes only as are of particular interest to our readers.]

Cap. XCI.

An Act to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to Turnpike Trusts in South Wales. (Aug. 9, 1844.)

Cap. XCII.

An Act to amend the Law respecting the Office of County Coroner. (Aug. 9, 1844.)

58 Geo. 3, c. 95, repealed.—Whereas the regulations for the elections of coroners for counties are insufficient: and whereas such elections are made with much inconvenience, and are attended with great and unnecessary expense: and whereas, for remedy of such grievances, it is expedient that an alteration should be made in the manner of making such elections: be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That an Act passed in the fifty-eighth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act to regulate the Elections of Coroners for Counties," shall be repealed.

2. Petition for division of counties.—And be it enacted, That when and as often as it shall seem expedient to the justices of any county that such county should be divided into two or more districts for the purposes of this Act, or that any alteration should be made of any division theretofore made under this Act, it shall be lawful for the said justices, in general or quarter sessions assembled, to resolve that a petition shall be presented to her Majesty, praying that such division or alteration be made, and thereupon to adjourn the further consideration of such petition until notice thereof shall be given to the coroner or coroners of such county as hereinafter provided.

3. Preparation of petition.—And be it enacted, That the clerk of the peace shall give notice of any such resolution to any coroner for such county, and of the time when the petition will be taken by the said justices into consideration, and the justices shall confer with every such coroner, who shall attend the meeting of the justices for that purpose, touching such petition, having due regard to the size and nature of each proposed district, the number of the inhabitants, the nature of their employments, and such other circumstances as shall appear to the justices fit to be considered in carrying into execution the provisions of this Act; and such petition, with a description of the several proposed districts, and of the boundaries thereof, with the reasons upon which the petition is founded, shall be certified to her Majesty under the hands and seals of two or more of the justices present when such petition shall be agreed to, and the clerk of the peace for such county shall forthwith give or send a true copy of such petition, certified under his hand, to every coroner for such county.

4. Division of the county into districts.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for her Majesty, if she shall think fit, with the advice of her privy council, after taking into consideration any such petition, and also any petition which may be presented to her by any coroner of the same county concerning such proposed division or alteration, or whenever it shall seem fit to her Majesty to direct the issue of a writ de coronatore eligendo, for the purpose of authorizing the election of an additional coroner above the number of those who have been theretofore customarily elected in such county, to order that such county shall be divided into such and so many districts, for the purposes of this Act, as to her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, shall seem expedient, and to give a name to each of such districts, and to determine at what place within each district the court for the election of coroner for such district shall be holden as hereinafter provided, and every such order shall be published in the London Gazette.

5. Districts to be assigned to coroners.—And be it enacted, That the justices in general or quarter session assembled shall assign one of such districts to each of the persons holding the office of coroner in such county, and upon the death, resignation, or removal of any such person, each of his successors, and also every other person thereafter elected into the office of coroner in such county, shall be elected to and shall exercise the office of coroner, according to the provisions of this Act, and shall reside within the district in and for which he shall be so elected, or in some place wholly or partly surrounded by such district, or not more than two miles beyond the outer boundary of such district.

6. Provision for coroners already acting in districts.—And be it enacted, That whenever it shall appear to her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, and shall be set forth in the said order in council, that any such county has been customarily divided into districts for the purpose of holding inquests during the space of seven years before the passing of this Act, and it shall seem expedient to her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, that the same division of the county be made under this Act, each of such districts shall be assigned to the coroner usually acting in and for the same district before the passing of this Act; but if it shall appear expedient to her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, that a different division of such county be made, and any such coroner shall present a petition to her Majesty praying for compensation to him for the loss of his emoluments arising out of such change, it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, to order the Lord High Treasurer or Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to assess the amount of compensation which it shall appear to him or them ought to be awarded to such coroner, and the amount of such compensation shall be paid by the treasurer of the county to such coroner, his executors or administrators, out of the county rate.

7. List of places in each district to be made.—And be it enacted, that such justices so assembled as aforesaid shall order a list to be prepared by the clerk of the peace for their respective counties of the several parishes, townships, or hundreds, as the case may be, in each and every of the several districts into which the respective counties shall be divided under the authority of this Act, specifying in such list the place within each district at which the court for the election of coroner is to be holden, and also the place or places at which the poll shall be taken, inserting the parishes, townships, and places for each of such polling-places, and shall cause such order to be enrolled among the records of the county.

8. Detached parts to form parts of counties by which they are surrounded.—And be it enacted, That all isolated or detached parts of counties shall be considered, for the purposes of this Act, as forming a part of that county, riding, or division respectively whereby such isolated or detached parts shall or may be wholly surrounded; but if any such isolated or detached part shall be surrounded by two or more counties, ridings, or divisions, then as forming part of that county, riding, or division with which such isolated or detached part shall have the longest common boundary.

9. Election to be held in the district; who to elect.—And be it enacted, That from and after the time when any county shall have been so as aforesaid divided, every election of a coroner for any such district shall be held at some place within the district in which he shall be elected to serve the office of coroner; and that every person to be so elected shall be chosen by a majority of such persons residing within such district as shall at the time of such election be duly qualified to vote at the elections of coroners for the said county.

10. Sheriff to hold a special county court for election of coroner. If election not determined on the view, then to proceed to take a poll. Duration of poll.—And be it enacted, That from and after the division of any counties as aforesaid into coroners' districts, upon every election to be made of any coroner or coroners for any county, the sheriff of the county where such election shall be made shall hold a court for the same election at some convenient place within the district for which the election of coroner shall take place, on some day to be by him appointed, which day shall not be less than seven days, nor more than fourteen days after the receipt of the writ de coronatore eligendo; and in case the said election be not then determined upon the view, with the consent of the electors there present, but that a poll shall be demanded for determination thereof, then the said sheriff, or in his absence his under-sheriff, shall adjourn the same court to eight of the clock in the forenoon of the next day but one, unless such next day but one shall be Saturday or Sunday, and then of the Monday following; and the said sheriff, or in his absence the under-sheriff, with such others as shall be deputed by him, shall then and there proceed to take the said poll in some public place or places by the same sheriff, or his under-sheriff, as aforesaid, in his absence, or others appointed for the taking thereof as aforesaid; and such polling shall continue for two days only, for eight hours in each day; and no poll shall be kept open later than four of the clock in the afternoon of either of the said days.

11. Places for taking the poll at elections for coroners.—And be enacted, that for more conveniently taking the poll at all elections of coroners under the authority of this Act, the poll for the election of the coroner in each district shall be taken at the place to be appointed for holding the court for such election, and at such other places within the same district as may for the time being be appointed by the quarter sessions.

12. Sheriff may erect polling booths for taking the poll at. No voter to poll out of the district where his property lies. In case of a parish not included in any district.—And be it enacted, That at every contested election of coroner for any district of the said county, the sheriff, under-sheriff, or sheriff's deputy shall, if required by or on the behalf of any candidate on the day fixed for the election, and, if not so required, may, if it shall appear to him expedient, cause a booth or booths to be erected for taking the poll at the court or principal place of election, and also at each of the polling places within the district hereinbefore directed to be used for the purposes of such election, and shall cause to be affixed on the most conspicuous part of each of the said booths the names of the several parishes, townships, and places for which such booth is respectively allotted; and no person shall be admitted to vote at any such election in respect of any property situate in any parish, township, or place, except at the booth so allotted for such parish, township, or place, and if no booth shall be allotted for the same, then at any of the booths for the same districts; and in case any parish, township, or place, or part of any parish, township, or place, shall happen not to be included in any of the districts, the votes in respect to property situate in any parish, township, or place, or any part of any parish, township, or place, so omitted, shall be taken at the court or principal place of election for such district of the said county.

13. Poll clerks to be appointed and sworn. Inspector of poll clerk. Electors to be sworn. Oath.—And for the more due and orderly proceeding in the said poll, be it enacted, That the said sheriff, or in his absence the under-sheriff, or such as he shall depute, shall appoint such number of clerks as to him shall seem meet and convenient for the taking thereof, which clerks shall take the said poll in the presence of the said sheriff or his under-sheriff, or such as he shall depute; and before they begin to take the said poll every clerk so appointed shall by the said sheriff or his under-sheriff, or such as he shall depute as aforesaid, be sworn truly and indifferently to take the same poll, and to set down the names of each elector, and the place of his residence, and for whom he shall poll, and to poll no elector who is not sworn, if required to be sworn by the candidates or either of them; and which oaths of the said clerks, the said sheriff or his under-sheriff, or such as he shall depute, shall have authority to administer; and the sheriff, or in his absence his under-sheriff, as aforesaid, shall appoint for each candidate such one person as shall be nominated to him by each candidate to be inspector of every clerk who shall be appointed for taking the poll; and every elector, before he is admitted to poll at the same election, shall, if required by or on behalf of any candidate, first take the oath hereinafter mentioned; which oath the said sheriff, by himself or his under-sheriff, or such sworn clerk by him appointed for taking the said poll as aforesaid, shall have authority to administer; (that is to say,)

"I swear [or, being one of the people called Quakers, or entitled by law to make affirmation, solemnly affirm], that I am a freeholder of the county of and have a freehold estate, consisting of lying at within the said county; and that such freehold estate has not been granted to me fraudulently or colourably on purpose to qualify me to give my vote at this election; and that the place of my abode is at [and, if it be a place consisting of more streets or places than one, specifying what street or place]; that I am twenty-one years of age, as I believe; and that I have not been before polled at this election [adding, except in cases of solemn affirmations]

"So help me God."

14. Punishment for perjury.—And be it enacted, That every elector or other person who shall wilfully and falsely take the said oath or affirmation hereby appointed to be taken by the electors as aforesaid shall for every such offence incur the penalties by law inflicted on persons guilty of perjury; and every person who shall unlawfully and corruptly procure or suborn any freeholder or other person wilfully and falsely to take the said oath or affirmation in order to be polled, shall for every such offence incur such pains and penalties as are by law inflicted on persons guilty of subornation of perjury.

15. Custody of poll books, and final declaration of the poll.—And be it enacted, That the poll clerks shall, at the close of the poll, inclose and seal their several books, and shall publicly deliver them, so inclosed and sealed, to the sheriff, under-sheriff, or sheriff's deputy presiding at such poll, who shall give a receipt for the same; and every such deputy who shall have received any such poll books shall forthwith deliver or transmit the same, so inclosed and sealed, to the sheriff or his under-sheriff, who shall receive and keep all the poll books unopened until the reassembling of the court on the day next but one after the close of the poll, unless such next day but one shall be Sunday, and then on the Monday following, when he shall openly break the seals thereon, and cast up the number of votes as they appear on the said several books, and shall openly declare the state of the poll, and shall make proclamation of the person chosen, not later than two of the clock in the afternoon of the said day.

16. Expenses of sheriff, &c. to be paid by the candidates.—And be it enacted, That all the reasonable costs, charges, and expenses which the said sheriff, or his under-sheriff or other deputy, shall expend or be liable to in and about the providing of poll books, booths, and clerks (such clerks to be paid not more than one guinea each for each day), for the purpose of taking the poll at any such election, shall be borne and paid by the several candidates at such election in equal proportions.

17. Coroners may compel attendance of jurors and witnesses. Coroner to certify defaulters to the clerk of the peace; who shall enter them on the roll of fines. Proviso.—And whereas great difficulty and delay are frequently occasioned by the nonattendance of jurors and witnesses summoned to attend the coroner on taking an inquest; be it therefore enacted, That if any person, having been duly summoned as a juror or witness to give evidence upon any coroner's inquest, as well of liberties and franchises contributing to the county rates, as of counties, cities, and boroughs, shall not, after being openly called three times, appear and serve as such juror, or appear and give evidence on such inquest, every such coroner shall be empowered to impose such fine upon every person so making default as he shall think fit, not exceeding forty shillings; and every such coroner shall make out and sign a certificate, containing the name and surname, the residence, and trade or calling of every such person so making default, together with the amount of the fine imposed, and the cause of such fine, and shall transmit such certificate to the clerk of the peace for the county, riding, division, or place in which such defaulter shall reside, on or before the first day of the quarter session of the peace then next ensuing, and shall cause a copy of such certificate to be served upon the person so fined, by leaving it at his residence twenty-four hours at the least before the first day of the said next quarter session of the peace; and every such clerk of the peace shall copy the fine or fines so certified on the roll on which all fines and forfeitures imposed at such quarter session of the peace shall be copied, and the same shall be estreated, levied, and applied in like manner, and subject to the like powers, provisions, and penalties in all respects, as if such fine or fines had been part of the fines imposed at such quarter session: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect any power now by law vested in the coroner for compelling any person to appear and give evidence before him on any inquest or other proceeding, or for punishing any person for contempt of court in not so appearing and giving evidence, or otherwise.

18. Coroner not to act professionally in prosecutions where he shall have sat as coroner in the same case.—And be it enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, in all cases in which any person shall be charged by any coroner's inquisition with the commission of any crime, and shall be subsequently put upon his trial, either on such inquisition, or in pursuance of any bill of indictment found for the same, the coroner before whom such inquisition shall have been found shall be wholly incompetent to act as an attorney in prosecution or defence of such person for such crime, either by himself or his partner (directly or indirectly); and that in all cases in which it shall appear to the judge before whom such person shall be tried that any coroner shall have so acted contrary to the provision and intention of this Act, such judge shall impose upon every coroner so offending such penalty, not exceeding fifty pounds, as the said judge shall in his discretion think fit.

19. Coroner, although elected for a district, shall be considered as coroner for the whole county, except, &c.—And be it enacted, That every coroner elected under the authority of this Act, although such coroner may be designated as the coroner for any particular district of a county, and may be elected by the electors of such district, and not by the freeholders of the county at large, shall for all purposes whatsoever, except as hereinafter mentioned, be considered as a coroner for the whole county, and shall have the same jurisdiction, rights, powers, and authorities throughout the said county as if he had been elected one of the coroners of the said county by the freeholders of the county at large.

20. Present and future coroners (except during illness, &c. of coroner for another district, or in case of vacancy in the office), to hold inquests only within the district to which they shall have been assigned or elected.—And be it enacted, That, except as aforesaid, every coroner for any county, or any district thereof, or his deputy, after he shall, in pursuance of the provisions of this Act, have been assigned to or elected by the electors of any particular district, shall, except during illness or incapacity or unavoidable absence as aforesaid of any coroner for any other district, or during a vacancy in the office of coroner for any other district, hold inquests only within the district to or for which he shall have been assigned or elected: provided always, that the coroner who shall, by himself or deputy hold any inquest in any other district, save that to which he shall have been assigned or elected as aforesaid, shall, in his inquisition to be returned on such inquest, certify the cause of his attendance and holding such inquest; which certificate shall be conclusive evidence of the illness or incapacity or unavoidable absence as aforesaid of the coroner in whose stead he shall so attend, or of there being a vacancy in the office of coroner for the district in which such inquest shall be holden.

21. Coroners to be paid travelling expenses where inquisition shall not be taken.—And whereas doubts have arisen as to the power of the justices to order the payment of allowances for travelling in any case where an inquisition has not been taken, although such coroner has been compelled to travel from his usual place of abode for the purpose of taking an inquisition; be it therefore enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the justices of the peace in their general or quarter sessions assembled for the county, riding, division, or liberty where such inquisition would have been taken, or the major part of them, if they shall see fit, to order the payment of such allowances for travelling to any coroner who shall shew, to the satisfaction of the said justices, that he had been compelled, in the discharge of his office, to travel from his usual place of abode for the purpose of taking an inquisition, but which, in the exercise of his discretion, he deemed to be unnecessary, and declined to take.

22. Coroners to be paid when they act for sheriffs.—And whereas, in cases where the sheriff is a party, or otherwise disqualified to act, and in various other cases, writs and processes in civil actions and suits, and also extents and other process where the Queen is interested, are frequently directed to and executed by the coroner in the place and stead of the sheriff, but the coroner is not in any such case allowed any fee or reward for the execution of any such writs, process, or extents; be it therefore enacted, That in all cases where any writ, process, or extent whatsoever shall be directed to and executed by any coroner or coroners in the place or stead of any sheriff or sheriffs, such coroner or coroners shall have and receive such and the same poundage fees or other compensation or reward for executing the same as the sheriff or sheriffs, if he or they had executed the same, would have been entitled to receive for so doing, and shall also have such and the same right to retain, and all other remedies for the recovery of the same, as the sheriff or sheriffs would have had in whose place and stead such coroner or coroners shall have been substituted; and if the fees or compensation payable to the sheriffs shall at any time after the passing of this Act be increased by Act of Parliament or otherwise, that in every such case the coroner or coroners shall be entitled to such increased fees or compensation.

23. Coroners for detached places to continue to hold inquests. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 12.—And whereas by an Act passed in the sixth year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled "An Act for the more convenient holding of Coroners' Inquests," it was enacted, that for the purpose of holding coroners' inquests every detached part of a county, riding, or division shall be deemed to be within that county, riding, or division by which it is wholly surrounded, or where it is partly surrounded by two or more counties, within that one with which it has the longest common boundary; and whereas as to some such detached parts of counties, ridings, or divisions there were at the time of the passing of the last-mentioned Act coroners appointed expressly for and having jurisdiction in such detached parts only, and doubts have arisen whether such last-mentioned coroners were superseded by such last-mentioned Act: be it therefore enacted, That as to every such detached part of any county for which at the time of the passing of the said last-mentioned Act there was a coroner appointed for and acting in such detached part, such last-mentioned coroner shall (if now living, and not having resigned, or been removed from his office otherwise than by the operation of the said Act) continue to hold and exercise his former office and jurisdiction within such detached part for so long a time and in such manner as such coroner would have held and exercised the said office and jurisdiction if the said last-mentioned Act had not passed.

24. Expenses of inquests occasioned to any county with respect to any detached part of any other county.—And be it enacted, That the treasurer of every county shall keep an account of all expenses occasioned to such county by any inquest in or with respect to any such detached part of any other county, and shall twice in every year send a copy of such account to the treasurer of the other county to which such detached part belongs; and the treasurer of such other county shall, out of the moneys in his hands as treasurer, pay the same to the order of the treasurer sending the account, with all reasonable charges of making and sending the account; and in case any difference shall arise concerning the said account, and such difference shall not be adjusted by agreement, it shall be lawful for either of the parties to apply to the justices of assize of the last preceding circuit or of the next succeeding circuit, or to one of such justices, who shall, by writing under their or his hands or hand, nominate a barrister-at-law, not having any interest in the question, to arbitrate between the parties; and such arbitrator may, if he shall see fit, adjourn the hearing from time to time, and require all such further information to be afforded by either of the parties as shall appear to him necessary and shall by his award in writing, determine the matters in difference, and his award shall be final and conclusive between the parties; and such arbitrator shall also assess the costs of the arbitration, and shall direct by whom and out of what fund the same shall be paid.

25. Coroners for particular places excepted out of this Act.—And be it enacted, That no coroner of the Queen's household and the verge of the Queen's palaces, nor any coroner of the Admiralty, nor any coroner of the city of London and borough of Southwark, or of any franchises belonging to the said city, nor any coroner of any city, borough, town, liberty, or franchise which is not contributory to the county rates, or within which such rates have not been usually assessed, shall be entitled to any fee, recompense, or benefit given to or provided for coroners by this Act; but that it shall be lawful for all such coroners as are last-mentioned to have and receive all such fees, salaries, wages, and allowances as they were entitled to by law before the making of this Act, or as shall be given or allowed to them by the person or persons by whom they have been or shall be appointed.

26. Provisions of Act as to expenses to extend to the Cinque Ports.—And be it enacted, That the provisions of this Act touching the allowance for the travelling expenses of coroners shall be deemed and taken to extend to coroners appointed and acting for the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports, any thing hereinbefore contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

27. To what places this Act shall not extend.—And be it enacted, That nothing in this Act contained touching the divisions of counties into districts, or the appointment or election of coroners, shall extend to the county of Chester, or any county palatine, city, borough, town, liberty, franchise, part, or place the appointment or election of coroner whereof takes place by law otherwise than under the writ de coronatore eligendo.

28. Meaning of "county."—And be it enacted, That in construing this Act the word "county" shall be taken to mean county, riding, or division of a county in and for which a separate coroner hath been customarily elected; and that in the counties of York and Lincoln all things hereinbefore directed to be done by and with respect to the justices in general or quarter sessions assembled, and by their clerk, shall be done by and with respect to the justices of the said counties of York and Lincoln in general gaol sessions assembled, and by their clerk.

29. Not to affect the royal prerogative.—Provided always, and be it declared and enacted, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to abridge or affect the royal prerogative, or the authority of the Lord Chancellor, for issuing a writ de coronatore eligendo, as fully as if this Act had not been passed.

30. Act to extend only to England.—And be it enacted, That this Act shall extend only to England.

31. Act may be amended this session.—And be it enacted, That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed during the present session of Parliament.

CAP. XCIII.

An Act to enable Barristers appointed to arbitrate between Counties and Boroughs to submit a Special Case to the Superior Courts. (Aug. 9, 1844.)

We give this statute entire :—

5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98. Arbitrating barrister, upon receiving a requisition in writing from treasurer of the county or visiting justices of the prison, &c. may state a special case, touching any matter referred to him, for the opinion of a superior court.—Whereas by an Act passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act to provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," and by another Act passed in the sixth year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend the Law concerning Prisons," provision was made for the appointment of barristers at law to arbitrate in cases of difference concerning certain accounts and the amounts of certain expenses therein mentioned: And whereas it is expedient that the treasurer of the county, the visiting justices of the prison, and the council of the borough, or any of them, affected by any award which may be made by any barrister under the authority of either of the said Acts, should be enabled to obtain in a summary way the opinion of one of the superior courts of common law at Westminster upon any point of law arising out of any of the matters referred to such barrister: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that in any case in which a barrister at law shall have been or shall hereafter be named, as in the said recited Acts or either of them is mentioned, to arbitrate between the parties, such barrister at law, upon the requisition in writing of the treasurer of the county, or of the visiting justices of the prison, or of the town clerk of the borough, on behalf of the council of the borough who shall be interested in the decision of such barrister, shall be empowered, if he shall think fit, before making his award, to state one or more special case or cases touching any of the matters referred to such barrister at law for the opinion of such one of the superior courts of common law at Westminster as he shall direct, or to raise in any award to be at any time made by him any question or questions for the opinion of such court; and such court shall hear and determine the matter according to the practice of the court upon special cases, and make such order as to the costs, and by and to whom and in what manner the same shall be paid or borne, as to such court shall seem meet, and the decision of the court shall be binding on such barrister in making his award.

2. In case barrister die before making his award another one to be chosen.—And be it declared and enacted, That in case any barrister who shall have been or shall hereafter be named, in pursuance of the said recited Acts or either of them, or of this Act, shall die, or refuse to act, or be disabled from acting, either from ceasing to practice as a barrister or for any other reason, before making his award, the several parties in the said several Acts mentioned shall be authorized and required to name another barrister at law for all the purposes in the said several Acts mentioned, or any of them, in like manner as if no appointment had been made under the same; and the barrister so newly named shall have the same authority to decide the matters in difference as if no other appointment had been made, and in every such case in which, before the passing of this Act, a second barrister has been appointed to settle or determine any matters in difference, left unsettled or undetermined by the barrister first appointed for that purpose, the appointment of such second barrister shall be deemed good, and the barrister so secondly appointed shall be deemed to have and to have had from his appointment the same authority as if appointed under this Act.

CAP. XCIV.

An Act to explain and amend an Act for making better Provision for the Spiritual Care of populous Parishes. (August 9, 1844.)

We give this statute entire :—

1. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37. Crown may nominate ministers by warrant under sign manual.—Whereas an Act was passed in the last session of Parliament, intituled "An Act to make better Provision for the Spiritual Care of populous Parishes;" and it is expedient to explain and amend certain of the provisions of the said Act; Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That wherever any right of patronage of any district or new parish constituted under the authority of the said Act, and nomination of the minister or perpetual curate thereof, shall be assigned to or vested in or may be exercised by her Majesty, according to or under the provisions of the same Act, it shall be lawful for her Majesty to nominate to the bishop of the diocese a spiritual person to be licensed to such district or new parish as minister or perpetual curate thereof, as the case may be, by warrant under her royal sign manual; and such warrant shall be full and sufficient authority to such bishop to license such spiritual person accordingly.

2. Bishop may license, as to any existing perpetual curacy.—And be it declared and enacted, That wherever any right of patronage of any such district or new parish shall in like manner be assigned to or vested in or may be exercised by any bishop, it shall be lawful for such bishop to license a spiritual person to such district or new parish as minister or perpetual curate thereof, as the case may be, in the same manner, mutatis mutandis, as he may now by law license a spiritual person to any perpetual curacy.

3. Warrant without fee—Fee for license.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That no fee whatever shall be payable for or in respect of any such warrant as aforesaid; and that a fee of one pound, and no more, shall be receivable by the secretary of any bishop for and in respect of each and every license granted by such bishop of a spiritual person as minister or perpetual curate of any such district or new parish as aforesaid, or of any building licensed by such bishop within any such district for the performance of divine service, pursuant to the provisions of the said Act; and no further or larger fee or gratuity shall be receivable by any person whomsoever for or in respect of the making, issuing, or granting of any such license as aforesaid.

4. How scheme to be served where incumbent or patron absent from England.—And be it declared and enacted, That wherever any incumbent or patron to whom, according to the provisions of the said recited Act, it shall be necessary to transmit or deliver the draft of any scheme proposed to be laid before her Majesty in Council, shall be beyond the seas, it shall be and be deemed to be a sufficient compliance with such provisions to leave such draft, in the case of an incumbent, at the house of residence belonging to his benefice or church, or if there be no such house of residence then at his last usual place of abode in England, and in the case of a patron at his last usual place of abode in England: Provided always, that in any such case of an absent incumbent or patron such scheme shall not be laid before her Majesty in Council until after the expiration of two calendar months from the day on which the draft thereof shall have been so left, unless such incumbent and patron shall in the meantime consent to the same.

5. How where incumbent incapacitated or benefice sequestered.—And be it declared and enacted, That in the case of any such incumbent being an idiot or lunatic or of unsound mind, or of any benefice or church being under sequestration, or of the duties thereof being performed by a curate duly appointed in consequence of the suspension or the reputed incapacity of the incumbent thereof, it shall be and be deemed to be a sufficient compliance with the same provisions to deliver or transmit the draft of any such scheme to the committee of such idiot, lunatic, or person of unsound mind, or to the sequestrator, or to such curate of such benefice or church, as the case may be; and the consent of such committee, sequestrator, or curate shall be deemed to be the consent of the incumbent, within the meaning of the said Act.

6. How where patrons numerous.—And be it declared and enacted, That in any case in which the patronage of any church or chapel of any parish, chapelry, or district is or shall be vested in and exercised by the inhabitants generally of such parish, chapelry, or district, or by any body or class of persons exceeding five in number, it shall be and be deemed to be a sufficient compliance with the same provisions to deliver or transmit the draft of any such scheme to one of such patrons, and to the churchwardens or chapelwardens of any such church or chapel, as the case may be; and such churchwardens or chapelwardens, or one of them, shall thereupon cause notice of the contents of such draft to be given to such patrons, and shall ascertain their objections, if any, or their consent to such scheme, in such manner as the ecclesiastical commissioners for England shall direct, and such churchwardens or chapelwardens, or one of them, shall communicate the same to the said commissioners or to the bishop of the diocese; and the said commissioners shall not lay such scheme before her Majesty in Council untill after the expiration of two calendar months from the day on which such draft shall have been so delivered or transmitted, unless such consent shall in the meantime be given.

7. Construction of certain terms in 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37.—And be it declared and enacted, That in the construction of the said recited Act the words "Goods and Chattels" shall be construed to extend to and comprehend all personal estate and property whatsoever; and the word "Testament" shall be construed to extend to and comprehend any will or testamentary paper whatsoever, including under such definition the execution by any such will, testament, or testamentary paper of any appointment, in pursuance of any power, howsoever conferred or acquired.

8. Original map or plan may be registered.—And be it declared and enacted, That, notwithstanding any thing in the said recited Act contained, it shall be lawful to transmit the original map or plan annexed to any scheme laid before her Majesty in Council under the provisions of the said recited Act, to be registered in the registry of the diocese, instead of a copy thereof, as provided by the same Act.

9. Bounds of districts may be varied within limited time.—And be it declared and enacted, That it shall be lawful, by the authority in the said recited Act provided, at any time or times within twelve months after the date of the licence of the minister first licensed to any separate district constituted under the provisions of the same Act, to alter the bounds of such district, although any alteration be not required with a view to the constituting of another separate district: provided always, that the scheme for making any such alteration shall be subject to all the provisions in the same Act and in this Act contained relating to schemes for constituting separate districts thereunder; and that any portion of any such separate district which by any such alteration as aforesaid shall become detached or excluded therefrom shall to all intents and purposes again belong to and form part of the parish, chapelry, or district out of which such portion was taken, upon such separate district being originally constituted, or to and of any new district, as shall be determined by the like authority.

10. Until minister licensed, cure of souls not affected.—And be it declared and enacted, That in the case of any district constituted under the provisions of the said recited Act, nothing contained in the scheme or order for constituting the same shall in any manner whatever affect any parish, chapelry, or district, as to the pastoral superintence of the inhabitants thereof or otherwise, until a minister shall have been duly licensed to such newly constituted district.

11. Form of grant or conveyance.—And be it enacted, That any grant, conveyance, or assurance which shall be made to the said commissioners by deed, under the authority of the said recited Act, of any lands, tithes, tenements, or other hereditaments, may be made according to the form in the schedule hereunto annexed contained, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit; and every such conveyance and assurance shall be valid and effectual in the law to all intents and purposes.

12. Act may be altered this session.—And be it enacted, That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed during this present session of Parliament.

SCHEDULE.

I [or We, or the corporate title, if a corporation], under the authority of Acts passed in the sessions of Parliament held in the sixth and seventh and seventh and eighth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled respectively, "An Act to make better Provision for the Spiritual Care of populous parishes," and "An Act to explain and amend an Act to make better Provision for the Spiritual Care of populous Parishes," do by these presents freely and voluntarily, and without any valuable consideration, give, grant, convey, and assure to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England all [describe the premises to be conveyed], and all [my, or our, or the] right, title, and interest [of, if a corporation,] to and in the same and every part thereof, to hold to the said commissioners and their successors for the purpose of [describe the particular purpose, being some purpose within the provisions of the said Acts, or say, generally, for the purposes of the said Acts]. In witness whereof, &c.

CAP. XCVII.

An Act for the more effectual Application of Charitable Donations and Bequests in Ireland. (August 9, 1844.)

BREWERS, VICTUALLERS, AND BEERSHOP-KEEPERS.—It appears from a Parliamentary document, that on the 10th of October last there were 2,644 brewers in the United Kingdom, of which number 2,318 were in England, 188 in Scotland, and 138 in Ireland. There were at the same period 86,973 victuallers in the United Kingdom, of whom 57,698 resided in England, 15,449 in Scotland, and 13,826 in Ireland. In England there were 31,227 persons licensed to sell beer to be drunk on the premises, and 4,252 persons licensed to sell beer not to be consumed on the premises; there were 27,609 victuallers who brewed their own beer, and nearly 14,000 beershop-keepers who also brewed their beer.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

We continue to receive opinions and suggestions upon the proposed changes in the Law of Settlement and the Bill for regulating the fees of Justices' Clerks. To all such communications we gladly give place, trusting that, as coming from practical and experienced men, they will receive due consideration from the framers and proposers of the measures in question. Again, we would ask our readers to give their special attention to the extremely sound and sensible comments upon Mr. Fitzroy Kelly's Criminal Appeal Bill, which appeared last week, and which was the production of a learned counsel of extensive experience in the practice of the criminal law. We are confident that many of the suggestions there contained have but to be submitted to Parliament to be adopted.

POOR LAW SETTLEMENT BILL.

(Conclusion.)

6. MAINTENANCE AND COSTS.

Section 26 replaces the present law as to the costs of the pauper's maintenance after notice of removal.

Numerous difficulties have arisen as to the recovery of costs in cases of abandoned orders of removal, and which the Court of Queen's Bench has frequently decided can only be recovered by appeal where the parties cannot agree upon the amount to be paid by the abandoning parish.(a) This is provided against by the 17th section, as far as abandoned orders are concerned, that section providing that—

"The overseers abandoning such warrant shall pay to the overseers of the parish to which the removal was thereby directed to be made, the costs incurred by such last-mentioned overseers by reason of such warrant, and of all subsequent proceedings thereon; and if such last-mentioned overseers apply to the proper officer of the court before whom any appeal against such warrant, if it had not been abandoned, might have been brought, and if they produce to him the notice of such abandonment, and if they satisfy him that such reasonable notice of taxation has been given to the overseers abandoning such warrant as in his judgment the distance between the parishes requires such officer shall tax such costs; and may thereupon charge and receive the usual costs of taxation; and shall indorse the sum allowed by him as costs, and the amount of the said costs of taxation, upon the notice of abandonment; and if such costs, being lawfully demanded, be not paid within ten days after taxation, the overseers entitled to the same may recover them as penalties and forfeitures."

This is as it should be: it will save a great deal of trouble, cost, and difficulty. A similar taxation and allowance of costs is provided by sections 24 and 25, where appeals are abandoned, as well as when heard and decided against the appellants. The following is also worthy of commendation:—

"If either of the parties have included in their respective statements any grounds of removal or of appeal which, in the opinion of the Court determining such appeal, are frivolous or vexatious, such Court may, at their discretion, direct such party to pay the whole or any part of the costs incurred by the other party in disputing any such grounds, and shall certify the amount thereof."

It is also properly provided that where overseers give notice

"That they abandon such warrant, then such warrant, and all proceedings consequent thereon, shall not be given in evidence in case any warrant be afterwards obtained for the removal of any person shall become and be null and void to all intents and purposes, as if the same had not been made; and who may have been affected by such first-mentioned warrant."

7. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

The Bill provides that boards of guardians shall have the power of obtaining warrants of removal and of executing them. (See section 34.)

Paid officers may be appointed to conduct removals.

By section 28, natives of Scotland, Ireland, and the islands of Man, Scilly, Jersey, and Guernsey, not settled in England, may be removed to the places of their birth; and guardians of unions in Ireland, and the heritors and kirk session or borough magistrates in Scotland, may appeal against such warrants. Removing parishes may abandon warrants on payment of all costs incurred, including those of sending the paupers back to such parishes.

We have now completed our sketch of the leading provisions of the Bill for altering the entire system of settlements. That there are great evils in the complexity and uncertainty of the existing law, we fully admit; that a large, simple, and well-considered system might be profitably substituted for it (were it practicable to carry out a centralized power without awakening just jealousies), we acknowledge. But this measure has all the audacity of innovation, with little of the benefit of amendment. Some advantages are introduced by the Bill, but these might have been equally secured without the bold and sweeping changes whereby existing practice and law must be wholly unhinged, if this measure passes.

One of the most sweeping of these changes is that which it is attempted to effect by the proviso in section 23:

"That on the trial of any such appeal no warrant of removal shall be quashed or set aside, either wholly or in part, on the ground that such depositions do not furnish sufficient evidence to support, or that any matter therein contained raises an objection to the warrant or the statement of the grounds of removal."

In cursorily noticing this clause last fortnight, we stated that this provision is utterly inconsistent with existing law, and in fact prevents all objection to warrants of removal because made on insufficient evidence. Section 12 alone provides that "a statement of the grounds upon which the warrant was made" shall be sent to the receiving parish; these may be drawn up without disclosing the evidence at all, as is required by section 79 of the present Act. The depositions alone shew what the evidence was: they are by section 18 of this bill to be sent to the clerk of the peace; and form the only record of the evidence on which the warrant was made; and then comes the above-cited proviso in section 23 of this Bill, declaring that no warrant shall be quashed upon the ground that such depositions do not furnish sufficient evidence to support the warrant! It must, therefore, follow, that removals may be made without any sufficient evidence. It will not matter how absurdly slight, how obviously illegal, be the evidence given to the justices; the warrant once given, the opposite party has no other resource than that of obtaining positive evidence to contradict the case thus vamped up against them, or to submit to the burden of the pauper with the best grace they can. The universal rule of all law and all justice has been from time immemorial that a charge shall be proved by those who make it, and that the accuser shall not throw the task of disproving it upon the accused, without first substantiating it himself. Why is this rule to be set at defiance in favour of parishes who may choose to indulge in speculative removals at the expense of their neighbours? Let the authors of this vicious Bill answer this to the satisfaction of the ratepayers of England, before they proceed in this rash change of an old and complicated branch of law, with which (be they who they may) they have evinced gross incompetency to grapple. If no objection is to be made to insufficient evidence of settlements, insufficient evidence suffices for removals; this in effect is no evidence at all; and paupers may, if this Bill passes, be removed on a mere statement of a case, which affords no sufficient information as to dates or places, whereby the appellants may prepare themselves with counter evidence to rebut it; and in many cases it may be impossible to do so. But we denounce this provision mainly on the general ground of the gross injustice of imposing a charge without first proving the ground for doing so. The legislature has no right to permit it: the same doctrine may just as well be extended to other branches of jurisprudence; from which interminable and obvious injustice would follow.(b) But most of all is this the case where persons like country justices, who are not conversant with the rules of evidence, are thus made final judges of what evidence is. There is no doubt that this proviso will save some hundreds of pounds in appeals to the Queen's Bench, but at an expense of many thousands by unjust burdens. Upon the whole, we incline to regard this cool setting aside of all the rules of evidence as one of the most startling features of this audacious measure, more especially so, since it is introduced in direct disregard—we had nearly written in insolent defiance—of the well-known and recent judgment of the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, couched in these memorable words:—"We think we do a benefit to the public by declaring that, for the future, there must be no doubt that an order of removal is to be obtained ON LEGAL EVIDENCE.(c) "We think," say the concoctors of this Bill, "that we do a benefit to the public by declaring, that however illegal and insufficient be the evidence on which removals are obtained, no sort of objection shall be made to it." We may safely leave the rate-payers to choose between the comparative wisdom of the two authorities'

No provision is attempted to be made to prevent parishes like Hales Owen, which have been split up into separate townships, from ridding themselves of all their preceding liabilities of settlement, simply because the overseers of each township are not the overseers of the whole parish as in its former integrity. This is among the gross abuses of the present law to which this amending Bill applies no amendment, though the abuse will be just as much felt under its provisions.

Although we must guard against committing ourselves to any matured or decisive opinion upon so difficult a subject; and although we feel the necessity of eschewing the shallow precipitancy which characterizes this Bill and its authors; we are at present, upon the whole, inclined to question whether any large change in the existing law of settlement would prove substantially beneficial to the country, which failed to provide some system which should dispense entirely with the removal of paupers. We are disposed to think it possible that means might be devised for relieving paupers wherever they became chargeable, without disturbing the proportion of parish charges; saving the entire cost of removal, and much of the trouble and expense of appeals. However this may be, we feel no hesitation in denouncing the folly of a measure which, without pretending to substitute any large and uniform principle for the bundle of rules and laws in usage, and to which custom has given a facility of application, proposes to erect a new fabric, every atom as complicated as its predecessor, which, so far from removing old abuses and evils, leaves some of the worst in existence, and superadds pernicious novelties, which have no recommendation either for simplicity, economy, or justice! Some amendments the Bill does certainly introduce, and to each of these we have endeavoured to do justice in the course of the series of articles which this brings for the present to a conclusion.

(a) Reg. v. Pontefract (2 Gale & Dav. 180); Reg. v. Tounstall and Stayley (2 Gale & Dav. 676), &c.

(b) A contemporary journal, which seldom dives into parochial law, has actually stumbled upon this as an amendment.

(c) Reg. v. Rishworth (1 Gale & Dav. 597; 11 Law J. M.C. 34).

We earnestly recommend the measure to the sedulous, and mature consideration of the Profession; and especially of parochial authorities. The remarks we have made must be regarded more in the light of provocatives to further inquiry, than as clearing out the subject, or as having traced all the inconveniences and costly doubts and difficulties to which this measure will give rise. Let practical men apply themselves to this task. We have felt it a duty to say candidly and faithfully what our view is of this measure. We know not, and care not, who its authors are: that they are incompetent for the difficult and delicate task of remoulding the law of parochial settlements, we believe we have said and cited enough to demonstrate. We may add our belief that the measure does not emanate from the Poor Law Commissioners or their able secretary; though it may be a benefit to the country that they should turn to it their prompt consideration, for it will inevitably increase the difficulties of their office.

The spirit of meddling and officious legislation—the mania for altering and interfering with every relation of society and the laws which govern them, without any adequate benefit to compensate the evils of change, are becoming very great and serious grievances. Of such measures, reckless in destroying, without judgment in restoring, we have met with few stronger examples than "The Bill to amend and consolidate the Laws relating to Parochial Settlement and the Removal of the Poor."

Summary.

We lay before the Profession a long, but deeply interesting narrative of the recent discreditable revelations at the Central Criminal Court and Middlesex Sessions, which have occasioned so much excitement and just indignation in legal circles, and been so severely handled by the daily press. It is, we believe, unnecessary to offer any apology for occupying so much of our space with the circumstances of this affair, comprising the reports, the correspondence, and the commentaries thereupon, for since the establishment of the Law Times there has been no occurrence of equal interest and importance to the Profession, whether we look to the discussions or to the measures that must grow out of it. That something must be done by the authorities seems to be generally admitted, but great differences prevail as to the precise remedies to be adopted. In the consideration of these, the Law Times will endeavour faithfully to discharge its duty and to maintain the lofty standard of Professional integrity and honour which it has ever sought to set before its members. In doing this it will seek as far as possible to avoid personalities; but where an offence is clearly proved, painful though the duty will be, it will not shrink from the task of placing the offender upon the pillory, though rather as an example than for the sake of punishment.

The Title-page and the very elaborate Indices which have been prepared for the volume just completed, will unavoidably occupy a portion of our space for this and the two following weeks, and compel the curtailment of much of our usual legal intelligence. So abundant have been the events of the present year that concern the Profession, that even the vacation has scarcely sufficed to enable our ample space to keep pace with them.

We understand that the Legal Protective Association is growing in numbers, and that it has received the approval of some of the most influential members of the Profession.

Coleridge, J. considered the power to be well executed. After shewing that this conclusion was in accordance with common sense, statutory interpretation, judicial construction by our courts, and the reasonings of jurists on general principle, he proceeded to examine the decisions, which, he said, together with the 54 Geo. 3, c. 168, & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 10, had undoubtedly raised a general impression in the profession that in order to exercise a power securely, the attestation clause should state in terms the performance of all solemnities prescribed with regard to the execution of the instrument.

"The cases of Wright v. Wakeford, however, and of Doe dem. Mansfield v. Peach, may be said to be the foundation of the whole. it will therefore be worth while to see exactly what they decided. In the former, the deed was required to be 'under hand and seal, attested by two or more credible witnesses.' The attestation indorsed on the deed was 'sealed and delivered by the within-named —— in the presence of —— ——— ———.' The majority of the Court certified "that the word 'sealed' did not necessarily imply that the party sealing had also signed in the presence of the witnesses, that signature was not comprehended in the words made use of in the attestation." Doe dem. Mansfield v. Peach (2 M. & Sel. 576) cannot be distinguished from the preceding; and Lord Ellenborough said: "If the question be, whether it follows as a legal consequence that an attestation of the sealing and delivery of a deed is an attestation of the signing, we are bound to answer that it does not." Place by the side of these propositions that for which the defendants in error now contend, and see whether this foundation is at all co extensive with the superstructure. A power requires that a deed in exercise of it shall be under hand and seal, attested by two witnesses; the witnesses in the attestation clause say that they saw it sealed and delivered; the Court concludes that these words do not import they saw it signed. Whether from that conclusion, which in itself was unobjectionable, they ought to have inferred a bad execution of the power, is not at this moment the question, but the conclusion itself was merely one of verbal construction The proposition now contended for as necessarily flowing from this—so necessarily that it binds us against our sense of propriety and justice—is this, that an attestation clause must in terms express every formality prescribed in the execution by the power. This last may be a conclusion to be worked out from the former; it may be said that attestation means attestation clause, and attestation of certain things means an attestation clause stating in terms expressly their performance: all this may be very reasonable inference, but it has not been inferred in those cases by the judges who decided them. It is not a necessary inference, nor can I find that in any one of the decisions cited in the various arguments of this case the Court has ever in terms drawn this inference. It cannot, I am sure, escape your lordships that the answer to your present question turns upon a consideration which does not appear to have been presented to the minds of those very learned judges. There must be an attestation of all the formalities required, this I can afford to grant: the performance of the formalities must appear from the attestation clause; I can afford to grant this also: if the clause in terms states the performance of one or more, and is silent as to others, the analogy of legal reasoning will infer the non-performance of these others in the presence of the witnesses; it is as much as if they had said, 'We can only say we saw the deed sealed and delivered; as to the signing we can say nothing—we did not see it done;' this, too, I can afford to concede. But, what is the meaning of a general attestation clause that condescends upon no particulars? Whether if by the last words of the instrument the party professes to perform all the particulars required for a due execution, the witness, by such general attestation, does or does not import an attesting of them all. These are questions wholly distinct from the former, and which the two cases above cited leave wholly undecided."

The learned judge then argued that the certificate of Lord Chief Justice Gibbs in Moodie v. Reid (7 Taunt. 361) was in reality in favour of the sufficiency of this execution. The will was to be "signed and published," it only stated "signed by me," &c. The attestation clause was "witness B. H., J. H." The power was certified to be not well executed. But Gibbs, C. J. said—"The witnesses have clearly attested the signing." But said Coleridge, J.—How was it an attestation to that and not to publication—

"Not by its expression of it in terms, but only because, being entirely general, it was to be referred to that act which was stated in the close of the will by the testatrix herself. If in that part of the will she had said, 'signed and published,' instead of 'signed' only, must not Lord Chief Justice Gibbs have held that the witnesses had attested both, and that the power was well executed? I see no escape from this conclusion; and that is this very case. It is clear, then, that he did not draw the inference from Wright v. Wakeford which is now pressed on us; and his high authority is in my favour. But, was he warranted in holding that opinion? A power requires certain things to be done and attested by witnesses; the donee in terms states that she has performed them; and, so far as they can be shewn on the face of the instrument, they appear to have been performed: immediately under is the word "witness," and the witnesses sign their names. It cannot be denied that they state themselves to be witnesses: but witnesses of what? Will you say of nothing? Is not that unreasonable, unauthorized? Is it not at least to construe an ambiguous act so as to invalidate an instrument, when legal principle enjoins you to construe it so as to make it valid? If you admit that they witness something, why one act more than another? why not all? I agree that powers are to be strictly performed; but the reasoning by which we are to determine the question of a disputed performance is to be the same in kind as that by which we determine any other disputed question of fact or construction in law. It will be said, that, where the instrument must be, and on the face of it professes to have been, executed with several specified formalities, and the attestation is general, it is left uncertain whether the witnesses attested all, and, if not all, which of those formalities, and therefore is defective. I think, if sifted a little, this argument will be found based on premises which have no place properly in the discussion. If you read what is called the testimonium clause with the attestation, there is no uncertainty: then, the conclusion is clear, that the latter imports a presence at and a witnessing of the whole. But it is said, you cannot do this, because witnesses commonly do not see or do not regard what is stated in the testimonium clause I deny that you can enter into that consideration. If you could, how far might it not go? Witnesses very commonly do not even read the attestation clause; are we to inquire in each particular case whether they have done so! In truth, determining this as a question of law, we are to consider, not what witnesses do, but what they ought to do: when the creator of a power requires that witnesses shall attest certain acts as a security for their performance, we must assume him to proceed on the footing that the witnesses will discharge their duty properly; otherwise the whole provision is futile. Then, what is the duty of a witness? Not to sign his name to he knows not what: he must be aware that he is called to see something done, and to affirm by his signature that he has seen it. Surely, then, he is to ascertain what it is that he is required to see and to affirm: if so, it seems to me a most reasonable presumption, that, where the attestation is general, and in terms excludes nothing, it makes no selection by inference, but affirmatively includes every thing stated in the testimonium clause; there is then no uncertainty. In Stanhope v. Keir (2 Sim. & Stu. 37), and Buller v. Burt, Sir John Leach appears to have entertained the same opinion."

Williams, J. gave his opinion in favour of the due execution of the power.

Gurney, J. considered that it would in any case be well to overrule Wright v. Wakeford, and quoted at length from Sir Edward Sugden's work on Powers, p. 317, et seq.

Patteson, J. gave his opinion as follows, that the power was not well executed:—

"My Lords, The power set forth in the special verdict referred to by your lordships in these cases, requires that any will by which it is to be exercised shall be 'signed, sealed, and published in the presence of and attested by three or more credible witnesses.' The first question which arises appears to me to be, what is the meaning of the word 'attested?' Now, the fair meaning of the previous words, 'in the presence of three or more credible witnesses,' must be, that three or more credible persons should see what is done, not merely that they should be present, without having their attention drawn to what is done; therefore, the word 'attested,' if it have any meaning at all, must import something more than merely being present and seeing what is done. Independent of authority, I should have thought that it meant this, and no more, namely, that the will must not only be signed, sealed, and published in the presence of witnesses, but that those witnesses must affix their names to it. I find, however, that a sense has been given to the word 'attest,' when found in a power, in a long series of decisions, from Wright v. Wakeford (4 Taunt. 213), downwards, by a great number of eminent judges, according to all which, without exception, as I understand them, the word 'attest' means 'certify by their signature, and by written expressions, that the formalities required by the power have been complied with,' or to that effect. The authority of those decisions appears to me to be much too strong to be resisted; and I agree that it would be very dangerous, especially in matters regarding real property, to unsettle established rules, on which probably many titles may depend. Some of those decisions are undoubtedly in cases where the memorandum of attestation has stated some of the requisite formalities and omitted others; and those cases might have been decided on the ground that 'expressio unius est exclusio alterius;' but I do not find that such ground was taken in them; and in some other cases it could not have been taken, because the memorandum was general. I am obliged, therefore, to come to the conclusion, that, if the memorandum of attestation is in this case to be considered as consisting of the words 'Witness, Charles Ball, Elizabeth Ball, Ann Ball,' and no more, this will is not attested at all within the meaning of the power. The second question which arises is, whether any and what part of the body of the will itself is to be considered as forming part of the memorandum of attestation. I have great [illegible] that any part of the body of the will can be so considered. The language of the body of a will is that of the testator, and not of the witnesses, who need not, and in practice do not in general, see or read any part of the will, the language of a memorandum of attestation, on the other hand, is that of the witnesses; and I am at a loss to see how one can fairly be taken as incorporated with the other. In the case of Moodie v. Reid (7 Taunt. 355), the Court of Common Pleas seemed to consider that the concluding part of the will, or at all events the signature, might be taken as part of the memorandum of attestation (which was, as here, quite general, being only the word 'witness'); but they did not determine that point, for they held the will insufficient because the publication was not attested. So also in Stanhope v. Kerr (2 Sim. & Stu. 37), Sir John Leach, Master of the Rolls, said that he could not take the attestation, which was merely by the words 'in the presence of,' to extend [illegible] than the signing; but he held the will bad, and therefore did not determine the present point. Why it might extend to the signing, and not to the publication, the Master of the Rolls does not explain, nor did the Court of Common Pleas in the case of Moodie v. Reid, and I confess it appears to me that such a distinction is entirely without foundation, and was plainly unnecessary to the decision of either of the cases. So, again, the same learned judge, in Butler v. Reed, expressed himself still more strongly; but [illegible] he held the execution bad in that case also, the present point was not determined. I have not been able to find one case in which it has been held affirmatively that any part of the body of an instrument can be imported into the memorandum of attestation, so as to shew, and to make the witnesses certify in writing, what it is which they profess to attest. Neither do I find the contrary expressly decided anywhere; and I do not think that the cases of Wright v. Wakeford (4 Taunt. 213), Doe dem. Mansfield v. Peach (2 M. & Sel. [illegible]); Wright v. Barlow (3 M. & Sel. 512); Brougham v. Sandys (2 Simons, 95); Allen v. Bradshawe (Curteis, 110), and some similar cases, even impliedly decide the point; for, in those cases the maxim of expressio unius est exclusio alterius seems to me to apply, and to prevent the importing the words of the party executing the instrument into the memorandum of attestation, and adding them to the words of the witnesses there used. The recent cases of Simon v. Simeon (4 Simons, 555) and Curtis v. Kenrick (3 M. & W. 461), and similar cases, where equivalent words used in a memorandum of attestation have been held sufficient, do not appear to me to bear upon this question. In ancient times, no doubt, the clause of his testibus was part of the instrument, and the names of the witnesses were inscribed in it: and, when the names of the witnesses came to be put at the bottom of the instrument itself, they might, for many purposes, be considered still as part of the instrument. But, when a power requires that the instrument should be attested—assuming that the construction of that word which I have before stated is the right one—it appears to me, in the absence of any direct authority, that the instrument itself and the memorandum of attestation ought to be considered as quite distinct from each other, and as being the acts and the language of different parties; that the memorandum of attestation ought to be complete in itself; and that any omission or defect in it cannot be supplied or cured by reference to the instrument. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the power in this case was not duly and effectually executed by the will."

PARKE, B. concurred in this view, and referred to his former judgment (9 Ad. & El. 940) for the grounds of his opinion, admitting, however, that had the question been res integra, or a writ of error, in Wright v. Wakeford, he should have come to a different conclusion. He informed their lordships that Alderson, B. also adhered to his former opinion.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

IRREGULAR PRACTICES.

Being loath to publish a serious accusation until an opportunity was given for accompanying it with explanation or defence, we have deemed it right to defer the narrative of the case which has so greatly interested the Profession, and even been made the subject of public discussion, until we could give with it the correspondence that has grown out of it. We now present a report of the entire proceedings, to the present moment, with the letters and some of the comments that have appeared in the daily papers.

First, take the report of the fracas at the Central Criminal Court from the Morning Chronicle:—

"In the course of the session just concluded, the attention of the commissioners of the court and the influential members of the Bar was again called to the [illegible] practices which [illegible] 'getting up' [illegible] defences and [illegible]. On several previous occasions the censure of the commissioners has fallen on parties pretending to be attorneys, who have obtained introduction either to prisoners or their friends, and taken money under pretence of feeing counsel and preparing briefs. Sometimes the parties who have so obtained the money have decamped, or at least kept out of the way until all fear of detection had ceased, and the unfortunate prisoners have remained [illegible] by counsel. At other times, the [illegible] obtained the aid of junior members of the Bar [illegible] them to set up defences—[illegible] which has called down [illegible] from the Bench, as the readers [illegible] have more than once observed.

"During the [illegible] and the [illegible] about to terminate [illegible] have been made by the sheriffs and under-sheriffs to put a stop to these practices, and prevent [illegible] persons from obtaining access to the gaol of Newgate, and consequently fewer instances than heretofore of plundering prisoners have occurred during the last ten months.

"In the case to which we are about to refer, an irregularity of another description was developed, regarding the reception of instructions by counsel for prosecutions without the intervention of attorneys [illegible].

"The case [illegible] and was tried in the evening [illegible].

"William Pond, an auctioneer [illegible] and two other young men, [illegible] indicted for stealing various articles of furniture [illegible] small value, from Mr. Stewart, an auctioneer, at [illegible], whose employment Pond had been for some time.

"The prisoners surrendered in court to take their trial.

"Crouch conducted the prosecution, and Wilkins the defence.

"The prosecutor having given his evidence in chief, was cross-examined by Wilkins, who asked him, among other questions, if he had employed an attorney? To which he replied, he had not. Wilkins inquired how it happened that he had a counsel employed, and how the counsel came to be instructed? The witness acknowledged that he had employed the counsel himself, and that he had himself instructed him.

The COMMON SERJEANT interposed, and asked how the prosecutor came to give instructions to counsel himself. It was so unusual a thing, so different from any thing to which he had been accustomed when at the Bar, that he should like to hear it explained.

"Mr. Stewart replied that, knowing Mr. Crouch personally, he had gone to him and told him he wished he would undertake the case.

"The COMMON SERJEANT. It is exceedingly unusual.

"Crouch denied that it was unusual in this court. He appealed to the gentlemen at the bar to bear him out in his assertion.

"Ballantine, as the senior counsel present begged to say that he never knew an instance of a brief being taken for a prosecution in such a manner.

"The COMMON SERJEANT never knew such a thing as instructions being given in such a manner to a gentleman at the bar.

"Crouch asserted that it occurred in this court every day.

"The COMMON SERJEANT.—What! Instructions given to counsel without an attorney being employed!

"Crouch was aware that it was a system which ought not to be encouraged; but in this instance, the prosecutor knowing him, applied to him to attend for him at the Wandsworth police court, which he could not do, and he, the prosecutor, then sent instructions to him.

"The COMMON SERJEANT observed that Mr. Crouch held a brief, apparently of considerable length, taken from the prosecutor's mouth.

"Crouch denied that it was so. He held only the statement which the prosecutor had sent to him.

"The COMMON SERJEANT never heard before of such a thing. In consultations held by counsel, even a witness was always excluded from the room.

"Crouch confessed that the course under consideration might be more honoured in the breach than the observance, but he could assure the learned Common Serjeant that it was common at that court.

"Wilkins denied it positively, and if such a thing occurred in his own circuit it might happen once through ignorance, but if it were repeated by any individual, no gentleman on the circuit would speak to him afterwards.

"The COMMON SERJEANT begged it to be distinctly and publicly understood that if the practice were repeated he would lay it before the judges.

"In the course of his address to the jury for the defence, Wilkins passed some very severe strictures upon the conduct of the prosecutor and his counsel, and expressed a hope, that for the honour of the Bar, such a course would not again be adopted.

"The prisoners were acquitted.

"Pond and one of the others were again indicted for stealing a mattress belonging to the same prosecutor.

"Crouch stated the case, which was similar in its circumstances to the other, except that the evidence was somewhat stronger against Pond. In the course of his opening Crouch complained of the violence and injustice of the attack made upon him, and in his own defence alleged that it was the practice of the learned judge (the Common Serjeant) to refuse the expenses of counsel for a prosecution, except to a favoured few of the counsel at that Bar.

"The COMMON SERJEANT instantly rose and stopped Mr Crouch. He hoped the learned counsel would consider what he was saying, for such an observation implied a charge of corruption on the part of the judge who should act so. He indignantly denied the truth of such an accusation.

"Alderman THOMAS WOOD, who sat with the Common Serjeant, declared he would represent this matter to the Commissioners of the Court and to the Bar. Much had been said of late about the improper conduct of the attorneys attending and practising there, but he (Alderman Wood) had always said that, if the counsel pursued the course which was consistent with the honour and dignity of the Bar, they would soon annihilate those irregularities. And he was fully convinced, by the scandalous conduct he had that day witnessed, that his observations were well founded. As for the charge made against his learned and excellent friend the Common Serjeant, he would not allow it stop there.

The COMMON SERJEANT wished it to be distinctly understood, that he had no 'favoured few.' He had only one object—to do strict justice. If any one shewed him a proper brief, with an attorney's name on the back, he allowed the expenses; but when he found cases taken up by counsel as a matter of speculation as to whether or not the fee would be paid for them, it was his bounden duty to set his face against such proceedings, and he always had done and would do so. The county could not and would not enter into such speculations. Those things did not perhaps occur before the judges, before whom a different class of cases came; but in the other (the new) court, in minor cases coming before him (the Common Serjeant), those tricks, if, indeed, they might not be called frauds, were practised. And persons, he was ashamed to say, wearing wigs and gowns, did enter into such speculations, which he was resolved to stop whenever he could. And, as he had been obliged to speak out, he would say, that of all the disgraceful cases he ever witnessed, that was the most disgraceful. Was it not proved that a member of the Bar of England had taken up the case without the intervention of any attorney, without any person but the prosecutor to instruct him, and that he absolutely made his brief in court himself from the report of the witness?

"Crouch was very sorry that he had called for those remarks. He hoped that his inexperience would be his excuse. He begged to apologise for what he had said, and assured the Court such a thing should not occur again so far as he was concerned.

"Alderman WOOD observed that they (the commissioners) had taken almost unlimited means to put an end to certain fraudulent practices with reference to persons taking instructions from prisoners in Newgate who were not authorized to so do. They had met with difficulties which the respectable members of the Bar, much to their credit be it said, had lent their aid to overcome; and it was to the integrity of the Bar they should look for aid to carry out those objects. There had been cases almost amounting to common swindling which he (Alderman Wood) had taken up; but, unfortunately, could not complete, or the parties would certainly have been indicted.

"Ballantine cordially approved of the exertions of the Court of Aldermen, and begged, on the part of all around him, to thank them for the great care and attention they had given the matter, and for trying to make the court what it ought to be—the highest and purest in the kingdom.

"The case was then suffered to proceed.

"Wilkins again addressed the jury, and having observed that cheap articles were never of good quality, said that the rule extended even to law. If they wanted an example of cheap law, ecce signum!

"The jury returned a verdict of guilty against Pond, and acquitted the other prisoner.

"The COMMON SERJEANT sentenced Pond to three months' imprisonment.

"Crouch then said that as a matter of principle he felt bound to apply to the Court for the expenses of the prosecution. He should ask the Court to allow the barrister's fee.

The COMMON SERJEANT, as a matter of principle, would not grant it. He felt bound to refuse the expenses of counsel most distinctly. He would allow only the ordinary expenses of witnesses. And he should again observe, that so far from such practices as had that night been exposed being tolerated when he was at the bar, in cases of consultation not a word would be spoken whilst a witness remained in the room. The witness would be first ordered out, and then, and not till then, did the counsel hold their consultation.

"The subject was then allowed to drop."

Upon the publication of this report, and the appearance of some severe commentaries in the leading articles of the daily papers, Mr. CROUCH addressed the following letter to the Times:—

"SIR,—As the report in the Times of Monday last, headed 'Central Criminal Court,' may do me great injury, I hope you will have the kindness to insert the following explanation:—

"Mr. Wilkins assures me (and I candidly believe him) that when he made those strong observations against me (reported in your paper) he was not aware that it was ever allowed for the Bar attending the Central Criminal Court to act as counsel for the prosecution, unless an attorney was employed in the case, or that, had he been aware of the practice, of course he would not have made such observations.

"Yesterday the barristers formerly at the Bar of the Central Criminal Court met at the Middlesex Sessions, and it was stated by all the gentlemen present, 'That it had always been the practice of the Bar attending London Sessions to act as counsel either for the prosecution or prisoner, although no attorney was engaged in the case; and that Mr. Crouch, in doing so, had neither acted unusually nor unprofessionally.'

"You will see how important this is to me, confirming the statement I made in court at the trial, and I pray you will insert it.

"Yours, obediently,

"Temple, Sept. 23." "NEWTON CROUCH."

And the following to the Morning Chronicle:—

"CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING CHRONICLE.

"SIR,—The great offence for which you have denounced me amounts to this: 'I have become the advocate of a prisoner who had not employed an attorney.' And when I had shewn you by my letter (that which I had asserted at the trial) that in doing so I had only acted in accordance with the usage of the London Sessions, you then mix me up with other persons and other matters (quite unconnected with my case), and heap dishonour and disgrace upon my character.

"I have, Sir, the consolation of knowing that I never in any way merited such severe censure, and I feel convinced that you yourself will yet do me justice, and confess you have blamed me undeservedly.

"You demand of me certain information; but I think your end will be better answered if I give a short account of the whole transaction, which I believe will embrace all your queries.

"The prosecutor, an old friend of mine, called upon me and said he wished me to be his counsel in a prosecution for robbery (at the same time handing me the depositions from the magistrates). I asked him who his attorney was (for attorneys are always the best clients); he said it was a simple case, and he did not intend to employ one. I then told him he must send me all the information he had to communicate, which he did a few days afterwards.

"I took no notes, took no examination (and I have a person who was present during the interview). The next time I saw prosecutor was on the first day of the sessions at the Central Criminal Court, and he then paid me the fee (two guineas) before the bill was even found, and four days before the trial took place.

"The prosecutor asked me if I would see the two policemen in the case. I told him no, the depositions were my best information. I never examined, I never even saw any of the witnesses until they came into the box to give their evidence.

"If at the trial I did not state all this, it was because I felt confused at being so suddenly attacked by Mr. Wilkins, by the learned judge, and Mr. Alderman Wood, and do not distinctly remember any thing I said, except that I declared it was usual in that court to act as I had done; and I still stand upon that most true declaration.

"And now to your further interrogatories.

"On Tuesday last I called the attention of the Bar (of which there were about twenty present at the sessions) to the report of the trial in the Times newspaper.

"Mr. Prendergast said he had read the report, and in his opinion no blame attached to Mr. Crouch; he (Mr. Crouch) had done no more in this case than he himself (Mr. Prendergast) had done in similar ones, and that he felt convinced every man at the sessions, who had been some time in practice, had occasionally done the same.

"Mr. Clarkson (who then entered the room) was of the same opinion, and instanced the cases of the dock companies (who prosecute without attorneys). Mr. Payne also confirmed the prevalence of the practice, and, I believe, every gentleman at the sessions, either at that time or during that day, expressed the same opinion as the leaders had done, and exonerated me from any blame.

"Mr. Wilkins 'regretted he had not before been aware of the practice of the London Sessions, and in the handsomest manner offered to bring the subject before the Court on the first day of the next sessions, and place Mr. Crouch rightly before the public.'

"And now, Sir, allow me to call your attention to the many cases where counsel act without the intervention of attorneys.

"Parish appeals, of which there are thousands every quarter sessions, are frequently got up by the overseers or clerk, and counsel (even the highest at the Bar) take briefs, hold consultations, and take instructions (no attorney employed).

"In the insolvent and bankruptcy courts, private persons employ counsel without attorneys.

"Public companies (dock companies, for instance) instruct counsel; no attorney engaged.

"Mint cases have (I believe) no attorney employed by the Crown to instruct counsel.

"Many other instances might be added to shew you the prevalence of the practice but at the same time I beg to say, 'It is a practice more honoured in the breach than in the observance.'

"You will oblige me by inserting this letter, and believe me to be, Sir, yours obediently,

"Temple, Sept. 28, 1844." "N. CROUCH."

The Morning Chronicle, citing the Report, thus commented upon the practices revealed in it:—

"Into the large and general question, namely, under what circumstances an advocate may dispense with the intermediate agency of the attorney between himself and the client we will not now enter. The subject is too wide and general, and a more fitting occasion may arise to discuss it. Every profession has, no doubt, the right to make rules to bind its own members; and each learned body has within itself the machinery to execute its own laws, by sending a refractory brother to Coventry; but these rules are arbitrary, and in England almost universally nugatory. So long as men of all classes and conditions, without reference to competence, character, fitness, or learning, are admitted, and admitted without examination, to the English Bar, so long must there be found such paltry sweepings of lawyers, such ecumeurs de procès, as are to be found not alone in the Old Bailey but in Westminster-hall itself. Institute a council of discipline, composed, as in France, of the most learned and liberal among the order, and there is no fear but such practices as those of Mr. Crouch would be justly and properly dealt with. We cannot, however, but think that the virtuous indignation of Mr. Wilkins has begun at the wrong end; nor are we quite sure that he is exactly the man who ought to have cast the first stone against an erring brother.

"The iniquities and malpractices of the Old Bailey and Central Criminal Court are not solely confined to such as Mr. Crouch; and if Mr. Wilkins would really grapple with the monster evil, let him strike at more desperate but more dexterous practitioners— not 'nobler quarry,' certainly, but men who, from their craft and cunning, as well as boldness and dexterity, are more mischievous to the suitor and less creditable to the Bar itself. A smooth, oily, jaunty jobber, who by an ostentatious yet empty benevolence, worms himself into the post of prosecuting counsel to parishes, vestries, and boards, is, to our minds, far more dangerous and disreputable than the practitioner whose offence, after all, is only the communication with an auctioneer instead of an attorney. Mr. Wilkins, however, well enough knows that there are attorneys who have especial affection for such a man. There is a necessitudo sortis between them.

"We perceive that Mr. Ballantine, a very young barrister, stepped forward to vindicate the honour of his cloth, and to aver that he never knew, in his experience, an instance of a brief being taken for a prosecution in such a manner as had been disclosed in the case of Crouch. We are of course bound to believe Mr. Ballantine; but his experience is extremely limited, and we had rather have the opinion of some of his seniors. There is not an abler or a more honourable gentleman in the profession than Mr. Adolphus; not a more straightforward, candid, manly man than Mr. Prendergast; not a more ingenious and well-read person than Mr. Churchill. These gentlemen are all by many years Mr. Ballantine's seniors. Will they come forward and say that they have never before heard of or seen such professional malpractices as have been first denounced though not first discovered in the present case? When they do, then we shall believe that the stories of jobbing, and monopoly, and exclusion, and the system of cadding by clerks, and hooking and plucking by low retainers in the precincts of the Old Bailey courts, are a mere 'coinage of the brain' of some briefless would-be brief-snatcher, less successful in action, though fully as guilty in intent as Crouch himself. 'As at present advised,' to use a favourite expression of the late Lord Eldon, we consider these practices by no means of uncommon occurrence, though we are willing to admit that they have been only recently publicly noticed and denounced. But is there a man in or out of the Profession who does not know that the Old Bailey was, to all intents and purposes, and is yet, to the generality of practitioners, as close a borough as were Gatton and Old Sarum to the parliamentary candidates before the passing of the Reform Bill? Is ther a man who does not know that business was and is jobbed there in the grossest and unfairest way, and that an embryo Erskine would be 'mute and inglorious' for evermore, if he had to begin at the Old Bailey without the proper freemasonry of the craft of the trade, for it would be a prostitution of the name to call it profession?

"Mr. Wilkins is, no doubt, an exception to the rule of exclusion; but Mr. Wilkins came to the Central Criminal Court with a reputation already made, and in a most opportune season, to fill up the void created by the promotion of Mr. Phillips. But he must not suppose, because he has himself succeeded, that a fair career is opened to every man of talent. No; if this able and dexterous advocate wishes to improve this great metropolitan jurisdiction, let him speak out against the practices of the leviathans, and let him direct his attention to the constitution of the Court itself. There is a taint in the very atmosphere of the Old Bailey; and to fire at such 'small deer' as Crouch (whose conduct is, however, disreputable and unprofessional in the highest degree), without hunting down the wolves and foxes of the Central Criminal jungle, is to waste good powder and shot. Mr. Wilkins may be assured that if he be really desirous to amend the practice and proceedings of the Court, the public voice and opinion will go along with him. But, again we say, he has begun at the wrong end."

While this instance of malpractice was in course of discussion, another, far worse in its character, occurred at the Middlesex Sessions. The most succinct account of it is given in a leading article in the Morning Chronicle, which we transcribe:—

"We now turn to the case at the Middlesex Sessions—Reg. v. Thompson, which was tried before Mr. Serjeant Adams and a full bench of magistrates:—

"This was (says the report) an indictment against the defendant by Mr. H. H. Pyke, Barrister-at-law, and others, charging him with having erected and carried on a nuisance at Kentish-town, by means of bleaching bristles for brushes, making varnish, boiling soap, and dyeing wood.

"Pyke, in the absence of Horry, himself conducted the case for the prosecution; and Prendergast and Bodkin appeared for the defendant.

"The case for the prosecution lasted until seven o'clock in the evening, the learned prosecutor himself occupying the Court a considerable time by the statement of the facts.

"In the course of the evidence for the prosecution it came out that the learned prosecutor had, although a member of the Bar, been acting in this matter in the character of an attorney. He had drawn the brief, and delivered it to and held consultations with another counsel, without the name of any attorney being at the bottom of the brief.

"The learned JUDGE, in very energetic language, condemned this conduct as extremely unprofessional and highly improper, and went on to say that if such a practice were to obtain amongst the members of the Bar, its character as a liberal and honourable profession could no longer be upheld.

"Pyke, in the course of his reply, in reference to what had fallen from the learned judge, asserted that every prosecutor had a right to conduct his own case.

"The JUDGE said that was perfectly true; but here was the prosecutor, a barrister, drawing and delivering the briefs to another counsel, without the name of an attorney being on them, and then at last appearing in that court as counsel in his own prosecution. The learned gentleman had brought these observations upon himself by his own conduct. The course of proceeding which he had adopted was not only unprofessional, but most improper, and unless the learned gentleman could prove that he had not drawn the briefs, and had not delivered them to counsel, it would be difficult to excuse himself to the Court.

"Pyke again contended that he was justified by the law of the land in doing what he had done.

"The JUDGE would tell the learned gentleman that he was not justified, neither was another barrister justified in taking a brief, without the name of an attorney being attached to it. There was a somewhat similar case at the Central Criminal Court a day or two since, but there the party giving the brief was not a professional man, still less was he a member of the Bar. He hoped never to see such another proceeding.

"The case having been brought to a conclusion,

"The JUDGE said he felt it necessary, in consequence of the course adopted by the learned gentleman in his reply, to offer a few remarks upon his conduct. He felt it to be his duty, and most reluctantly he performed it, to say that in his judgment that learned gentleman had not been justified in any one step which he had taken in this matter. He had conducted himself most unprofessionally, and in a way which he sincerely hoped he should never be a witness to again. He had placed himself in the position of prosecutor, witness, attorney, and counsel, for he found that not only was his name at the back of the indictment, but that he had gone before the grand jury. But the learned gentleman had not simply done this; for he, a barrister—a member of that which was called a liberal and honourable profession—had published and stuck up in front of his own house a placard which was full of untruths. He had then gone round to different persons, soliciting them to come forward to prosecute this defendant, and in a letter had offered his own professional services without fee. This was a most improper proceeding, and one which he could not allow, in justice to the Profession of which he had been for more than thirty years a member, to pass without public notice from the seat he had the honour of occupying. Counsel received, but did not seek briefs, and they were bound to receive any brief which might be brought to them with the fee, and were then called upon to do the best they could for their client. Here, however, in his own letters, the learned gentleman tendered his professional services and influence. That Mr. Horry had taken the brief without the name of an attorney being upon it he could not believe, and he hoped that to-morrow morning that learned gentleman would be able to deny the statement that he had done so. He had felt called upon to make these observations; and lest Mr. Pyke should feel aggrieved at them, and should think it necessasy to take any steps in consequence, he should, in order to be prepared with a justification for these remarks, direct that all the gentleman's letters which had been read in evidence should be retained in the custody of the Court."

"In reading the report of the Chronicle, we began to think we might have been imposed on by one of those ingenious fictions which was recently practised on one of our contemporaries; but on referring to the Times we find the account is almost word for word the same. Is this, then, the condition to which the English Bar is reduced in the year of our Lord 1844? Are these the manner of men to whom we are to surrender the defence of our liberties, our lives, our property, and that which should be dearer to us than all, our reputations? Here is a man, by profession a barrister, commencing a case as prosecutor against a party who was his rival for the local situation of commissioner of paving and lighting, drawing the brief as attorney, holding consultations with another counsel without the name of any attorney being at the bottom of the brief, and when the solicitor on the other side declined to hold any communication except with another professional gentleman, he received an anonymous letter from Pyke, the prosecutor and barrister, attorney and attorney's clerk, intimating that Mr. Kirk, of Symond's-inn, was retained as solicitor for the prosecution. How, we ask, can such things be, and are they permitted by the proper authorities? If an attorney be guilty of any malversation or malpractice, appeal may be made to the Law Institution for inquiry, or to the Court of which he is an officer, to strike him off the roll. But is there to be no remedy in the case of a barrister? The cases of disbarring are certainly not numerous in the books, and the remedy has not been frequently resorted to; but if ever there were a case which called for the exercise of this extreme remedy, surely the circumstances of this case are so flagrant as to demand the instant interposition of the authorities. On looking to the Law List, we find this Pyke is a member of the Honourable Society of Gray's-inn. Surely if Gray's-inn wish to continue an honourable society, the benchers must take the earliest opportunity of disbarring such a person. We know not whether this be the Pyke who drew up a bill, or answer, in Chancery (for he practises in all the courts of equitable and legal, as well as of parliamentary and criminal, jurisdiction), of such a nature as to call down, very recently, the severe animadversions of the presiding judge; or the Pyke who raised the controversy with one Dickenson, an attorney; but be this as it may, enough is apparent on the proceeding now before us to put in motion the inn of court to which he belongs.

"While we are on this subject, we may in passing observe, that the facility with which some of the inns of court admit persons to the Bar of late years, without previous examination in law or learning, or inquiry into moral character, appears to us worthy of the grave censure of the judges. Where there is a University degree, and a well-established reputation, such examination may be unnecessary; but there are numberless cases in which such examination is not only necessary, but would be profitable both to the Profession and the public. We are aware that the practice has prevailed for some dozen years or more at the Inner Temple, and with some good effect; but we should look on the Institution of Councils of Discipline, as established in France, as a much more efficacious method of dealing with those bad subjects of the law whom Heinneccius calls Vultures Togati. These councils, formed out of the body of the Bar itself, by election, are charged with the functions of watching over the honour and conduct of members of the Profession. They have the power of admonishing, censuring, reprimanding, interdicting temporarily from practice, or altogether disbarring. But in the exercise of this latter right, the usages of the Profession allow an appeal, within a certain period, to the inculpated advocate.

"We confess that recent circumstances induce us to think that such a council might be profitably instituted in England. The Bar, however, is the custodier of its own honour, and it is for that body to say whether they will allow the Vultures Togati, the discreditable pettifoggers, to remain within their ranks. Mr. Serjeant Adams has, at all events, done his duty to the Profession and the public."

In further explanation of this discreditable affair, the following letter has been addressed to the Morning Herald:—

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING HERALD.

"THE QUEEN, ON THE PROSECUTION OF H. H. PYKE, ESQ. BARRISTER-AT-LAW, AGAINST WILLIAM THOMPSON.

"36, Bucklersbury, Mansion House,
"Sept. 27, 1844.

"SIR,—I observe a letter in your paper of this morning, addressed to you by Mr. Pyke, complaining of the observations made on his conduct by the chairman of the Middlesex Sessions.

"As the attorney conducting the defence of Mr. Thompson, allow me to say a very few words. At the commencement of the case I received letters and papers, although in the handwriting of Mr. Pyke, yet signed with the name of A. Verchild. Finding this person was not an attorney, but only a clerk in the office of Mr. Pyke, a law stationer in Chancery-lane, and a negotiator of law partnerships, and who is the father of Mr. Pyke, the barrister, I wrote and refused to communicate with him. I then received an anonymous letter in the handwriting of Mr. Pyke, referring me to Mr. Kirk, of Symond's-inn, as the attorney to be communicated with, and to that gentleman I wrote on the 5th September, inviting him to attend a chemical examination of Mr. Thompson's process of bleaching, accompanied by his counsel, clients, and chemists, but which offer was not accepted.

"To shew the spirit in which this prosecution was commenced and conducted, I think I need only refer to the fact of Mr. Horry having pressed for costs when the Court adjourned the case on the 10th inst. and also to the following letters, written by Mr. Pyke, and sent to a gentleman who produced them in court, under a subpœna from me, and which letters were read in open court to the jury, commented upon by the chairman in his observations to the jury, and were subsequently impounded, with other papers, by the learned chairman, in addition to those which Mr. Pyke left with the chairman, the brief which he used in court, and which we are to presume is the one given to Mr. Horry, and it will at once be seen whether it is in the handwriting of a law clerk or Mr. Pyke himself.

"I remain your obedient servant,
"FRAS. HOBLER.

"P.S. I omitted to say that the copies of subpœnas served on the witnesses for the prosecution, which I have been able to see, are filled up in Mr. Pyke's writing, but no attorney's name indorsed, as should be on such a document."

The Morning Chronicle has again thus admirably commented upon the recent exhibitions:—

"We are well pleased to learn that our remarks on the practices of the Bar at the Central Criminal Court and Middlesex Sessions have excited not only the observation and consideration of the proper authorities, but have likewise awakened the attention of the Profession at large. If this were the only result obtained, the reform to be hoped for might not be very immediate nor very sufficient; but fortunately public indignation is roused, and the judges and benchers will now see that the subject is one of grave import, and which will not brook delay. In free states the character of the Bar is public property. Our lives, our liberties, our reputations, our fortunes, are in the hands of that body, and it is important, not only to public liberty, but to the well-being and existence of every state, that the Bar should be composed not merely of learned lawyers and subtle pleaders, but of men of liberal minds, enlarged views, unblemished honour, and incorruptible integrity. It was because we wish to see the Profession so composed in England that we unhesitatingly, and at once, pronounced unqualified condemnation in the recent cases at the Central Criminal Court and at the Middlesex Sessions. We know nothing individually of either of the parties incriminated—either of Mr. Crouch or Mr. Pyke—and we wish to know nothing of them; but all we say is this, that if such practices as were made patent in these two particular instances, now being openly discovered, are not openly condemned and discredited by the authorities, there is an end to the independence, to the respectability, and to the high tone and honour of the Bar of England.

"We were well aware that the practices for which Mr. Crouch was brought under the notice of the Court, namely, taking a prosecuting brief without the intervention of an attorney, had long existed at the Old Bailey, unreproved and uncondemned, and all we desired was a public recognition of the fact that it had so continued publicly unreproved, though privately deprecated. Mr. Prendergast is too honest and straightforward a man to deny the existence of such a practice as we felt it our duty to condemn—a practice which prevailed, if we be rightly informed, before he entered the court as a practitioner. But does he applaud it? On the contrary, he and all other respectable barristers lament the existence of a deviation from the stricter and purer professional rule.

"It is not stated whether Mr. Curwood, who has been a member of the Bar for half a century, or Mr. Adolphus, who has been in the profession thirty-seven years, or Mr. Ryland, who has been a barrister for twenty-seven years, took part in the discussion at the Middlesex Sessions in Mr. Crouch's case; but if the fact be really so, these gentlemen, in admitting the existence of the practice, must have condemned it generally, without reference to any individual case. In the individual case of Mr. Crouch it has been directly brought under cognizance of the Court, and the Common-Serjeant could not do otherwise than denounce such a deviation from etiquette as grossly unprofessional. We should have felt great pity for Mr. Crouch if this had been his first offence; but we are informed that it was not, and that a meeting of the Old Bailey Bar had been heretofore held in reference to his professional conduct, at which a Mr. O'Brien officiated as secretary, and on which occasion he received a gentle hint that he had transgressed professional bounds. Mr. Crouch then pleaded ignorance, and was excused. If this fact, communicated to us by a gentleman of the Bar, be true, Mr. Crouch cannot a second time plead ignorance, or say that he was unwarned as to the gross irregularity of his conduct. Mr. Crouch would have us believe that parish appeals are managed without the intervention of an attorney. To this we give a decided denial. We believe in one or two of the metropolitan parishes the bad practice prevailed of allowing the vestry clerk occasionally, not an attorney, to act as such; but this is now prohibited, as Mr. Crouch ought to know, by Lord Langdale's Act, the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, sec. 2, which provides that no person shall act as an attorney or solicitor unless he be duly admitted and enrolled as such. After the passing of this Act, Mr. Corder, clerk to a metropolitan parish, handed a brief to Mr. Pashley, at the Middlesex Sessions, and an objection was, on that account, raised to Mr. Pashley being heard. Surely, as a practitioner at the bar, Mr. Crouch ought to know this, and more particularly ought he to know it as a practitioner at the Middlesex Sessions. It is said that dock companies prosecute without the aid of an attorney. Whatever be the case in the metropolis, we know this is not so in the provinces; and if the practice obtain in London, it is a gross irregularity, without the shadow of an excuse. The poverty of a prosecutor may be a reason for his not employing an attorney; but there can be no such excuse for dock companies. Mr. Crouch expressed his belief that the Mint have no attorney. Not only have they an attorney in London, but an agent in every town of England of any importance, and an inspector, Mr. Powell, well known to every counsel in England of any practice.

"But we have said enough of Mr. Crouch, whose case we now leave to the consideration of the authorities. There is, certainly, a considerable difference between the deviation of Crouch and the gross professional offence of Pyke, which cannot be lost sight of either by the benchers or the judges, whose bounden duty it is to consider both cases, with a view to a remedy early in the ensuing Term. For the last century, and until within the last fourteen or fifteen years, the Bar of England has certainly been a credit and an honour to the country; but of late the 'cankers of a calm world and a long peace' have infested this learned Profession with a class of men neither learned nor respectable, and who excercise their calling in a manner neither honourable to the body nor useful to the public at large.

"It has been too much the fashion to admit of late to the Bar, and without examination, persons whose previous pursuits one would have supposed had wholly disqualified them for the exercise of a learned Profession. Far, indeed, are we from countenancing the idea, that in this free country the career of the Bar should not be open to all; but open when the candidate had proved his fitness to enter on it, by having had the benefit of a liberal education, joined to a proficiency in his particular art. If we go on admitting candidates indiscriminately, in the way in which they have been admitted for the last ten or twelve years, the respectable members of the Bar will be overborne by men who follow all the low practices of the Jeffreys and Pembertons, without disclosing any portion of their abilities. We shall have the dishonourable tricks of Francis North revived, who, even according to the account of his own near relative, resorted, when counsel, to the discreditable practice of opening his case with 'a long history of matters upon record, of bulls, monasteries, orders, greater or lesser houses, surrenders, patents, and a great deal more,' all which he knew to be perfectly false; and, when called upon to go into his evidence, gravely informed the Court 'that the attorney had forgotten to examine the copies with the originals at the Tower.'

"It may be by many thought that we have attached far too much importance to those flagrant breaches of etiquette occurring within the last week. We cannot be persuaded to think so. If these practices go unreproved, we shall fall on the 'evil days' of the Jeffreys and Pembertons; and what manner of men they were we learn from that most amusing book, 'The Life of Francis North, by his Brother Roger.' It is thus that the brother Roger describes Jefreys:—

"'His beginnings at the inns of court and practice were low. After he was called to the Bar he used to sit in coffee-houses, and order his man to come and tell him that company attended him at his chamber; at which he would huff, and say, 'Let them stay a little; I will come presently.' This made a show of business, of which he had need enough, being married, and having several children. One of the aldermen of the City was of his name, which probably inclined him to steer his course that way, where, having got acquaintance with the City attorneys, and drinking desperately with them, he came into full business amongst them, and was chosen Recorder of the City.'

"The sketch of Lord Chief Justice Pemberton is, if possible, more graphic. Though we have now our Jeffreys and our Pembertons in petto, and on a small scale at the Old Bailey, fortunately public opinion has kept them in the back-ground, and retarded their advancement:—

"'This man's morals were very indifferent, for his beginnings were debauched, and his study and first practice in the gaol. For, having been one of the fiercest town rakes, and spent more than he had of his own, his case forced him upon that expedient for a lodging. And there he made so good use of his leisure, and busied himself with the cases of his fellow collegiates, whom he informed and advised so skilfully, that he was reputed the most notable fellow within those walls; and at length he came out a sharper at the law.'"

Rumoured Judicial Changes.—Dublin, Sept. 28.—The impression is very general here that several changes in the Irish law department will take place either before or shortly after the commencement of the ensuing Michaelmas term. According to the current report, which, although freely spoken of in well-informed quarters, cannot at this early period be received with absolute credence, Chief Justice Pennefather retires from the Queen's Bench, the declining state of his health entitling him to the receipt of the usual pension. Chief Justice Doherty, it is stated, is to be transferred from the Common Pleas to the Queen's Bench, the Right Hon. Judge Keatinge succeeding from the Prerogative Court to the Chiefship of the Common Pleas. Mr. Baron Lefroy, adds the same rumour, is to take the Prerogative Court, and is also to be elevated to the peerage of the United Kingdom. The seat thus vacated in the Court of Exchequer would be, of course, at the disposal of the Attorney-General, and, in the event of the right hon. gentleman's refusal, it would be tendered to Mr. Greene, the Solicitor-General. Other minor changes are also freely discussed, but, as they must be altogether contingent upon the foregoing arrangements being carried into effect, it would be useless to enumerate them while these remain matter of doubt.

Release of Sam Gray.—This celebrated individual was, on an application to the Queen's Bench Chamber this day, admitted to bail—the Crown offering no opposition—on finding bail, himself in 1,000l. and two sureties of 200l. each.

The obstructions hitherto in the way of Colonel Tynte's claim to the Wharton peerage are understood to be so far removed, that it is expected he will be called to the Upper House by the title of Baron Wharton in a few months.—Cambrian.

Courts of Frankpledge.—Yesterday the Right Hon. the Recorder, assisted by the High Bailiff of the borough of Southwark, held three several courts of Frankpledge, at the Town-hall, the Globe, York-street, and the Three Tuns, St. Margaret's-hill, for the Great Liberty, Guildable, and King's Manors. At each of the courts the vacancies in the leet juries were filled up from those who had served the inferior offices of constable and ale and flesh tasters, and the various presentments were made of tradesmen who had been fined by the juries for using deficient weights and measures. In the course of the proceedings, one of the ale-tasters of the Great Liberty informed the steward (the Recorder) that he had seized at some of the public-houses some measures which were deficient, considering that he was fully empowered to do so by the oath he had taken on entering office. The Recorder then received the explanations of the parties in whose houses the measures were found, informed them that no fines would be levied, and the different courts were adjourned.

A Case not in the Law Books.—In the course of a case on Monday, in the Bankruptcy Court, before Mr. Commissioner Evans, an application was made under the following circumstances:—It appeared that after the fiat, the bankrupt's wife brought an addition to the family, not inserted in the balance-sheet. The nurse now made her claim, and the assignees, as the credits were small, felt a difficulty as to whether they could legally pay the amount claimed in full, or whether the party must prove the debt; although her services were continued, she was not engaged by the assignees. (Laughter.) Mr. Commissioner Evans referred to the books and gravely said he did not find a case in point, but he thought she might be considered as a domestic servant, and entitled to be paid in full.—Globe.

The First Committal under the Convention between France and England.—Mansion House.—Jacques Besset, who traded under the firm of Pricener and Co. general merchants, of No. 73, Fenchurch-street, and against whom a warrant was obtained on the 13th ult. was brought up on Monday last, in the custody of Stephen Thornton, of the A division, charged under the law of France with fraudulent bankruptcy. The result of the proceedings was that the prisoner was committed, preparatory to his being sent to France.

The will of the late William Heathcote, esq. was proved in the Prerogative Court, Doctors' Commons, on the 12th ult. by John Gregson, esq. of Bedford-row, the sole surviving executor, and the personal estate is sworn to be under 200,000l.—Britannia.

The Great Will Case—Bellew v. Bellew.—The worshipful Chancellor Martin has given judgment in this case. He recapitulated all the circumstances, went into an elaborate exposition of the decision on the same point, and concluded by confirming the will, thus giving the property to Miss Caroline Bellew. He remarked upon the influence which had been exercised over the testatrix, but which had been exercised as much by the caveatrix, Miss Frances Pellew, who disputed the will, as by Miss Caroline; admitting, however, that the influence of the latter was that of affection and mutual attachment. The array of authorities which the worshipful Chancellor produced, appeared to leave not a shadow of ground for concluding that the decision would have been otherwise, the ruling principle of law being, as we gathered it from his elaborate judgment, that where there was any possibility that sanity existed at the time of making the will, no matter what influences were exercised, so long as the testator was a free agent, the will must be admitted. Touching the question of costs, the Chancellor said, that where the caveator failed in endeavouring to set aside a will, it was usual to condemn him in costs; but looking at the relationship of the parties, and the desirableness of improving the feeling which existed between them, he should give no costs; thus adjudging each party to bear her own costs.—Judgment for Miss Caroline Bellew.—Western Times.

Bankruptcy.—A return pursuant to 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 29, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, and to an order of the Honourable the House of Commons, dated 9th May, 1844, lately printed, shews that in 1841 the amount of dividends transferred was 602,228l. 0s. 8d.; the amount paid out was 523,148l. 9s. 3d. In 1842, the amount transferred was 702,816l. 16s. 4d.; the amount paid out was 661,230l. 19s. 8d. In 1843 the amount transferred was 1,118,590l. 2s. 10d., the amount paid out was 1,067,976l. 3s. 5d. For the same years respectively the payments made by orders of the Court were 13,452l. 7s. 10d.; 5,012l. 11s. 6d.; 7,686l. 14s. 6d.; by the judges and Lord Chancellor, 7,060l. 3s. 4d.; 660l. 13s. 9d.; 655l. 10s. 2d.; and by the Commissioners, 360,314l. 6s. 10d.; 251,967l. 10s. 10d.; 418,571l. 19s. The net balances existing on the 1st January, 1844, were on the Bankruptcy Fund Account, 1,606,407l. 14s. 11d.; on the interest arising from Bankruptcy Fund Account, 31,398l. 7s. 8d., and 60,000l. invested in Consols; on the unclaimed Dividend Account, 7,387l. 9s. 4d., and 23,000l. invested in Consols; on the Secretary of Bankrupts' Account, 7,048l. 15s. 1d., and 15,000l. invested in Consols; and on the Secretary of Bankrupts' Compensation Account, 8,744l. 9s.

Misdemeanors (Queen's Bench).—It appears from a parliamentary paper (No. 408) that the power of appeal in cases of misdemeanors has, in the greater number of instances in which it has been exercised, been beneficial to the accused parties, so that we may infer a similar result from the establishment of other criminal cases. It is a return of the number and names of parties to all informations and indictments for misdemeanors preferred in the Court of Queen's Bench, or removed thither by certiorari or otherwise, and tried, since the 1st day of January, 1824, and of the verdicts and judgments thereon, and of all motions therein for a new trial, or that a verdict be entered therein for one or more defendant or defendants, or that judgment be arrested, and the substance of the rules pronounced upon such motions; and, when a new trial has been ordered, of the further proceedings thereon, so far as the same can be ascertained. In that period there were 27 rules obtained to arrest judgment, of which 23 were made absolute, 3 were discharged, and in one nothing further was done. There were 56 rules obtained for new trials, of which 15 were discharged; in 15 cases only were new trials had, which resulted in 12 acquittals and 3 convictions. The two judgment was given for debts on a special case, two remain to be decided, and the rest nothing further was done. In 13 cases, rules to enter verdicts for defendants were made absolute, and in 4 they were discharged, while 2 out of 4 rules to enter verdict for the prosecutor were made absolute, and two discharged. No account is kept at the Crown Office of motions for new trials which are refused; nor is there any account of trials had upon any indictment or information at Nisi Prius, unless in cases wherein the postea is returned to the Crown Office.

Hawkers' Licenses.—A return of the number of hawkers licensed in England, Scotland, and Ireland, in each of the years 1800, 1810, 1820, 1830, 1840, and 1843, has been prepared and printed on the motion of Mr. Joseph Hume, M.P. It hence appears that in England the amount of revenue derived from hawkers' licenses was, in 1800, 8,963l.; in 1810, 17,898l.; in 1820, 29,236l.; in 1830, 33,392l.; in 1840, 32,512l.; and in 1843, 27,100l. In the last-mentioned year (1843), 4,793 licenses were paid for at the rate of 4l.; 927 at the rate of 8l.; 40 at the rate of 12l.; and 2 at the rate of 16l. In Scotland, we find that in 1840 there were 705 licenses at the rate of 4l. and 58 at the rate of 8l.; the total amount which accrued to the revenue having been 3,284l. In 1843 there were 411 licenses at 4l. and 56 at 8l.; whilst the total amount accruing to the revenue was 2,092l. Previous to the year 1835 these licenses were not under the management of the Board of Stamps and Taxes, and consequently no returns can be obtained. From Ireland the information procured is still more scant. In 1800 the hawkers' licenses were under the management of the Excise Department, in 1810 under that of the Stamp-office, and in 1820 once more under the management of the Excise, but no records can be found. In 1830 the amount of revenue derived from this source was 853l. and in 1840 only 4l. 14s. 6d. No further particulars are given in the return.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ATTORNEYS' GOWNS—SHAM ATTORNEYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—By several letters in your columns from different parts of the country, I see there is a somewhat widely-spread inclination among our order (the Attorneys) to return to the ancient and respectable practice of wearing gowns, as is, it would appear, our professional right.

Mr. Shapland, of South Molton, has invited members of the Profession to join him in endeavouring to bring about the resumption of our legal costume. "Many recommend it," he says, "but write anonymously;" and he asks for the names of gentlemen willing to make a beginning. I beg to add mine, and shall be glad if an earnest movement in this direction can be originated.

For the following reasons:—

1st. It is a simple and efficient means of avoiding the inconvenience of obtaining admission into crowded courts of justice, at assizes, &c.

2ndly. When admitted to the body of the court, of obtaining access to counsel, and retaining possession of the seats appropriated to attorneys—a matter which every solicitor knows is now often an impossibility—the seats being usually crowded at the opening of the courts by the idle and curious, in consequence of which the attorney is often obliged to fling his brief to counsel, without an opportunity of making any of those suggestions, or answering any of those questions in the progress of the cause—civil or criminal—which his detailed knowledge of the case would render so useful and convenient to the advocate.

3rdly. It would draw a notable distinction between the regularly educated practitioner, when attending in the preliminary stages of an inquiry at petty sessions, the metropolitan police courts, &c. and the bullying sham attorneys, pretended clerks, &c. who infest their purlieus, and who would not dare, it is presumed, to adopt the professional costume—not, at any rate, without making themselves liable to the penal clauses of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, as falsely pretending to be and practising as attorneys. Nor could the public be so easily deceived by "gaol-agents" or the malpractices complained of at the Central Criminal Court be so felicitously carried on, to the degradation of the Bar and the invasion of our privileges.

Lastly, it would give a professional character, and bring with it proper respect, by raising the respectability of our order in the eyes of the public. The barrister does not forsake his wig and gown, why should the attorney relinquish the outward and visible sign of his belonging to the same learned profession, though in a more humble character? I firmly believe that if we, the attorneys, have lost caste, it is in no inconsiderable degree to be attributed to our own neglect of this professional observance. I trust, Sir, that—should your views coincide with those above expressed—you will lend your assistance in bringing about a return to it.—I am, Sir, yours truly,

GEORGE JOHN DURRANT.

ATTORNEYS' GOWNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I observe, with pleasure, a letter in your last number from Mr. Shapland, of South Molton, relative to the above subject, agreeing as I do, in the propriety of his remarks thereon; and I am glad to find such remarks meet with attention in your valuable paper, and that some members of the Profession, alive to its interests, have taken up the matter.

There is now in the course of erection at Colchester a town-hall, and several members of the Profession in this town have determined, upon their first professional engagement after the new courts are completed, to appear therein in an appropriate robe, and have already provided themselves with such symbol of their avocation from Messrs. Adams and Ede, of Chancery-lane.

I am amongst the number of those who, in common with Mr. Shapland, have experienced difficulty in obtaining an entrance into courts at an assize town, and have met with very improper conduct from the officials when seeking such admission; the whole of which, I believe, I should have been happily freed from, had my profession been made apparent by a robe—and I think that one great means of upholding the dignity of the honourable profession of the law is, by the members of that body, whilst engaged in public business, wearing an attorney's gown.

Your correspondent may be assured that the practice will be revived, and adhered to, by several members of the legal Profession in this town, as soon as the new courts of justice are opened for public business, which will probably be in two or three months.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,

F. G. ABELL.

P.S. Upon having mentioned our determination to several barristers, I am glad to say they perfectly coincide in the propriety of the course we mean to take.

NEW SETTLEMENT BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Having read with much interest the articles in your late numbers on the projected "Poor-Law Settlement Bill," and concurring in many points in the view taken by their author, I wish to call your attention to the feeling which the prospect of such a sweeping measure is producing in our parochial districts. From an experience of very considerable extent, not less than a period of forty years, in the practical working both of the poor-laws in general, as well as of settlements, I am perfectly satisfied that so subversive a change in the present practice as this measure contemplates, is much more calculated to produce confusion, cost, and trouble, than promote any really beneficial or useful reform. It seems to me a measure admirably schemed to unhinge, without settling the operation of removals. And this is exactly the light in which all the plain practical farmers, who have the deepest interest as rate-payers in the matter, with whom I have discussed the subject, view its tendency. Complicated and diversified as the classes of settlement under the existing law may be, still the practice under its operation has, from length of time, and the habit and experience of local authorities and parish officers, become so familiarized to their apprehension, that they would have materially more difficulty and expense to encounter in working this new system, and its contradictory provisions, than in going on with the existing plan.

Of one novelty which this hopeful scheme of disjointing the present organism of our settlement law proposes, that of the five-year location (sec. 8), there seems to be a very strong and well-grounded dread. Of the evils to which its adoption would give birth, the concocters of the measure, in their zeal for innovation, rather than amendment, would seem to be utterly unaware. It would, by its immediate operation in many districts, rivet the burden of numerous families upon parishes that have been invaded by settlers of whom, by this provision, they would be rendered unable to disburden themselves. And I can vouch, by experience of the fact of parishes about me, as well as one in which I am resident, that this would be the effect. I here speak of the case of cottagers who have taken in parcels of common or waste lands, and having erected small dwellings, sell them to strangers who come into parishes where such severalties have been made, and, by continuous labour for five years, will have thus virtually secured a settlement.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

A JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

Another Attorney thus treats the subject of Professional Costume:—

I was glad to see the observations of Mr. Shapland in your paper of the 28th of September last, in reference to my former letter therein. In order to keep the subject from dying, and to assist, if possible, in the adoption of gowns by attorneys generally when professionally engaged at the courts, I am induced again to trespass on your valuable columns, feeling satisfied that wearing gowns will add to the dignity of the Profession, and remedy much of the inconvenience of which many of us complain. It is well known that in all courts places are set apart for the accommodation of counsel and attorneys, in the way to or in the occupation of which the former are but seldom much disturbed, as on their appearance in their professional costume the way is immediately cleared by the officials of the court, and a "writ of possession" executed against any one occupying counsel's places. But how fares the "humble attorney," who has no such mark of distinction? Why, he is obliged to elbow and push his way through the crowded court in the best manner he can; in addition to which, he is oftentimes obstructed, as Mr. Shapland and his friend were, by the officers of the court, owing to his being a stranger to them, and consequently not known to be an attorney. The places assigned to attorneys are also invariably filled up by others more lucky to get possession first, there being at present nothing to denote a professional man from any other. The above inconveniences are but a few of the many we are subjected to, the whole of which would, I think, be in a great measure lessened by our adopting some distinctive mark of our profession. I hope, therefore, something of this sort will form one of the subjects for the consideration of the "Legal Protective Association," as also that, at the forthcoming meeting of the deputations from the Provincial Law Societies, advertised in your valuable paper to take place at Manchester, the members thereof will one and all adopt and recommend the wearing of gowns.

I would myself most readily join Mr. Shapland in immediately wearing a gown, but should not like to appear singular, fearing the rest of my professional brethren here may not do the same.

An Articled Clerk in the city thus comments upon one of the suggestions put forth by the Law Protective Association:—

On perusal of your paper I was much struck by a paragraph stating that one of the objects of the Law Protective Association would be a reduction of the Certificate Duty, and an additional duty on admissions.

Being an Articled Clerk, I, as to the proposed increase of stamp duty, feel an interest in this question.

To shew that the Legislature has considered Articled Clerks to be already sufficiently taxed, I need only refer you to the reduced amount of Certificate duty payable for the first three years after admission, a reduction not made in any other case except that of an attorney. That the Certificate Duty is an impost requiring revision every member of the Profession admits; but I do think it is too bad for a society of attorneys to endeavour to relieve themselves of an unjust burden by throwing it on another class, less able to afford it. At all events, the fair plan will be to let those parties only have the benefit of the reduced Certificate Duty who pay the increased admission duty. I think a protective association is much wanted, but its exertions should be directed for the benefit of future as well as present members of the Profession.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1844.

ADDRESS.

THE present number commences another,—the FOURTH,—volume of the LAW TIMES. It is customary on such an occasion to address a few words to friends both old and new, nor are we inclined to neglect so agreeable a duty.

As is the motto, so has been the march, of the LAW TIMES:—ONWARD!—The completed volume has exhibited continued progress in prosperity. Subscribers have steadily increased with every passing week; it has become more and more the organ of the Profession, of whose members it has been made the medium for intercommunication; and its columns of advertisements shew that its utility for the circulation of their sales and other professional announcements has been generally recognized.

Another feature which has distinguished it, since the volume commenced, is the resolution of the magistracy of many counties and of the town councils of divers cities and boroughs to advertise in its columns the notices of their sessions; a resolution which, it is to be hoped, will ere long be followed by the rest.

This great and growing favour has, we trust, been met with corresponding efforts on the part of the LAW TIMES to deserve it. Many improvements have been made during the progress of the completed volume, some taught by experience, others suggested by friends.

The Reports have been greatly extended in design and improved in execution. The system, so entirely novel, and therefore full of difficulties at first, has been brought by degrees into a much more perfect shape than was deemed to be possible until we proved its practicability. And more improvements are contemplated.

The last volume contains many papers on Practical Law which have proved extremely useful to the Profession.

Many contributors of great ability have been added to our corps; among them we may specially boast the Paris Avocat, whose articles have excited so general an interest both within and without the Profession.

In the course of that volume the abuses and malpractices existing in the Profession have been fearlessly exposed, and the way has been opened for a reform which cannot be long delayed, now that the necessity for it has become apparent.

A new feature introduced into the last volume has been the devotion of a portion of its columns weekly to the widely interesting subject of Property Law. The articles that have appeared in this department are of permanent value, and will often be resorted to by the practitioner.

So much for the past.

For the future, we can say only that we shall proceed as we have begun, adopting every practicable improvement, as zealously guarding the interests of the Profession, as fearlessly exposing abuses, as sternly rebuking wrong-doers, as industriously gathering whatever can instruct and assist the British lawyer.

And if the LAW TIMES pursue the same path, we trust it may look for the continued support of its large circle of old friends, and that they will exert themselves to introduce it to many new ones.

NOTICE.

The title-page and portion of the Index contained in the present number compel the postponement of many articles that are in type.

To those who prefer to avail themselves of the advantages of pre-payment we beg to state that the subscription for the new volume is now due.

New subscribers are informed that Vols. I. II. and III. may still be had to complete sets.

THE RECENT REVELATIONS.

Out of evil comes good. The startling revelations made in the strange affair at the Middlesex Sessions and the Central Criminal Court, however painful at the moment, are rather to be rejoiced at than otherwise, because they will compel the adoption of some decisive measures for the extirpation of a mischief which has been long secretly sapping the prosperity of the Legal Profession.

We are desirous of dealing with the great question which events have forced upon our consideration with as little reference as possible to individuals; we prefer to treat it in the abstract, assuming the existence of the evil as proved, and to direct attention to the more important inquiry—what is the remedy? It matters little to the Profession at large who may be guilty of the practices we condemn; it is enough that those practices be prevalent. Mr. Crouch may have erred; but if he have erred in common with other men, he may fairly plead their example and the custom of the court in his own extenuation. But this plea, sufficient to palliate his offence, makes it still more incumbent upon the Profession—we mean, the whole Profession in all its branches—to adopt stringent measures to extirpate a mischief which has been suffered to grow until it has become of daily occurrence. And such an effort for such an object, we believe, will not be declined by those who must feel that the character of their profession, and their own indirectly, is staked upon the issue.

What is the fact proclaimed at the Central Criminal Court? That counsel there are accustomed to accept briefs from persons who are not attorneys, contrary to the established and, let us add, most commendable etiquette of the Bar. This by-law of the Profession, which, being based upon the soundest reasons, ought to be most sedulously observed, the violation of which is generally understood to subject the violator to that most fearful of chastisements — to be shunned by his learned brethren — is, it would appear, systematically set at naught by many, though not by all, of the counsel practising at the Central Criminal Court and the Middlesex Sessions. When one is detected in this malpractice he pleads the custom of the court, and avers that the same has been, and is still, done by greater men than he. The assertion is denied by two of the magnates of the court, but others hold their peace, and do not, probably because they cannot, venture upon a contradiction. Nor, as we are informed, is the malpractice confined to the court in which the discovery was made. We are assured by friends and correspondents, on whose veracity we can rely, that it is not uncommon at the county sessions and assizes. Names and places have been detailed to us, which, however, we decline to publish, because our purpose is rather to attack the practice than the practitioner. Of the existence of the evil there cannot be a doubt. Briefs are accepted by some counsel from others than attorneys, without the indorsement of an attorney's name to verify them.

This is a great mischief, for it is a direct violation of the rules of practice. But there is another mischief, not so palpable, but much more dangerous, to which we hope attention will now be directed, and a remedy applied. It is well known that everywhere in assize and sessions towns there are persons who in truth play the parts of attorneys, and deliver briefs in the name and under the indorsement of an attorney generally resident at a distance, who is not unfrequently paid for this loan of his patronymic, he being in fact entirely unconnected with the business; the fellow to whom he has sold himself alone conducting the affair, and pocketing the profits. The extent to which this nefarious system is carried would be incredible to those who had not witnessed it, and the results are most pernicious both to the attorneys and their clients, the former being deprived of their fair profits, and the latter being pillaged by the knaves who prey upon both.

This evil is more difficult of cure than the other, because it is not so easily detected. In the former case, counsel cannot fail to know that the brief is one which he ought not to accept, for it wants the authenticity of an attorney's name. In the latter case, however strong may be his suspicions, he cannot with safety act upon them. If the indorsement be sanctioned by the attorney, counsel may not question the bona fides of its appearance: he cannot sit in judgment upon the actual relationship between the soi-disant clerk and the pretended master. Whatever his suspicions, nay, if they verge upon certainty, he may not on that account reject the brief; it bears upon itself the stamp of authenticity, and, if there be forgery, that is a question between the forger and the person whose name is forged.

Here are two mischiefs urgently demanding remedies; mischiefs of long standing, and wide extent, and daily growing. It is equally the interest as the duty of all branches of the Profession to do what they can to suppress them. To the character of the Bar they are infinitely damaging; to the attorneys they are injurious alike in practice and in person. They encourage, nay, they are the principal support of the hosts of sham lawyers who swarm everywhere, and of whose doings so voluminous a record has been preserved in the pages of the Law Times. An investigation into the extent of the evil, honestly and earnestly undertaken by the Law Societies, would, we believe, exhibit an amount of injury inflicted upon the Profession far exceeding aught that is imagined by any person. Nor are the remedies difficult to find, or to be applied. They need only honest co-operation and a little stern resolution on the part of practitioners, and the disease will die away. What are those remedies is a question upon which we have not left ourselves space to enter now. In another article they shall receive the consideration due to their importance.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

In consequence of the approach of the quarter sessions, it has been arranged that the fourth Part of Bittleston and Symons's Magistrates' Cases shall appear forthwith. This will complete the business of the last Term, and the four numbers will be sewn into a part, similar to the regular Reports, which will be supplied to members of the society at 4*s*. and sold to other persons at 6*s*., and which will contain for that price about threefold the quantity of matter contained in any other of the Reports at the same cost.

The fourth Part of the Real Property and Conveyancing Cases is in the press, and when completed, it will, with its predecessors, form a part, sewn and supplied at the same moderate prices as above stated of the Magistrates' Cases.

A second number of Cox's Criminal Law Cases is nearly ready.

In answer to repeated applications as to the Practice Cases, we have to state that the reporters have all been recruiting themselves from their fatigues, nor till their return after the vacation can we procure their notes. But then there shall be no further delay in the publication of the first part.

The Prospectus of the Text-Book on the Practice of the Law, announced some weeks ago, and the design of which appears to have received the general approval of the members of the Verulam Society, is in course of preparation; but it is a work demanding much deliberation; moreover, the Society is not yet strong enough to venture upon the cost of such a publication. As we have already stated, a less number than 750 would scarcely justify the outlay, and as yet the members enrolled amount only to 610. Accessions to the list come in almost daily, and a circular has just been transmitted to all the country solicitors, calling their attention to the Society, its nature and objects; but much more would be effected by the personal exertions of the present members. If each one would make it his business to see the attorneys in his neighbourhood, and prevail upon them to join the Society, a few weeks, nay, a few days, would behold it strong enough to undertake, not only the important practical work projected, but a large series of useful text-books, which only wait the means to be begun.

May we request those of the members who have not yet paid their entrance fee and subscription to transmit them with their half-yearly payment for the Law Times, now due, as the demands upon the funds are necessarily very heavy?

The following new members have been enrolled during the last week:—

Jones, R. Parry, Whitchurch, Salop.
Gunning and Francis, Messrs. Cambridge.
Taylor, Thos. Fred. Wigan.
Hilton, Caleb, Wigan.
Godwin, Benj. C. Winchester.

ALTERATIONS IN THE LAW
By 7 & 8 Vict. Cap. 96.
No. II.

Assignees.—Before proceeding to notice the difficult question respecting the liability of the insolvent's future estate, we must observe that the assignees are now declared "to be officers of the Court, and liable to the control thereof" (sec. 4), and that although, by sec. 35, provision is made for the remuneration of the official assignee, there is none made for the remuneration of the creditor's assignee, as in 1 & 2 Viet. c. 110, s. 45. This is an important omission, since, in Appleby v. Duke (13 L. J. 10 C. C.), Lord Lyndhurst held that the provisional assignee of an insolvent debtor who had been made a party in a foreclosure suit was not entitled to costs, although he stated in his answer that he had no interest and no assets. The property is in all cases to be received by the official assignee (sec. 4).

Liability of future estate.—It is not a little singular that one of the principal questions which must arise in every case of insolvency, should have been left in doubt by this Act. Knowing that the general object of the Act was to assimilate the proceedings in insolvency and bankruptcy, and to give the like privileges to the honest non-trader as the trader has long possessed, we felt, at the first perusal of the Act, little doubt that the future property of the insolvent was freed from liability in respect of debts included in the petition and schedule. We find, however, that both Mr. Homes and Mr. Horry take a different view, and we certainly admit that the point is by no means clear.

The question stands thus: By the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, all property acquired by the insolvent after the final order became vested in the assignees, upon their filing a copy of their claim, and serving a notice thereof upon him, although possession could not be taken by them without an order from the commissioner or the Court of Review. By sec. 73 of the present Act, it is declared that the provisions of the two Acts are to be construed by analogy to the law of bankruptcy, except where otherwise expressed; and by sec. 74, that nothing shall be construed to repeal, affect, or in any manner alter the provisions of the former Act, except so far as is expressly provided, or except so far as the provisions of the said recited Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 116) may be inconsistent with or at variance with the provisions of this Act.

We must look, therefore, to the words of the new Act. Now sec. 4 enacts that the "property of the petitioner shall, for the purposes of the said recited Act and this Act, rest in the assignee for the time being;" but the word "property" is defined in sec. 73 as follows:—

"And be it enacted, That in construing this Act, the word property shall mean and include all the real and personal estate and effects of the petitioner within this realm and abroad (except the wearing apparel and such other articles of the value in that behalf aforesaid, as may by this Act be excepted from the operation of the said recited Act and this Act), and all the future estate, right, title, interest, and trust of such petitioner in or to any real or personal estate and effects within this realm or abroad, which such petitioner may purchase, or which may revert, descend, be devised, or bequeathed, or come to him before he shall have obtained the final order, and all debts due or to be due to such petitioner before he shall have obtained such final order."

The effect of this interpretation clause, therefore, is that only the property as therein described is by this Act vested in the assignee; and since no fresh enactment to this effect was necessary, as the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116 would by itself have given still larger powers, it may well be argued that this clause "is inconsistent with and at variance with" the former Act. It clearly is so as to the time of the vesting of the property, for now every assignee takes immediately upon his appointment (sec. 4), while before, the title of the creditor's assignee was dependent upon the final order. Mr. Horry feels this difficulty, but gets over it by a curious suggestion, which seems to admit that the argument against his view cannot be answered as the Act stands. He says (p. 66, n.)—"Quære, ought not the words 'before he shall have obtained his final order, and all debts,' &c. to be inserted after the word 'abroad,' and the word 'after' to be substituted for 'before,' in the subsequent sentence?" Such a transposition would, as it seems to us, be an unheard of tampering with the words of a statute, which the courts now more than ever endeavour to interpret according to its plain grammatical meaning. But, moreover, sec. 73 says that the two Acts are to "be construed by analogy to the law of bankruptcy, except where otherwise therein respectively expressed, and in the most beneficial manner for promoting the ends intended by the said recited Act and by this Act." We are aware that it may be still said that this throws no light upon the question, because the whole turns upon what is "otherwise." But we think it may be referred to, as shewing that the ends were to put the non-trader on a footing with the trader. It is not a little remarkable that sec. 15, which enables the creditors to obtain possession of any stocks, &c. to which the petitioner is beneficially entitled, is expressly limited to stocks, &c. to which he may be entitled "before" the final order; and there are no means pointed out by which stocks, &c. belonging to the insolvent after the final order could be touched. Under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, the judgment upon the warrant of attorney would have been effectual for this purpose. Does not sec. 15 shew, therefore, that the future property is not to be liable? We would further observe that by the Debtors and Creditors Act (7 & 8 Vict. cap. 70) the future property is protected. (Sec. 13.) We are very desirous to see the decision of the commissioners upon this subject; for at present we cannot feel satisfied with the views expressed by Mr. Horry and Mr. Homes.

Evidence.—We class sec. 37 among the alterations, not because we really think that the construction which may be put upon it was either intended or will be adopted, but merely to point out that there is a verbal alteration which requires consideration. It is as follows.

"37. Proceedings, or a copy thereof, duly signed, receivable in evidence.—And be it enacted, That any petition for protection from process, and any proceeding in the matter of such petition purporting to be signed by a commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, or a copy of such petition or other proceeding purporting to be so signed, shall in all cases be receivable in evidence of such proceedings having respectively taken place."

Now this does not, we think, shew with sufficient clearness whether the copy is to purport to be signed or not, although we can hardly believe that a mere copy made by any one would be receivable in evidence under this section. It would have been easy to have observed the wording of 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 114, which requires a copy "purporting to be sealed" with the seal of the court. We shall in a future number point out the alterations in the law of bankruptcy and execution by this important but hastily drawn statute.

LECTURES ON MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.

By Alfred S. Taylor.

Delivered at Guy's Hospital, 1844.

Lecture III.

We have now to consider the diseases the symptoms of which resemble those of poisoning. These are principally cholera, gastritis, enteritis, peritonitis, hæmatemesis, colic. And, first, with respect to cholera: it is necessary to distinguish the common English from the Asiatic variety. In what is termed Asiatic cholera there is always sudden and extreme prostration of strength; the surface of the body is very cold, and sometimes has a dark livid or leaden hue, especially observed in the extremities of the hands and feet: the breath is also cold as it issues from the mouth; the matters discharged from the bowels are very copious, and resemble rice-water, with flakes of coagulated mucus floating in them. Besides this, there is the most intense thirst, and the patients will drink large quantities of cold water. This symptom—intense thirst—exists in poisoning by arsenic, but the symptoms of poisoning by arsenic, with this exception, are wholly different from those of cholera. In the common form, cholera, as it occurs in the summer and autumn, closely resembles arsenical poisoning in its symptoms. Thus, an attack often occurs soon after a meal, and is accompanied by vomiting, purging, and by violent pain in the abdomen, continuing till death where the case terminates fatally. Many acquittals on criminal trials have taken place in consequence of the great difficulty of distinguishing cholera from arsenical poisoning; and this is perhaps the most successful objection which can be taken to the medical evidence; and if the medical evidence rested on the symptoms alone, it would be almost impossible to draw such a diagnosis as the law would deem satisfactory for a conviction on a charge of poisoning.

The rules for forming a diagnosis as they are laid down by toxicological writers are by no means satisfactory. In irritant poisoning the evacuations are often tinged with blood, which is especially the case where arsenic is the poison. In cholera they rarely contain blood, but they are tinged with bile. In irritant poisoning these evacuated liquids will sooner or later yield traces of poison when analyzed, but this is not so in cholera. We shall see in the lectures on arsenic that there is a most ready mode of discovering the poison in a few minutes, in a very small quantity of animal matter. Persons do not often die of an attack of English cholera, and when the disease proves fatal, it is commonly after three or four days from its commencement. In arsenical poisoning death is the common result within twenty-four hours, when the symptoms produced are such as to have resembled cholera. We may remark that with regard to cholera it is often intimately connected with the drinking of acid or cold liquids, or the eating of acid fruits. In arsenical poisoning the symptoms come on in about half an hour after the meal at which poison has been taken; and although cholera may commence its attack about the same time, all persons who have partaken of the same food will suffer more or less, if it be really a case of poisoning, but not if it be a case of cholera. An analysis of the food, if it be supposed that that has caused the symptoms, will serve to determine whether they are owing to the disease or to poison. As arsenic affects the mucous membrane, so arsenical poisoning is often indicated by special symptoms. Thus in persons who have taken arsenic, and who have survived the first effects of the poison, the conjunctivæ of the eyes become inflamed, and the eyelids become swollen; there is also great cutaneous irritation, followed by a peculiar kind of herpetic eruption of the skin, which some persons have called "eczema arsenicale." We find also occasionally other symptoms, such as paralysis and coma. An analysis of the contents of the stomach or of the soft organs, when a person dies, will remove any doubts that may have previously existed on the real nature of the case.

There are three other diseases which have been thrown out as objections to medical evidence in cases of arsenical poisoning: they are, gastritis, enteritis, and peritonitis. These diseases do not commonly occur without some very obvious cause; indeed, the two first, gastritis and enteritis, are the direct results of the action of irritant poison.

Thus arsenic produces these two diseases, gastritis and enteritis. The diagnosis will rest, firstly, upon the time of the occurrence of the symptoms after a meal; secondly, the order in which they occur; thirdly, the obstinate constipation of the bowels which is observed in gastritis and enteritis, while diarrhœa is met with in arsenical poisoning; fourthly, the presence of fever in these diseases, and though this sometimes exists in arsenical poisoning, it is only in the protracted cases; fifthly, the history of the case so clearly explains its nature that we never hear of these diseases being mistaken for arsenical poisoning. The same observation applies to peritonitis, in which disease there is also constipation and but little vomiting. Perforation of the stomach and intestines may resemble irritant poisoning, but in these cases there is always an opportunity of making a post mortem examination; hence no difficulty exists in determining the real nature of the case; the real difficulty is in those cases where we cannot examine the interior of the body. Colic can only be confounded with one variety of irritant poisoning, namely, that induced by the salts of lead. But it is to be observed that the poisonous salts of lead are very rarely used criminally, and when they are taken in sufficiently large doses to kill with rapidity, the symptoms resembling colic are mixed up with those of irritant poisoning, so as to render it impossible for a skilful practitioner to refer them to that disease alone. With regard to hæmatemesis, this affection so little resembles a case of arsenical poisoning that it cannot easily be mistaken. In hæmatemesis there is neither pain nor diarrhœa, and there is a copious discharge of blood by vomiting. Strangulated hernia is said to have been mistaken for a case of irritant poisoning; but this is hardly possible, because an examination of the person will immediately remove any doubt. Such, then, are the diseases that resemble irritant poisoning.

With regard to narcotic poison, you will be asked the question—what diseases resemble the effects of narcotic poisons? They are apoplexy, epilepsy, diseases of the brain, of the heart, and, indeed, all diseases that destroy life suddenly, whatever their seat or whatever their nature. These causes of sudden death are in general organic diseases of the heart, and the large vessels about the heart; also rupture of the stomach, and others of a like nature. With regard to apoplexy, narcotic poisons, of which we may take opium as the type, actually seem to produce this diseased condition of the brain. The diagnosis between apoplexy from disease and from poisoning is extremely difficult, unless we obtain a full history of the case. The following circumstances require notice in the diagnosis: first, apoplexy, as a disease, is sometimes preceded by warning symptoms before a fatal attack comes on; secondly, it very rarely occurs in persons under the age of thirty; but there are exceptions to this; thirdly, the relation between the time of the attack and the time at which the food or medicine is last taken. Thus, if the comatose symptoms do not come on till five or six hours after abstinence from food, then it is very likely to be apoplexy from disease, and not from poison; fourthly, in apoplexy from disease, coma is at once induced; but in all those cases that result from the effects of narcotic poisons, we find coma comes on as a secondary symptom to stupor and vertigo. Besides this, the discovery of poison in the food or contents of the stomach will assist in establishing the fact of poisoning.

With regard to epilepsy, this resembles poisoning by one substance only, namely, hydrocyanic acid. If the symptoms really depend on poisoning, it is certain that some liquid or substance must have been taken immediately before their occurrence; and then by an inquiry it is easy to settle the question of poisoning; because if they come on after four, or five, or six hours' abstinence, it is quite impossible that they could depend on the results of poisoning. With regard to strychnia, the symptoms produced by this poison may be confounded with tetanus; but, fortunately, it is very little known, and is not made use of for criminal purposes. There has been one such case, where it is alleged that a young lady was poisoned by strychnia, in order that the party guilty of her murder might obtain the payment of a policy of insurance on her life. The individual lost the action which he brought to recover the money, and he fled the country, and has not been heard of since. It is not likely that we shall often meet with a case of this sort; but we must remember that the disease tetanus closely resembles the symptoms of poisoning by strychnia. There is, however, this distinction, that the symptoms of strychnia must come on almost immediately after the poison has been taken; whereas if they supervene after two or three hours' abstinence, we must refer them to disease.

There are many diseases of the heart and stomach that resemble the effects of narcotic poisoning, and destroy life; but there is, or ought to be, always an opportunity for a post mortem examination in every case of sudden death, and we should never pronounce an opinion at an inquest without insisting upon an examination of the interior of the body. Rupture of the stomach sometimes happens from over-distension of the organ by food; an accident which occasionally occurs; but the fatal symptoms always appear very suddenly, and the individual speedily dies. A case of this description often comes before coroners as matter of inquiry as to the cause of the sudden death of the individual, which turns out to be merely distension of the stomach, without rupture: this is of itself quite sufficient to cause sudden death. The distension may take place from a very full meal, inducing apoplexy. Many of these cases have occurred where persons apparently in health have been found dead, who have gone to bed after eating a hearty supper. There has been found, on examination of the body in these cases, no organic lesion in any part, and nothing to account for death, but an extreme distension of the stomach, and, in some cases, congestion of the brain.

Now, the best means of determining the cause of death, whether it has been from poison or otherwise, is an examination of the dead body. It was formerly supposed, and it is now even a matter of belief among many persons, that the bodies of persons when poisoned become speedily livid and swollen, and then go rapidly into a state of putrefaction. This is a very erroneous opinion, for the bodies of persons who have died from poisoning undergo no change beyond what would result from any other cause of death. In a trial that took place thirty years ago, the absence of putrefaction in the body was said to furnish negative evidence that poison had not been administered. In the present day, no well-informed practitioner would found an opinion upon such a loose assumption as this. Some poisons which were formerly supposed to possess this property have been proved recently to have exactly the reverse effect. In the case of Mrs. Smith, who was poisoned by arsenic in Bristol, in 1835, after the lapse of fourteen months, that part of the alimentary canal where the poison was most abundantly found was extremely well preserved. In some experiments with arsenic on the bodies of animals which had been buried for two or three years underground, I found that the stomach and the duodenum were entirely preserved, while all the rest of the body was in a state of decomposition. The more distant parts, only, of the body were decomposed. This antiseptic effect of arsenic is chiefly to be seen in those structures with which the poison is in immediate contact; although there is no doubt that arsenic is absorbed and penetrates even to the fingers and toes of the person who has taken it; yet where the person dies in a few hours, the quantity that is absorbed is not sufficient to exert this antiseptic power. This is important in a medico-legal point of view. Arsenic may be thus detected in the bodies of individuals who have been buried five, six, or seven years. It may be observed, that all other poisons do not possess similar antiseptic properties, though they do not accelerate the process of putrefaction; hydrocyanic acid, for instance. In some instances putrefaction has appeared to be accelerated, and there have been other cases where it has been retarded. If a medical jurist were to be asked the question, Could poisons in general have any influence on the progress of putrefaction? the answer would be that, as far as experience enables us to judge, it seems, with the exception of arsenic, to be very doubtful.

In relation to the internal appearances, it may be proper to state, that the effects of poisons on the living body are not such as, when taken by themselves, will yield satisfactory evidence of their having been exhibited. In the opinion of Dr. Christison and some other medical jurists, there is an exception to this rule when strong sulphuric acid or nitric acid has been taken, in which case the dark carbonized or intense yellow appearance of the stomach is considered to be quite characteristic; that is to say, if we had a body brought before us, and opened it, without hearing any thing of the particulars, we might be able to pronounce from the appearances that the individual had been poisoned by a mineral acid. Dr. Christison restricts his view on this point to the action of sulphuric and nitric acids. Now, certainly, a dark, carbonized appearance of the mucous membrane, like that caused by sulphuric acid, and an orange-yellow colour, like that in poisoning by nitric acid, are conditions that do not arise under any circumstances from disease; that is to say, no disease will produce these effects within ten or twelve hours; but unless the body present some other substantial proofs of poisoning, a medical jurist will be scarcely justified in ascribing this appearance entirely to poison. It is true that in poisoning by sulphuric acid, we are more entitled to speak from appearances than in many other cases. Sometimes, it should be observed, the stomach will present a dark appearance when no poison has been taken. As in the case of melanosis, we may have a patch of black extravasated matter over the mucous membrane, though not attended by any inflammation; but when it does arise from poison, we commonly find the marks of inflammation besides. A case which created some embarrassment was that of a female in a noble family, who died somewhat suddenly under suspicious circumstances, two or three years ago. She had been unwell for about three weeks, and was subject to occasional vomiting and disturbances of the stomach. Still her illness was so slight, that it did not in the least interfere with the performance of her usual duties. One afternoon about four o'clock, and about three hours after her last meal, she was suddenly seized with the most excruciating pain in the abdomen, and violent vomiting. Her skin was cold and clammy, and the abdomen tender and painful. It was suspected that she had taken poison, and magnesia and sulphate of magnesia were given to her. No poison was found in the room, and she strongly denied the imputation. The symptoms became worse, the vomiting more violent, and she died the following morning, about fifteen hours after her first seizure. On inspection, all the organs were found healthy, except those of the abdomen. There were here strong marks of peritoneal inflammation: the intestines were loosely adherent to each other, and a quantity of lymph was effused around them. The cavity contained about a pint of liquid, which had escaped from an aperture in the stomach. This liquid was reserved for analysis. The stomach was laid open by making an incision along its great curvature. It was empty. At the upper and posterior part, near the pyloric end of the smaller curvature, was an opening of an oval shape, about half an inch in its longest diameter. The edges were firm, hard, and smooth, presenting not the least appearance of laceration or ulceration. They were bevelled off from within outwards, being thinned towards the peritoneal coat, the aperture in which was much smaller than that in the mucous membrane. There was no sign of inflammation in the membranes around; but the peritoneum, about the edge of the aperture, had a black appearance, and the coats of the stomach were thickened. At the lower part, near the larger curvature, there were thick, irregular, black striæ, the mucous membrane being raised and blackened, but not softened. These striæ appeared like those produced by sulphuric acid; but there was no corrosion, and on applying test-paper there was no acid reaction. The black matter was interspersed with a yellowish-coloured substance. This turned out, on investigation, to be a case of death from perforation of the stomach, owing to disease, and not from poison.

The two great classes of poisons that are most liable to be mistaken for disease, in their effects on the living body, are the narcotics and the narcotic irritants. The action of irritant poisons is chiefly confined to the alimentary canal and the intestines, which they corrode and inflame. Other organs of the body often participate in this mischief. The corrosive irritants are not absorbed, and they only act on the structure with which they come in contact. The post mortem appearances left by narcotic poisons are generally extremely slight, and are chiefly fulness of the cerebral vessels. Now, an important question sometimes put to a medical jurist, is this: Can a person die of arsenic, and no striking change be found in the stomach? The answer must be in the affirmative. Then it will be inquired, What are the morbid appearances that result from irritant poisons? They are redness, ulceration, softening, and perforation. The most important effect produced by irritant poisons is an inflammatory redness, which is either confined to the part immediately affected by the poison, or it may be extended over the whole surface of the membrane. In the case of arsenical poisoning, it is often confined to the rugæ of the stomach; in other instances the whole of the mucous membrane participates in the inflammation. The colour may vary from crimson to a blood-red. In poisoning by arsenic, when the body is first opened, the colour is rather of a crimson tint; it is something like red currant juice spread over the mucous membrane. Sometimes, in irritant poisoning, blood is extravasated, giving to the membrane a dark colour. This has been mistaken for gangrene, but Sir B. Brodie first pointed out the error. The effect of irritant poisons is to turn the blood a dark brown colour. Now where is the redness most commonly found in arsenical or irritant poisoning? In general at the great extremity of the stomach; but it may be met with all over. Within what time after poison has been taken is the earliest period at which the redness may appear? This is a question which may be properly put to a medical witness where an individual has died of arsenic, and the stomach is found inflamed, and where the doubt may be whether the inflammation be due to natural causes or to poison. We are here fortunately in a position to give a decisive answer. Arsenic has been known to produce strong inflammatory redness of the whole mucous membrane of the stomach within two hours after it has been taken. That is the earliest time known, but we are not justified in saying that it might not occur within one hour.

Now there is a very important class of cases that ought to be pointed out as rendering great caution necessary in forming a judgment upon the state of the stomach; they are cases where the redness of the mucous membrane of the stomach, as it is found after death, depends on causes but little understood. Several of these cases have occurred in the hospital, and records of four of them have been kept in which the mucous membrane was extensively reddened; but in none of them were there any symptoms of disease during life. It is very difficult to account for such cases, and when, as in the instances just mentioned, they occur without presenting any symptoms of disorder of the stomach, they claim the most serious attention. With regard to the redness produced by cadaverous infiltration, I do not think that that requires any particular observation, for it is not likely to be mistaken by a practitioner for arsenical poisoning. With regard to gastritis and enteritis, they present appearances in the abdominal viscera that cannot be always distinguished from irritant poisoning. The morbid changes produced by poisoning can seldom be confounded with putrefaction, and with respect to the period of time upon which we can rely upon these changes as evidence of poisoning, it is impossible to give a definite answer to such a question. It must depend upon the exposure of the body, the degree to which putrefaction has advanced, and many other circumstances that will suggest themselves upon an examination. With regard to arsenic, Dr. Christison gives an instance in which he was fully able to rely on the post mortem appearances as proof of poisoning three weeks after the death of the individual, and there is no doubt evidence may be obtained at a still longer period than this. In the case of Captain Donellan, who poisoned his brother-in-law, Sir T. Boughton (Warwick Ass. 1782), it was stated in evidence that the stomach and viscera of the deceased were red, and presented the appearance of inflammation. In answer to a question put to him on the subject, the Crown witness, Dr. Grattray, said, that the post mortem appearances confirmed his opinion of poisoning by laurel-water, so far as he might be allowed to form a judgment upon appearances so long after death. This very ambiguous answer led to the following cross-examination by the counsel for the prisoner. "Q. By your putting your answer in that way, do you or do you not mean to say that all judgment in such a case is unfounded? A. I cannot say that; because, from the analogy between the appearances in that body and those distinguishable in animals killed by the poison I have just mentioned, I think them so much alike, that I am rather confirmed in my opinion with respect to the operation of the draught. Q. Those bodies were instantaneously opened? A. Yes; so much so, that there was the peristaltic motion of the bowels upon their being pricked. Q. This examination was made upon the eleventh day after Sir Theodosius's death?" There the witness was obliged to admit this, and the counsel properly objected to the evidence, because the witness compared the appearances found in the bodies of animals immediately after they had been killed by poison, with those met with in the stomach of a person who had died eleven days before, when it was obvious that they must have depended on very different causes. It was clear that no professional person ought to have made such a comparison. The evidence, therefore, went for nothing.

With regard to ulceration, this condition of the mucous membrane is of rare occurrence; and though it is sometimes the effect of poisoning, it is much more commonly the result of disease. In ulceration produced by poisoning, the membrane, besides being reddened, is raised up in small circular patches like fungoid excrescences. Sometimes the portion raised up is well defined; it is of a darker colour than the surrounding surface, and on it we find the poison. This is very important to notice, because it is on this we found the diagnosis. If we are asked to say whether there is any thing peculiarly different in the ulceration from disease and that from poisoning, we are obliged to confess that there is not; the appearance is the same in the two cases, though in the case of ulceration from poisoning such changes are accompanied by other symptoms which tend to fix the diagnosis. The history of the case, however, is the only certain criterion upon which to found a medical opinion. Care must be taken to distinguish ulceration from corrosion. Ulceration is a vital process, the substance of a part is removed by the absorbents as a simple result of inflammation. Corrosion, on the other hand, is a chemical action; the parts are destroyed by the immediate contact of the corrosive substance: they are decomposed, and deprived of their vitality. Ulceration requires time for its establishment, while corrosion is generally an instantaneous effect. Ulceration, as the result of disease, is confined to small circular patches, situated about the lesser curvature, gradually destroying the coats of the stomach. A man in Guy's Hospital died many years ago, and there was no reason to suspect that there was any disease of the stomach existing at the time of his death; there was nothing at all to indicate that he was labouring under disease of this description, and he died in the hospital from some disease of the kidney. On examining the body, attention was directed to the stomach, and it was found that the whole of the mucous membrane was in a state of inflammation, and that one portion of it was removed by ulceration, resembling very closely the effects produced by irritant poison. This case shews that the mere condition of the stomach is not sufficient to justify us in pronouncing an opinion, unless we know something of the history of the individual's complaint. How should we distinguish such a case? The symptoms during life may be very trivial, or there may be none at all to direct our attention to the stomach. Supposing such effects depend on irritant poison, it is utterly impossible that the individual during life should have gone on without exhibiting some symptoms of the effects. Ulceration of the stomach from disease is a very slow and insidious process, without any well-marked symptoms, and unless perforation ensues, we may probably know nothing of its existence. Ulceration does not take place from arsenical poisoning until some previous symptoms have occurred. In a case of arsenical poisoning the question is sometimes asked, What period is required for ulceration to take place as an effect of this poison? Now you will observe, ulceration is by no means a common, and never an immediate, effect of arsenical poisoning. We very seldom meet with cases where ulceration exists until twenty-four or thirty-six hours from the time that the poison was taken; but in a case of murder by arsenic, which occurred a few years ago, the ulceration had taken place within ten hours, the earliest period yet recorded.

Another condition of the stomach is softening. The parietes of the stomach are sometimes found so soft as easily to yield and break down under pressure, and this may be the result either of poisoning, or of some spontaneous morbid change in its structure. As this change in the stomach, when caused by poison, is commonly produced by those substances only which possess corrosive properties, it follows that, in such cases, traces of their action will be found in the mouth, fauces, and œsophagus. In softening from disease, the change will be confined to the stomach alone. When softening takes place from irritant poison, it is generally attended by other striking and unambiguous marks of its operation. Softening is not to be regarded as a character of poisoning; it is only an occasional appearance, and as a general rule, we ought to say, that softening is no evidence of poison, unless we have at the same time poison in the softened part of the organ. Where softening is produced by poison, it is by chemical action. Sometimes the stomach becomes preternaturally hardened and thickened. This result happened in a case of poisoning by sulphuric acid that occurred in the hospital some years ago. We do not, however, always find that: instead of the stomach being softened, and easily broken down under pressure, we find it extremely tough, and the whole of the mucous membrane exceedingly corrugated. In either case we generally find traces of the poison in the part affected, if this appearance of the stomach has really been produced by poison.

Now the last condition of the stomach which we have to notice is perforation. Perforation by poison is comparatively rare, and it may occur in two ways,—by corrosion, or by ulceration. Perforation by corrosion is the most common variety of perforation by poisoning. Some time since a brewer's clerk took some oil of vitriol, the stomach was entirely destroyed, and there was extensive perforation manifest on examining the body. In cases of perforation by corrosion, death very speedily takes place. The best means of detecting it is by an examination of the mouth, fauces, and œsophagus. Nitric acid is said to have produced perforation in one instance; but it is very rarely taken as a poison. There is only one single case on record of oxalic acid having produced perforation, and only one in which corrosive sublimate has been attended with the same result. The caustic alkalies have produced it in animals, but there is not one instance of their having produced perforation by corrosion in the human subject. Dr. Christison met with only one case of perforation as a result of the action of arsenic, and two others are recorded, one of which occurred in America, and the other in France. Cases of this kind produce no ambiguity, because the symptoms of poisoning will always be present before perforation takes place.

THE MONEY MARKET.

Friday.—The Funds are still high, and some good purchases have been made in New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents. for the opening, so that the market value of that security is about 102⅞ to 103⅛. The Commissioners have given 100¾ for their parcel of Consols, and for time the rates have advanced to 100⅝ ¾. Exchequer Bills are steady, at 74s. to 76s. premium. Nothing has been done in Bank or India Stocks, and the market looks very quiet.

The Foreign Investments are also very inactive. Dutch Bonds have been very firm; the Two-and-a-Half per Cents. at 62½ to 62⅝, and the Five per Cents. at 98⅞ to 98. The conversion plans seem to be favourably construed. Spanish Active Bonds are 24½, and the Three per Cents. 35½ to ⅝. Portuguese Converted obtain 49. Mexican are 35⅛, and Colombian 14⅞. Brazil Stock is 87½.

For Railway Shares, there is a fair market generally; and where holders yield a little, sales are not difficult to effect. The French lines are looking up. Joint-stock Banks and Mines continue dull.

The Chipchase estate, which was offered for sale by Messrs. Small and Brough, one day last week, was put up at 30,000*l.* exclusive of the wood, and, after the biddings had gone to 35,000*l.* it was bought in at the reserved sum of 55,000*l.* The last offer was made by John Hodgson Hinde, esq. M.P. for this town.—Newcastle Journal.

Profits of Timber on Estates.—The late Mr. Fleming, of Hampshire.—This gentleman was one of the largest landed proprietors in the county, owning at his death 15,000 acres, and so richly wooded has it always been that he is supposed to have cut no less than 300,000*l.* of timber, from first to last, and yet left the whole as full as the land will bear. Mr. Fleming's expenditure in the town and neighbourhood of Southampton averaged 18,000*l.* a year, and immediately after his departure for the Mediterranean the loss of such a large expenditure was most sensibly felt.—Hants Advertiser.

Public Sales.

By Messrs. FAREBROTHER, CLARKE, and LYE, at Garraway's.

A freehold estate called "Dargate," in Kent, consisting of a superior residence, spacious yards, with farming buildings of every description; oast-house, cottages for labourers, and sundry enclosures of pasture and arable lands, hop-gardens, and fruit plantations, lying compact, and containing 193a. 1r. 32p. situate in the parish of Herne-hill, about three miles from Faversham, from whence produce is shipped for the London markets; eight to Canterbury, and ten to Sittingbourne, in one of the richest farming, grazing, and hop districts of the county of Kent. The estimated value of the entire property, including the residence, is 500 guineas. The above property was sold under a fiat in bankruptcy. The annual land-tax amounts to only a few shillings—sold for 13,000*l.*

The beautiful freehold estate of Gattonside, situate about a mile from, and in the parish of Melrose, Roxburghshire, on the north bank of the River Tweed, in the most admired part of the south of Scotland, consisting of a capital stone-built mansion of handsome elevation, with every description of domestic offices, coach-house, and stabling, capital walled garden of about two acres, and lawns sloping to the River Tweed, with extensive and highly ornamental plantations, also suitable farming buildings and upwards of 300 acres of productive land. The estate commands views of the richest scenery, including the valley and river, with the ornamental suspension-bridge, the celebrated Abbey of Melrose, and the far-famed Eildon hills. The estimated value is 425*l.* per annum—10,400*l.*

The absolute reversion on the death of a widow lady, aged 70 years in October next, to the principal sum of 1,000*l.* charged upon freehold estates in Somerset, containing about 640 acres—700*l.*

ADMIRALTY COURT.

THE EMMA.

The rule of the High Court of Admiralty is, that both in cases of salvage and collision protest should always be produced. No distinction is drawn between salvage to the ship and salvage to the cargo. The practice of the Court, is to take the whole value of both ship and cargo, and assess proportionably on the two.

Where the cargo consists of different commodities, no distinction is drawn between one sort and another, except in the case of bullion, for the salvage of which, being an article easily preserved, a lower remuneration is granted than for more bulky merchandise.

On the merits of the present case the tender is held insufficient.

This was a suit by twenty-two boatmen belonging to the port of Margate against the owners of the cargo and freight of the barque Emma for salvage remuneration.

The barque, on the 18th of October, having met with rough weather, lost two anchors and cables, and was drifting on the Nayland Rock. The boatmen had put out their lugger for the purpose of rendering assistance to vessels in distress, a stiff gale blowing from the N.W. They almost immediately met with the barque, and attempted to board her, but she kept drifting on, and, it seems, was only prevented from destroying the lugger by striking on the rock. There she remained in great danger of being beaten to pieces. The services of the salvors were then offered and accepted, and they were continued from the 18th to the 20th. The master and crew abandoned the barque, and got into the lugger. On the morning of the 20th, the agent of the owners and underwriters went down and made an arrangement with the salvors, and they continued their services for several days. An agreement was subsequently concluded between the owners of the ship and the salvors as to the amount of remuneration due for the services rendered to the ship, and the Court was not now called upon to allot salvage for the ship, but merely for the freight and cargo, the value of which was 3,000*l.* The tender of 250*l.* as salvage on that sum was made and refused.

Sir J. Dodson, Q.A. and Haggard, for the salvors.

Addams and Bayford, for the owners.

Dr. LUSHINGTON.—I will avail myself of this opportunity for expressing my opinion with regard to the production of protests. This certainly is a case in which, according to all ordinary practices and experience, a protest would have been made, and would have been produced; and perhaps the non-production of such protest becomes rather more extraordinary, when I compare the affidavit of the master and the affidavit of the mate—the affidavit of the latter being infinitely more full than that of the former. But with regard to the production of protests generally, I have always understood the rule and principle of this Court to be—and I am now applying it to cases of salvage—that they ought to be produced, and for the following reasons:—In the first place, because every protest ought to be made recenti facto, and ought to contain an account of the transaction when the facts are fresh in the memories of the witnesses, whereas the discussion as to the nature and extent of the salvage services, and the evidence taken on it, cannot be produced till a late period, when even those inclined to speak with the most perfect accuracy may find that memory fails them with respect to certain important points. Now that is one reason why a protest is required; but there is another, which has been adverted to by Dr. Addams, putting his argument in a different point of view, which always strikes me as one of the most important reasons, not for keeping it back, but for its production—viz. the protest is made alio intuitu. The first and primary object of the protest is ordinarily to found a claim against the underwriters for damage done, and generally the object of the parties is to state all the facts, and every thing which has happened to the ship, so as to lay the foundation of the most extensive claim, whereas when they come before a court, such as the present court is, for the purpose of adjusting the amount of reward, then the state of things is reversed, the state of danger is diminished, the extent of damage depreciated, and the degree of danger decried. It is, therefore, exceedingly desirable, much more in cases of salvage than in cases of collision, though it is also desirable there, that the protest should always be produced. Now, before I address myself to the particular circumstances of this individual case, I cannot but notice an argument which has been strongly and ably pressed upon the Court with regard to the differences which may subsist between the salvage to be assessed upon the ship and that upon the cargo. It has arisen from the following circumstances, which occur in this case, viz.—that the owners of the ship have made an arrangement with the salvors, and have given to them the sum of 60*l.* upon a value of 500*l.*, being 12 per cent. upon the value; and in order to induce me not to adopt the reasoning on behalf of the salvors, that that was a fair proportion on the value, it has been contended that there may be a distinction between the services rendered to the ship, and to the cargo—that the services rendered to the latter may be of a weaker kind, and that a less rate of salvage may be due on account of the cargo than on account of the ship. In the first place, I must observe that my judgment is not, and cannot be, in the slightest degree ruled or governed by any thing that has been done out of court, between the salvors and the owners of the ship. I shall look at this case just exactly the same as if no agreement had taken place between the owners of the ship and the salvors, because there are so many reasons in a case of this description why, though the act is done by the common consent of the parties, it may not form a fair estimate of the real value of the services, so that I never can think of adopting that as a rule for my guidance. In the first place, the small value of the ship, the desire of saving expenses of litigation, the desire to get the matter settled with due expedition, without waiting the result of a judgment from this Court—all these are motives and reasons to disturb a fair adjustment and balance. Though I may look at it as an ingredient in the case, undoubtedly it can never govern my judgment. But an agreement has been addressed to the Court, which if it were founded in truth, and in the ancient law and practice of this Court, would lead to very important results. It was urged in the end of the speech of the learned counsel who addressed the Court last, that, independently of the general liability of the cargo, the Court might look to the services rendered to the ship, and those rendered to the cargo, separate and apart. Much stress was laid on the nature and description of the cargo, and its present liability to damage from being wetted in the water. Now the ordinary habit and practice of the Court, which is well known to every person that has practised in it, is, to take the whole value of the ship and cargo, and assess upon the whole, each paying in proportion. I am not aware, except in the instance to which I am about to advert, that any distinction has ever been taken so as to say that the services were of greater importance to the ship than they were to the cargo, and therefore the ship should bear the larger burden, or vice versâ. The distinction would lead in many cases to intricate litigation, and to nice distinctions, which it would be exceedingly difficult to adjust. A fortiori, I never knew this—that distinctions had been made as to the kind of cargo, because what would be the result of making such a distinction? The cargo might have consisted partly of wood, which is not liable easily to be injured by the access of water; and it might have consisted partly of cotton, flour, or sugar, which might have been destroyed. It would lead then into nice examinations of the quality of the cargo, and how far the one sort suffered a greater risk of being damaged than the other. In fact, it would be an endless consideration. There is only one case in which the Court ever, in my recollection, has taken the distinction—wisely and properly taken it—and that is in the case of silver or bullion—that being an article easily preserved. In these cases, the Court has allotted a less proportion than in cases of bulky merchandise. The way in which I must consider the present case is this to add the 500*l.* the value of ship, to the 3,000*l.* the value of the cargo and freight, and say what ought to be the reward paid to these salvors out of the whole 3,500*l.*, each part, of course, bearing its proportion. With regard to the service itself, I think it has most properly not been denied that in the first instance it was of a very meritorious character, because this vessel went out for the purpose of rendering assistance to ships in distress, on the 18th of October, when the wind was blowing a strong gale from the N.W. and when there was reason to apprehend that the assistance which a lugger of this description could render might be required; and that instantly the lugger was manned, I think, with thirteen persons. Shortly after she quitted Margate she fell in with this vessel, which had suffered in consequence of the gale the loss of two anchors and cables, and was, at that time, drifting directly upon the rocks. It appears that just before the vessel was approaching the rock, respecting which there has been so much discussion—the Nayland Rock—an attempt was made to board her, but at that time the vessel which they went to succour was only prevented from destroying the lugger in consequence of her striking on the rock. This constitutes an important ingredient in this case, viz. that the salvors did at the risk of their lives attempt to render assistance to the vessel. Now, what was the danger to the vessel and cargo at that moment? Why, there has been a debate as to what Nayland Rock is made of. According to the best evidence, that of the harbour-master, and a gentleman who has been some years on the coast, and is in the Preventive Service, it is made of hard chalk. I apprehend there is little difference between its being made of that or other material. This case proves that there is no difference, for there the vessel remained in imminent danger of being beaten to pieces. Now, as to the cargo, it is almost superfluous, after the observations I have already made, to consider whether it would have floated on shore. It is a mere contingency; it might have happened or not. It is one of the circumstances that none can calculate, and it is impossible that I can alter the rate of salvage on that account. Now, these services are tendered and accepted, and it is not denied that, such as they were, they were continued from the 18th to the 20th. There is one part of this case which has not been investigated quite enough for my satisfaction in the various affidavits, and that is, whether or not the boats on board the vessel would have been sufficient in case of need to have carried the master, and mate, and crew to shore. On the one hand it is asserted; on the other, it is as confidently denied—and it is difficult for the Court to ascertain the truth; but this is clear, that the master, mate, and crew did abandon the vessel, and did go in one of the luggers belonging to these parties. Now, I cannot suppose that they would have so quitted the vessel unless the danger was imminent: and, if there was an equal facility in going in their own boat, I hardly know why they should have resorted to the other. Up to this period it is not necessary to occupy more time in stating with specification the nature of the service. It is set forth in the papers in the case, and is admitted by counsel, to have been a salvage service. On the morning of the 20th Mr. Gillmore comes down. He is the agent of the owners and the underwriters, and he very properly takes the vessel into his own charge, and under his own directions, and he endeavours, for the benefit of those whom he represents, and with whom he is concerned, to make some sort of arrangement with the salvors. With regard to this arrangement, I think that counsel have acted with great discretion in stating that they do not consider that there was an express engagement made for the mere service of labour, and labour only, because it is quite evident to my mind that, if Mr. Gillmore had determined to make a precise agreement with them, and if any service to be performed was to be that of simple labour, unattended with any risk and without any unusual hardship, he would have fixed the rate at which the men should be paid; because if the nature of the service could have been ascertained—though the duration was uncertain—what could have been more easy than to determine the rate? But the degree of service was unknown; there was the possibility of there being risk of a different kind, and it was therefore impossible to make a precise agreement. That seems to be the nature of the case. Mr. Gillmore is anxious to make an arrangement; he is unable, and the salvors say we will be paid according to the nature of the service and its duration, and that must depend on other circumstances, which it was impossible to foresee; therefore I am of opinion that, in assessing the rate of compensation to be paid from the 20th of October down to the time the service ceased, the Court must not be governed by the previous arrangement, but must look at the nature of the service. I think it was not strictly to be called labour—I think it was not strictly to be called salvage—it partook in some degree of both. There was a certain degree of skill, a certain degree of hardship, and a great deal of hard work to be performed. With regard to the end of this service I must confess that I think, from the balance of evidence, that very little, if any thing of importance, was done subsequently to the 6th of November. Some little matters might have been done at one time by some of the salvors, and at others by others of them. But there was no great degree of labour—nothing of the continued service of these twenty-two salvors and their two luggers. Looking at the whole of this case, and being of opinion that the original services commenced in most meritorious exertions, in which the lives of the persons performing it at that time—though not after—were undoubtedly to some extent put in peril; and conceiving from the nature of the locality, and the state of the weather, and the disabled condition of this vessel with regard to anchors and cables, that not only the property was in danger, but the lives of the parties on board might have been perilled, I think I must consider these circumstances as giving the salvors a claim to a higher rate of salvage, and I shall upon the whole overrule the tender, and instead of 250*l.* I shall give the sum of 320*l.*

The Hercules.

Salvage—Tender insufficient.

This vessel, on a voyage from Youghal, Ireland, to the port of London, laden with a cargo of oats and butter, met with bad weather and lost an anchor and cable. She got on the Nore Sand on the 8th of January, and remained there for about an hour. She, however, managed to get herself off, and was lying with her only remaining anchor and cable in the neighbourhood of that sand. The wind was blowing strong from the E.N.E. and the crew of a smack, who were the salvors now claiming remuneration, came up and offered their services. The captain at first declined, but afterwards accepted them. The vessel was at that time pitching and rolling very heavily—the palls of the windlass were capsized, and other damage done. The salvors assisted in slipping the anchor and cable; and for the small service they rendered six guineas were offered. A charge of misconduct against them was made by the owners, but it was as stoutly denied by themselves.

Harding, for the salvors.

Haggard, for the owners.

Dr. Lushington.—In point of value this is a question of very little importance. Still, as relates to the means of the parties, it is of consequence to them, and it is the duty of the Court not to dispose of it without sufficient consideration. That consideration has been bestowed. (The Court having stated the above facts.) The master employed the salvors after the alleged misconduct had been committed, and they appear to have parted on good terms. The service is of a very trifling nature, but I am of opinion that the tender of six guineas is not sufficient, and I shall decree the sum of 12*l.*

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Ex parte Nerinkz.

Petition dismissed—imprisonment after.

The insolvent had petitioned the Court under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, when his petition was dismissed. He was then taken in execution and had now been in prison upwards of twelve months.

Sturgeon applied to the Court to order his discharge under the 28th sec. of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, which provides that no debtor shall be imprisoned more than twelve months, in case the final order be refused, or the protecting order be not renewed.

Mr. Commissioner Evans said that he had no authority to order the discharge, and the Act did not point out any mode of obtaining it. The best course would be to go before a judge of the superior courts, who would discharge the prisoner if improperly detained in custody.

Wednesday, Oct. 2.

Re Spillon.

5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, final order under, notwithstanding 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96.

The petition in this case had been presented under the former Act, and the insolvent, after several adjournments, now appeared for his final order.

The Registrar (Mr. Curzon) suggested that a difficulty stood in the way of granting the final order, inasmuch as no notice had been given under the last Act which now regulated the proceedings, and thus the order might prove invalid.

Sir C. Williams was of opinion, that he might grant the final order under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116.

Horry referred the Court to the 2nd sec. of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, which mentioned only petitions presented after the passing of that Act, and to sections 22, 26, as shewing that the final orders mentioned in them were connected only with such petitions, and not to petitions under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, which would be governed by the latter Act.

Sir C. Williams observed it would be much safer to grant the final order under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and made it accordingly.

Re Wood.

Refusal to dismiss petition on insolvent's application.

This insolvent, who had been a prisoner, applied to dismiss his petition, having settled with his detaining creditor.

Sir C. Williams refused to dismiss the petition as desired. When the petition was filed, all the property of the petitioner became vested in the official assignee, who would make it available for the creditors at large. If he dismissed the petition now, he might cause a renewal of the trouble those creditors had already undergone who did not happen to be settled with. Why should they be subjected to further trouble, when the funds designed for them were in court? He did not consider that he had power to dismiss the petition according to the Act, except under conditions which had not yet appeared. If all the creditors were present to assent to the application, he might then presume that it was for their benefit, and be induced to grant it.

Re Hedgcock.

Vexatious defence—what.

The insolvent had accepted a bill under an agreement that the parties accommodated should deposit with him paintings and engravings of adequate value, which, however, he never received. He was sued by an indorsee, and pleaded non-acceptance. The cause went to trial, and a verdict was returned against him. He was now opposed on the ground of a vexatious defence.

The insolvent stated the above agreement, and that he was defrauded in the transaction. He had then consulted his attorney, who advised him that he could defend the action, and conducted the defence accordingly.

The attorney admitted this fact, and said that he believed that the non-deposit of the pictures would be a defence. He also drew the plea himself, in the expectation of giving that defence under it, which he only found at the last moment he could not do.

The counsel for the opposing creditor said, however much this might have availed as between the parties, it was a vexatious defence as between the acceptor and indorsee.

Sir C. Williams said that he could not view the defence in this case as a vexatious one. When a man clearly had no reason to oppose the demand of his creditor, and then subjected him to costs in addition to the loss of his debt, such conduct was vexatious; but here the insolvent had himself been defrauded, and laboured under an idea that the injury sustained by him was an answer to the action, a notion that was strengthened by his legal adviser, who mistook his situation. The insolvent thought he was resisting an unjust claim. He would name a day for the final order. The learned commissioner added that considerable difference had existed among the commissioners as to dismissing a petition where a vexatious defence appeared, and that the main consideration that determined them to view it as an offence was the scope that would have been afforded to dishonesty by means of that court had they determined otherwise.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

No subject of the slightest interest in relation to law-making claims attention this week.

Bills in Progress.

Mines Registration.—A Bill introduced by Mr. Hodgson Hinde and Mr. Ord has recently been printed for consideration during the recess, entitled "A Bill for establishing District Registers of all Mines and Mining Operations in England and Wales." There are ninety-two sections in the measure, with a schedule of the places to which its operations are to be applied. It is not proposed that it should take effect until January next after the passing of the Act. By the preamble it is stated to be expedient to establish a systematic registration of all mining operations carried on throughout England and Wales and in the Isle of Man, for better preventing the loss of Life, the occurrence of many grievous and unexpected injuries to mining proprietors, and the large and fruitless expenditure of capital and labour. It is proposed to establish offices and appoint officers for the purpose of registration, and that the expenses of the Act should be paid out of the Consolidated Fund. The Board of Trade is to have the general management of the proposed measure.

Cap. XCVIII.

An Act to enable the Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland to accept a certain Sum of Money in satisfaction of their Mortgage on the Branch Canals communicating with the Grand Canal in Ireland. (August 9, 1844.)

Cap. XCIX.

An Act to extend the Time limited by an Act passed in the Fourth and Fifth Years of her present Majesty, empowering the Commissioners for the Issue of Exchequer Bills for Public Works to complete the Works for improving the Navigation and Harbour of Tralee, in the County of Kerry. (August 9, 1844.)

Cap. C.

An Act to supply an omission in an Act of the Sixth and Seventh Years of her present Majesty, for amending and continuing the Laws in Ireland relative to the registering of Arms, and the Importation, Manufacture, and Sale of Arms, Gunpowder, and Ammunition. (August 9, 1844.)

Cap. CI.

An Act for the further Amendment of the Law relating to the Poor in England. (August 9, 1844.)

We give this important statute entire:—

1. 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76. Powers of making order on putative father to cease.—Sect. 1 enacts, That from and after the passing of this Act all powers for obtaining or making an order upon any putative father for the maintenance of a bastard child shall cease and determine, except as herein-after provided.

2. The putative father to be summoned to petty sessions, on application of mother of bastard.—And be it enacted, That any single woman who may be with child, or who may be delivered of a bastard child, after the passing of this Act, or who has been delivered of a bastard child within the period of six calendar months before the passing of this Act, may either before the birth, or at any time within twelve months from the birth of such child, or at any time thereafter, upon proof that the man alleged to be the father of such child has within the twelve months next after the birth of such child paid money for its maintenance, make application to any one justice of the peace acting for the petty sessional division of the county, or for the city, borough, or place in which she may reside, for a summons to be served on the man alleged by her to be the father of such child; and if such application be made before the birth of the child the woman shall make a deposition upon oath stating who is the father of such child, and such justice of the peace shall thereupon issue his summons to the person alleged to be father of such child to appear at a petty session to be holden after the expiration of six days at least for the petty sessional division, city, borough, or other place in which such justice usually acts.

3. Justices in petty session may make an order on the putative father for maintenance and costs, and enforce the same by distress and sale. Proviso.—And be it enacted, That after the birth of such bastard child, on the appearance of the person so summoned, or on proof that the summons was duly served on such person, or left at his last place of abode six days at least before the petty session, the justices in such petty session shall hear the evidence of such woman, and such other evidence as she may produce, and shall also hear any evidence tendered by or on behalf of the person alleged to be the father; and if the evidence of the mother be corroborated in some material particular by other testimony, to the satisfaction of the said justices, they may adjudge the man to be the putative father of such bastard child; and they may also, if they see fit, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, proceed to make an order on the putative father for the payment to the mother of the bastard child, or to any person who may be appointed to have the custody of such child under the provisions of this Act, of a sum of money weekly, and of such costs as may have been incurred in the obtaining of such order, including, if they think proper, ten shillings for the midwife, and ten shillings towards the funeral expenses of the child, provided it have died before the making of such order; and if the application be made before the birth of the child, or within two calendar months after the birth of the child, such weekly sum may, if the said justices think fit, be calculated from the birth of the child, at a rate not exceeding five shillings per week for the first six weeks after the birth of such child; and in other cases such sum shall not exceed two shillings and sixpence per week from the time of the making of the application; and if at any time after the expiration of one calendar month from the making of such order as aforesaid it be made to appear to any one justice, upon oath or affirmation, that any sum to be paid in pursuance of such order has not been paid, such justice may, by warrant under his hand and seal, cause such putative father to be brought before any two justices; and in case such putative father neglect or refuse to make payment of the sums due from him under such order, or since any commitment for disobedience to such order as hereinafter provided, together with the costs attending such warrant, apprehension, and bringing up of such putative father, such two justices may, by warrant under their hands and seals, direct the sum so appearing to be due, together with such costs, to be recovered by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such putative father, and may order such putative father to be detained and kept in safe custody until return can be conveniently made to such warrant of distress, unless he give sufficient security, by way of recognizance or otherwise, to the satisfaction of such justices, for his appearance before two justices on the day which may be appointed for the return of such warrant of distress, such day not being more than seven days from the time of taking any such security; but if upon the return of such warrant, or if by the admission of such putative father, it appear that no sufficient distress can be had, then any such two justices may, if they see fit, by warrant under their hands and seals cause such putative father to be committed to the common gaol or house of correction of the county, city, borough, or place where they have jurisdiction, there to remain without bail or mainprize for any term not exceeding three calendar months, unless such sum and costs, and all reasonable charges attending the said distress, together with the costs and charges attending the commitment and conveying to gaol or to the house of correction, and of the persons employed to convey him thither, be sooner paid and satisfied: Provided always, that if the woman have allowed the weekly payment to be in arrear for more than thirteen successive weeks, without application to a justice, the man shall not be called upon to pay more than the amount due for thirteen weeks in discharge of the whole debt, and no warrant of distress shall be issued for more than the amount of arrears for thirteen weeks payment in discharge of the whole arrears or debt.

4. Applications to be made within forty days. Appeal to quarter sessions for the putative father.—And be it enacted, That the justices in petty session as aforesaid may adjourn the hearing of the case as often as to them may seem fit; but no such order shall be made unless applied for at such petty sessions within the space of forty days from the service of the summons after the birth of the bastard child on the person alleged to be the father of such bastard child; and if within twenty-four hours after the adjudication and making of any order on the putative father as aforesaid such putative father give notice of appeal to the mother of the bastard child, and also within seven days give sufficient security, by recognizance or otherwise, for the payment of costs, to the satisfaction of some one justice of the peace, it shall be lawful for such putative father to appeal to the general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden after the period of fourteen days next after the making of the said order for the county, city, borough, or place for which such petty session may have been held; and the justices in such quarter sessions assembled, or the recorder, as the case may be, shall thereupon hear and determine such appeal, and shall order such costs to be paid by either party as to them or him may seem fit.

5. Money under the order to be paid to the mother or to a person appointed by the justices. Time of cessation of order.—And be it enacted, That all money payable under any order as aforesaid shall be due and payable to the mother of the bastard child in respect of such time and so long as she lives and is of sound mind, and is not in any gaol or prison, or under sentence of transportation; and after the death of the mother of such bastard child, or whilst such mother is of unsound mind, or confined in any gaol or prison, or under sentence of transportation, any two justices may, if they see fit, by order under their hands and seals from time to time appoint some person who, with his own consent, shall have the custody of such bastard child, so long as such bastard child is not chargeable to any parish or union, and any two such justices may revoke the appointment of such person, and may appoint another person in his stead. And every person so appointed to have the custody of a bastard child, shall, so long as such child is not chargeable to any parish or union, be empowered to make application for the recovering of all payments becoming due under the order of the court of petty session as aforesaid, in the same manner as the mother of such bastard child might have done; and the clerk to the justices making any order on the putative father of a bastard child, or appointing any person to have the custody of such child, as hereinbefore provided, shall as soon as may be send by post or otherwise a duplicate of such order or appointment, signed by such clerk, to the clerk to the guardians of the union or parish in which the mother of such bastard child resided at the time of making such order or appointment; provided always, that no order for the maintenance or support of any such bastard child made in pursuance of this Act shall, except for the purpose of recovering money previously due under such order, be of any force or validity after the child in respect of whom it was made has attained the age of thirteen years, or after the marriage of the mother of such child, or after the death of such child.

6. Mother punishable for neglect or desertion of her bastard child. 5 G. 4, c. 83.—And be it declared and enacted, That every woman neglecting to maintain her bastard child, being able wholly or in part so to do, whereby such child becomes chargeable to any parish or union, shall be punishable as an idle and disorderly person, under the provisions of an Act made and passed in the fifth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the Punishment of idle and disorderly Persons, and Rogues and Vagabonds, in that Part of the United Kingdom called England;" and every woman so neglecting to maintain her bastard child, after having been once before convicted of such offence, and every woman deserting her bastard child, whereby such bastard child becomes chargeable to any parish or union, shall be punishable as a rogue and vagabond, under the provisions of the said last-recited Act.

7. Officers of parishes or unions not to receive money under the order, or to interfere in any respect. Proceedings against putative father in case of death or incapacity of mother.—And be it enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any justice of the peace to appoint any officer of any parish or union, to have the custody of any bastard child as hereinbefore provided, or for any officer of any parish or union, clerk of justices, or constable, to receive any money in respect of any bastard child under an order of petty session as aforesaid, or as such officer to conduct any application to make or enforce such order, or in any way to interfere as such officer in causing such application to be made, or in procuring evidence in support of such application, under a penalty of forty shillings, to be levied on conviction before any two justices as penalties and forfeitures under the said first-recited Act: provided always, that after the death of such mother, or if such mother be incapacitated as aforesaid, so often as any bastard child for whose maintenance such order of petty sessions has been made, becomes chargeable to any parish or union by the neglect of the putative father to make the payments due under the orders of justices, then and in such case it shall be lawful for any board of guardians of an union or parish, or if there be no such board of guardians for the overseers of any parish or place, to make such application for the enforcement of the order as might have been made by the mother of such bastard child if alive; but all payments for the maintenance of such child made in pursuance of such application shall be made to some person to be from time to time appointed by the justices as hereinbefore provided, and on condition that such bastard child shall cease to be chargeable to such parish or union.

8. Penalties for promoting marriage of a mother of a bastard improperly, misapplying monies, or maltreating a bastard child.—And be it enacted, That if any officer of a union, parish, or place endeavour to induce any person to contract a marriage by threat or promise respecting any application to be made or any order to be enforced with respect to the maintenance of any bastard child, such officer shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; and every peron having the custody of any bastard child under any order of justices, as hereinbefore provided, who may misapply monies paid by the putative father for the support of such child, or may withhold proper nourishment from such child, or otherwise abuse and maltreat such child, shall, on conviction before any two justices forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding ten pounds.

9. Existing orders, &c. not to be affected. Orders made before 14th August, 1834, to cease on 1st January, 1849.—And be it enacted, That nothing in this Act contained shall affect the validity of any orders for the maintenance of a bastard child made by justices in quarter or petty sessions before the passing of this Act; but no such order made before the fourteenth day of August one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four shall be in force after the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and forty-nine, and that all proceedings actually pending before justices in quarter sessions or petty sessions at the time of the passing of this Act may be continued, and orders made therein in the same manner as if this Act had not been passed.

10. Orders made by justices acting in two adjoining counties to be valid, although not made in the county in which the parish is situate.—And whereas various unions established under the authority of the said recited Act are situate partly in one county, riding, or division, and partly in an adjoining county, riding, or division: and whereas doubts have been entertained whether any justice of the peace acting under under two commissions for different counties, ridings, or divisions can legally make orders in bastardy when acting in petty sessions within the limits of one of such commissions, for such parts of such unions as as are situate within the limits of the other of such commissions: and whereas it is expedient to remove all such doubts with regard to orders which have before the passing of this Act been made under such circumstances; be it therefore enacted, That all orders in bastardy which have been made by any justices of the peace acting as such under two commissions for any two adjoining counties, ridings, or divisions, shall, although not made within the county, riding, or division in which the parish interested in the order or any part thereof is situate, be as valid, good, and effectual in the law, to all intents and purposes, as if they had been made within such county, riding, or division.

11. Clerks to justices annually to make a return of summonses, orders, &c. to the clerks of the peace; who shall transmit copies thereof to the Secretary of State, with lists of appeals.—And be it enacted, That every clerk to the justices shall once in each year, (that is to say,) as soon as may be after the first day of January, make up, in the form in the Schedule (A.) annexed to this Act, and forward to the clerk of the peace, a complete list of summonses issued, applications heard, and orders made as aforesaid since the first day of January of the year preceding, by the justices to whom he acts as clerk; and every clerk of the peace shall receive such lists, and shall, on demand of the clerk to the justices, acknowledge under his hand the receipt of any such list, and shall preserve the said lists, and shall, as soon as may be after the receipt of such lists, transmit copies thereof, duly certified to her majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the home department, and shall also transmit a list of all the cases in which appeals have been made to the Court of Quarter Sessions during the same period, with the result of every such appeal; and it shall be lawful for the justices of the peace, at their respective general quarter sessions of the peace, to make and settle a fee or fees to be paid to every such clerk to the justices for every such list; and on production by any such clerk to the justices of the acknowledgment by the clerk of the peace of the receipt of such list the treasurer of the county shall pay the fee so made and settled, and due in respect of any such list, out of the county stock in the hands of such treasurer.

12. Poor law commissioners to prescribe the duties of poor apprentices, and masters neglecting to fulfil them liable to penalty. Guardians to bind poor children apprentices instead of overseers.—And be it enacted, That the poor law commissioners, may, by order under their hands and seal, prescribe the duties of the masters to whom poor children may be apprenticed, and the terms and conditions to be inserted in the indentures by which such children may be so bound as apprentices; and every master of such apprentice who wilfully refuses or neglects to perform any of such terms or conditions so inserted in any such indenture shall be liable, upon conviction thereof before any two justices, to forfeit any sum not exceeding twenty pounds; and that after the first day of October next no poor child shall be bound apprentice by the overseers of any parish included in any such union or subject to a board of guardians under the provisions of the first-recited Act, but it shall be lawful for the guardians of such union or parish respectively to bind any such poor child to be an apprentice, and in such case the indentures of apprenticeship shall be executed by the said guardians, and shall not need to be allowed, assented to, or executed by any justice or justices of the peace, and the guardians shall have all the powers for binding or assigning any such apprentice which are now possessed by overseers, and shall cause all apprentices so bound or assigned by them to be registered by their clerk according to the form prescribed by the statute of the forty-second year of the reign of King George the Third relating to the registration of parish apprentices, so far as the same may be applicable to such binding or assignment: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall directly or indirectly interfere with the provisions of any Act of Parliament relating to apprentices to be bound to the sea service.

13. Compulsory apprenticeship abolished. Repeal of 43 Eliz. c. 2, 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 3.—And be it enacted, That after the passing of this Act so much of an Act passed in the forty-third year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, intituled "An Act for the Relief of the Poor," and so much of an Act passed in the session held in the eighth and ninth years of the reign of King William the Third, intituled "An Act for supplying some Defects in the Laws for the Relief of the Poor of this Kingdom," or of any other Act of Parliament, whether general or local, as compels any person to receive any poor child as an apprentice, shall be and is hereby repealed.

14. Repeal of so much of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, as relates to number of votes of owners and rate-payers. 58 Geo. 3, c. 69. Owners of property and rate-payers to vote according to the scale herein set forth.—And whereas by the said first-recited Act it is provided, that in every case of an election of guardians under the said Act, or whenever the consent of owners of property or rate-payers in any parish or union may be required for any of the purposes of the said Act, the owner, as well as the rate-payer, in respect of any property in such parish or union, shall be entitled to vote, and the owner shall have the same number and proportion of votes respectively as is provided for inhabitants and other persons in and by an Act made and passed in the fifty-eighth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, entitled "An Act for the Regulation of Parish Vestries," and in and by an Act to amend the same, made and passed in the fifty-ninth year of his said late Majesty; and the rate-payers under two hundred pounds shall each have a single vote; and the rate-payers rated at two hundred pounds or more, but under four hundred pounds, shall each have two votes; and the rate-payers rated at four hundred pounds or more shall each have three votes: And whereas it is expedient that the number and proportion of votes of owners of property and of rate-payers respectively should be assimilated; be it enacted, That so much of the said Act as is above recited relating to the number and proportion of votes of owners of property and of rate-payers respectively shall be and the same is hereby repealed; and that in all cases in which by the said Act, or by any Act amending or extending the same, owners of property and rate-payers are entitled to vote, every owner of property and rate-payer shall have respectively the same number and proportion of votes, according to the scale following; (that is to say), if the property in respect of which he is entitled to vote be rated upon a rateable value of less than fifty pounds, he shall have one vote; if such rateable value amount to fifty pounds and be less than one hundred pounds, he shall have two votes; if it amount to one hundred pounds and be less than one hundred and fifty pounds, he shall have three votes; if it amount to one hundred and fifty pounds and be less than two hundred pounds, he shall have four votes; if it amount to two hundred pounds, and be less than two hundred and fifty pounds, he shall have five votes; and if it amount to or exceed two hundred and fifty pounds, he shall have six vote

15. Regulations as to votes of owners and of proxies.—And be it enacted, That no owner of property shall be entitled to vote as such, under the provisions of the said recited Act, either in person or proxy, during the year following the twenty-fifth day of March in any year, unless before the first day of February next preceding such twenty-fifth day of March he had given to the overseers the statement required by the said Act, signed by him, nor unless such statement contain a description of the nature of the interest or estate he may have in such property, and a statement of the amount of all rent-service (if any) which he may receive or pay in respect thereof, and of the persons from whom he may receive or to whom he may pay such rent-service; and no person shall be entitled to vote as proxy until fourteen days after he have made his claim so to vote in the manner required by the said Act; and no person shall be entitled to vote as proxy for more than four owners of property in any one parish (except he be a steward, bailiff, or land-agent, or collector of rents for the owners of property for whom he may be appointed to vote); and no appointment of proxy shall remain in force for a longer period than two years from the making thereof, excepting only in the case in which an owner appoints his tenant, bailiff, steward, land-agent, or collector of rents to be his proxy, in which case such appointment shall remain in force so long as the proxy may continue to be such tenant, bailiff, steward, land-agent, or collector, and while such appointment remains unrevoked; and the overseers of every parish containing a population exceeding two thousand persons, according to the last enumeration of the population published by the authority of Parliament, shall, on or before the fifth day of the month of February in every year, enter in the book to be from time to time provided for the purpose the names and addresses of all persons who before the first day of the said month of February have given such statement or made such claims as owners or proxies as aforesaid; and such overseers shall allow any person to peruse such book, without payment of any fee, at all reasonable hours between the said fifth day and the tenth day of February; and any person who has given such statement or made such claim, or any rate-payer of such parish, may, on or before the fifteenth day of the said month of February, object to any other person as not being entitled to vote as such owner, by delivering to the clerk of the board of guardians of the said parish, or of the union in which it may be comprised, and at the address of the person objected to, notice in writing of the grounds of such objection; and on or before the twentieth day of such month of February such clerk shall send to the overseers of such parish notice of some day, between the twenty-fourth of the said month and the first of March then next, on which he or some person duly appointed for the purpose will hear evidence in relation to such objections, and of the place within the parish or union at which he or such other person will attend to hear such evidence; and such overseers shall forthwith cause a copy of such notice to be fixed on or near the doors of all churches or chapels within such parish, and at all the usual places of affixing notices of parochial business; and such clerk shall attend on the day and at the place so appointed, and shall, in the presence of all persons who may think fit to be present, hear any matter adduced in support of such grounds of objection, or in opposition thereto, but none other; and the overseers of the said parish shall then and there attend, and produce to such clerk the rate-books of the parish for the whole year preceding, and shall answer all such questions as such clerk may put to them or any of them touching the matter of any such objection; and such clerk shall retain in the said book the name of all persons to whom no objection has been duly made, and of all persons objected to, unless the party objecting have appeared in support of his objection, and established such objection, and when the name of any person has been duly objected to, such clerk shall require proof of the right of such person to vote as owner; and in case any matter be adduced in support of the objection, and the right of the person objected to be not proved to the satisfaction of such clerk, he shall expunge the name of such person from such book; and such clerk shall have power to adjourn from time to time, and administer an oath to the overseers of any parish, and to all persons attending before him claiming a right to vote as owners or objecting to such right, and to all witnesses who may be tendered or examined on either side; and such clerk shall write his initials against every name struck out, and sign his name to every page of the said book; and the persons whose names as owners are retained by such clerk in such book shall be the only persons entitled to vote in such parish as owners of property for the year following the twenty fifth of March next ensuing: provided always, that the said commissioners may, if they see fit, by order under their hands and seal, direct the guardians of such parish or union to appoint some person, other than the clerk to such guardians, as a paid officer, to hear and decide the matter of such objections as aforesaid, who shall have all such powers as are hereinbefore given to the clerk, and perform all such duties as are hereinbefore imposed on the clerk in that behalf: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall affect any election in which proceedings have been commenced before the passing of this Act.

16. So much of 4 & 5 Wm. 4 as relates to not voting only to extend to poor's rates.—And whereas by the said first-recited Act it is provided that no person shall be deemed a rate-payer, or be entitled to vote, or do any other Act, matter, or thing as such, under the provisions of that Act, unless he shall have been rated to the relief of the poor for the whole year immediately preceding his so voting or otherwise acting as such rate-payer, and shall have paid the parochial rates and assessments made and assessed upon him for the period of one whole year, as well as those due from him at the time of so voting or acting, except such as shall have been made or become due within six months immediately preceding such voting or acting; be it enacted, That such parochial rates and assessments shall be deemed to extend only to rates made for the relief of the poor.

17. Annual election of guardians to take place within forty days after the 25*th of March*.—And whereas in the said first-recited Act it is provided, that guardians of the poor elected under the provisions of that Act shall go out of office, and guardians for the ensuing year shall be chosen within fourteen days next after the twenty-fifth day of March in every year: and whereas such period hath been found to be too short, and it is expedient to extend the same; be it therefore enacted, That the period within which the annual election of guardians shall take place shall be extended to the period of forty days next after the said twenty-fifth day of March, and that the guardians of the preceding year shall continue in office for the said period of forty days, or until the election of guardians for the succeeding year have taken place.

18. Number of guardians may be altered with reference to population, &c.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, having due regard to the relative population or circumstances of any parish included in a union, to alter the number of guardians to be elected for such parish, without such consent as is required by the said first-recited Act.

19. Parishes may be divided into wards.—And be it enacted, That in every case in which a parish in which guardians are to be elected under the provisions of the said first-recited Act contains more than twenty thousand persons, according to the enumeration of the population then last published by authority of Parliament, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, by order under their hands and seal, for the purpose of conducting the election of guardians, to divide such parish into such and so many wards as they may deem expedient, so that no such ward shall contain a number of rated houses less than four hundred, and to determine the number of guardians to be elected for every such ward, having due regard to the value of the rateable property therein; and each such ward shall, for the purpose of every election of guardians, so far as the said commissioners may direct, be considered as a separate parish.

20. Qualifications of guardians in wards.—And be it enacted, That in every case in which a parish is divided into wards for the purpose of electing guardians every person qualified to be elected as a guardian in the parish shall be qualified to be elected in any ward within the same parish; but no person shall at any election of guardians be elected for more than one ward within the same parish; and if at any such election a person be nominated in two or more wards, the returning officer at such election shall, if such person reside within the parish, give such person notice thereof in writing, to be left at his place of residence on the day following the last day fixed for the nomination of candidates, and such person, whether he reside in the parish or not, may at any time, until two days preceding the issuing of the voting papers, elect by notice in writing delivered to the returning officer any one ward for which he will stand an election; and if he do not so elect some one ward, the returning officer shall place his name on the list of candidates for that ward only for which he was first duly nominated.

21. Voting in wards.—And be it enacted, That no person entitled to vote shall give in the whole of the wards into which a parish may be divided a greater number of votes than he would be entitled to have given if the parish had not been divided into wards, nor in any one ward a greater number of votes than he is entitled to in respect of property in that ward; but, subject to the foregoing limitations, any rate-payer, owner of property, or proxy entitled to vote may, by notice in writing delivered to the overseers of the parish before the day appointed for the annual nomination of candidates, elect in what ward or wards he will vote for the ensuing year, and determine the proportion of votes which he will give in any one or more of such wards; and if he do not give such notice he shall not be entitled to vote for any ward in which he does not reside.

22. Restriction as to separate overseers for townships.—And be it enacted, That after the passing of this Act it shall not be lawful to appoint separate overseers for any township or village or other place for which, before the passing of this Act, separate overseers had not been lawfully appointed.

23. Orders of Poor Law Commissioners valid, notwithstanding separate appointment of overseers.—And it is hereby declared and enacted, That in all cases in which overseers have, for the first time, been separately appointed for any township or village since the fourteenth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, all orders of the Poor Law Commissioners, determining the number of guardians, or ascertaining the averages of any such township or village, or of any portion of the parish from which such township or village had been separated, shall be and be deemed to be good and valid in law, notwithstanding such separate appointment of overseers.

24. Justices who reside in extra-parochial places or parishes within unions to be ex-officio guardians.—And be it enacted, That when any union has been formed under the provisions of the said first-recited Act, or where the said commissioners have, under the provisions of the said Act, directed that the laws for the relief of the poor of any single parish shall be administered by a board of guardians, every justice of the peace acting for the county, riding, or division in which such union or parish, or any part thereof, is situated, and residing in any extra-parochial place, the boundary line of which, or the greater part of the boundary line of which, is included within or coincident with the boundary line of such union or parish, shall be ex officio a guardian of such union or parish; and every justice of the peace residing in any parish within such a union, and acting for any county, riding, or division in which any part of such union is situated, shall be ex officio a guardian of such union.

25. Relief of married women in certain cases to be subject to the same conditions as if they were widows.—And be it enacted, That so long as it may appear that the husband of any woman is beyond the seas, or in custody of the law, or in confinement in a licensed house or asylum as a lunatic or idiot, all relief given to such woman, or to her child or children, shall, notwithstanding her coverture, be given to such woman in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if she was a widow; but nothing herein contained shall diminish or affect the obligations or liabilities of such husband in respect of such relief.

26. Relief to widows in certain cases. Proviso.—And be it enacted, That in the case of any person being a widow having a legitimate child dependent on her for support, and no illegitimate child born after the commencement of her widowhood, and who at the time of her husband's death was resident with him in some place other than the parish of her legal settlement, and not situated in any union in which such parish is comprised, it shall be lawful for the guardians of such parish or union, if they see fit, to grant relief to such widow, although not residing in such parish or union: provided always, that, notwithstanding any thing herein contained, the guardians of any union or parish, and the overseers of any parish, in which such widow may be resident or may require relief, shall be and remain liable to relieve such widow in the same manner as any other person requiring relief in such union or parish.

27. Expenses incurred for insane persons may be levied off their estates.—And be it enacted, That if it be made to appear to any two justices that any insane person, lunatic, or idiot chargeable to any parish hath an estate more than sufficient to maintain his family, they shall by order under their hands and seals direct the overseers of the parish to which such person is chargeable to seize so much of any money, to seize and sell so much of any goods and chattels, or to receive so much of the rent of the lands or tenements of such person who is proved to such justices, to be necessary to pay any charges incurred in providing for the removal, maintenance, clothing, medicine, and care of such person; and if any trustee or other person having the possession, custody, or charge of any property of an insane person, lunatic, or idiot, or if the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or any other person or persons, having in his or their hands any stock, interest, dividend, or annuity due to any such insane person, lunatic, or idiot, pay any money to any overseer or to any guardians of the poor to defray the charges incurred by any parish in the removal, maintenance, clothing, medicine, or care of such insane person, lunatic, or idiot, the receipt of such overseer or of the clerk of such guardians shall be a good discharge to such trustee or other person aforesaid.

28. Guardians under local acts to have powers with respect to insane poor.—And be it enacted, That the guardians of every parish or union appointed under any local Act, and their officers appointed to act in the relief of the poor, and their clerks, shall, from and after the passing of this Act, have the like powers, and shall be liable to perform the same duties with respect to insane persons as are provided in the case of guardians appointed under the provisions of the said first-recited Act, their relieving officers and their clerks respectively.

29. Guardians to apply money raised for emigration.—And be it enacted, That the guardians of any parish or union constituted by the said commissioners shall apply all money raised or borrowed for the purpose of defraying the expenses of emigration in such parish or in any parish within such union, subject to the conditions and restrictions imposed by the said first-recited Act.

30. Cost of obtaining site of workhouses in the metropolitan police district, &c.—And be it enacted, That in addition to the principal sum or sums of money which guardians are empowered by the said first-recited Act to raise or borrow for the purpose of purchasing, hiring, building, enlarging, or altering workhouses, or buildings to be converted into workhouses, the guardians of any parish or union any part of which is situated within the metropolitan police district, or the city of London, or the select vestry of the parish of Liverpool, may, with the consent of the Poor Law Commissioners, also raise or borrow and charge the future poor-rates of such parish or union with such further or other sum or sums of money as may be or may have been necessary for the purchase of any land, or interest in land, required as the site of such workhouse, or of any additions to any such workhouse.

31. Burials of paupers.—And be it declared and enacted, That it shall be lawful for guardians, or where there are no guardians for the overseers, to bury the body of any poor person which may be within their parish or union respectively, and to charge the expense thereof to any parish under their control to which such person may have been chargeable, or in which he may have died, or otherwise in which such body may be; and unless the guardians, in compliance with the desire expressed by such person in his lifetime, or by any of his relations, or for any other cause, direct the body of such poor person to be buried in the churchyard or burial ground of the parish to which such person has been chargeable (which they are hereby authorized to do), every dead body which the guardians or any of their officers duly authorized shall direct to be buried at the expense of the poor rates shall (unless the deceased person, or the husband or wife or next of kin of such deceased person, have otherwise desired) be buried in the churchyard or other consecrated burial-ground in or belonging to the parish, division of parish, chapelry, or place in which the death may have occurred; and in all cases of burial under the direction of the guardians or overseers as aforesaid the fee or fees payable by the custom of the place in which the burial may take place, or under the provisions of any Act of Parliament, shall be paid out of the poor rates, for the burial of each such body, to the person or persons who by such custom or under such Act may be entitled to receive any fee: provided always, that it shall not be lawful for any officer connected with the relief of the poor to receive any money for the burial of the body of any poor person which may be within the parish, division of parish, chapelry, or place in which the death may have occurred, or to act as undertaker for personal gain or reward in the burial of any such body, or to receive any money from any dissecting school or school of anatomy, or hospital, or from any person or persons to whom any such body may be delivered, or to derive any personal emolument whatever for or in respect of the burial or disposal of any such body; and any such officer offending as aforesaid shall, on conviction thereof before any two justices, forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding Five pounds.

32. Commissioners may combine parishes and unions into districts for audit of accounts. Election of District auditors. Their powers and duties.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the said commissioners from time to time, by order under their hands and seal, to combine the parishes and unions in England and Wales into districts for the audit of accounts, and from time to time to add any parish or union to any such district, or separate any parish or union therefrom; and the chairman and vice chairman of each board of Guardians constituted under the said first-recited Act or any other Act, or if there be no chairman or vice chairman of any guardians constituted under any other Act, then some two of their number to be selected by such last-mentioned guardians, or if there be no such body then some two of the overseers to be selected by the overseers respectively acting within the district, shall elect, at the time and in the manner to be prescribed by the said commissioners, a person to be the auditor of the district; but in any case in which there are two vice chairmen appointed in any board of guardians such board of guardians shall select one of the vice chairmen, who shall vote in the election of such auditor; and the said commissioners shall have all the powers with regard to the salaries of the said auditors to be charged on the poor rates, and to all other matters relating to auditors for such districts, as they have under the said first-recited Act with regard to paid officers; and every auditor appointed for such a district shall have full powers to examine, audit, allow, or disallow of accounts, and of items therein, relating to monies assessed for and applicable to the relief of the poor of all parishes and unions within his district, and to all other money applicable to such relief; and such auditor shall charge in every account audited by him the amount of any deficiency or loss incurred by the negligence or misconduct of any person accounting, or of any sum for which any such person is accountable, but not brought by him into account against such person, and shall certify on the face of every account audited by him, any money, books, deeds, papers, goods or chattels, found by him to be due from any person, and when any such auditor has so certified any money, books, deeds, papers, goods or chattels, to be due from any person, he shall forthwith report the same to the said commissioners; and the person from whom any money is so certified to be due shall within seven days pay or cause to be paid such money to the treasurer of the guardians of the union or parish, if there be any such treasurer; and in the case of a union such money shall be applied by the guardians to the use of all or any of the parishes included in such union, according as all or any of such parishes may be interested in the sum so paid; and all books, deeds, papers, goods and chattels, and in the case where there is no treasurer as aforesaid all monies so certified to be due, shall be delivered over or paid, within seven days of the same being certified, to the person or persons authorized to receive the same; and if any such money, books, deeds, papers, goods or chattels, be not duly paid or delivered over as hereinbefore directed, the said auditor, or any auditor subsequently appointed, shall proceed, as soon as may be, to enforce the payment or delivering over of the same; and all monies so certified to be due by such auditor shall be recoverable as so certified from all or any of the persons making or authorizing the illegal payment, or otherwise answerable for such monies, and shall be recovered on the application of such auditor, or of any such auditor subsequently appointed, or by any person for the time being entitled or authorized to receive the same, in the same manner as penalties and forfeitures may be recovered under the provisions of the said first-recited Act; and the expenses attending such proceeding or recovery shall (except so far as the same may be paid by the person against whom the proceedings have been taken) be repaid to such auditor by the guardians of the parish or union, or by the district board of the district to which the proceedings may respectively relate, and shall be charged in their accounts in such manner and in such proportions as the said commissioners may direct; and if any person from whom any such books, deeds, papers, goods or chattels, may be due, neglect or refuse to deliver over the same to the person for the time being entitled or authorized to receive the same, the person so neglecting or refusing shall be liable, on the complaint of any such auditor for the time being, or of the person entitled or authorized to receive the same, to the penalties and proceedings provided in the case of overseers refusing or neglecting to pay and deliver over to their successors any sum or sums of money, goods, chattels, and other things, in their hands; and any churchwarden, surveyor of the highways, overseer or other officer of a parish or union, who shall wilfully authorize or make an illegal or fraudulent payment from the church-rate, highway-rate, or other public fund of a parish or union, or shall unlawfully make any entry in his accounts for the purpose of defraying or making up to himself or any other person the whole or any part of any sum of money unlawfully expended from the poor-rate, or disallowed or surcharged in the accounts of any parish or union by such auditor, shall, upon conviction thereof before any two justices, forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not exceeding twenty pounds, and also treble the amount of such payment or of the sum so entered in his account.

33. Rate books, &c. to be made up seven days before the audit day. Notice of time and place of audit. Inspection of books.—And be it enacted, That seven clear days at least before the day fixed for the audit of accounts the overseers or other officers employed in any parish in carrying the laws for the relief of the poor into execution, and every collector or assistant-overseer acting for such parish, shall cause their rate books and other accounts to be made up and balanced; and the books so made up shall forthwith be deposited at the house within the parish of some one of such overseers or other officers, or of such collector or assistant-overseer, or at some other house within the parish; and notice shall forthwith be affixed at the usual place or places of giving parish notices, stating the time and place of audit, as notified by the auditor, and the place where the books are deposited; and such books shall on each of such days be open between the hours of eleven and three, for the inspection of every person liable to be rated to the relief of the poor; and such auditor shall give or send by post or otherwise to the said overseers or other officers fourteen days' notice of the said audit; but it shall not be necessary for the auditor to give or send separate notices to each of such overseers or other officers, and it shall be sufficient if it be proved that any one of them had notice; and if any such overseer or other officer, collector, or assistant overseer neglect to make up such account, or alter such account, or allow it to be altered when so made up, or refuse to allow such inspection thereof, he shall be liable, on conviction thereof, to forfeit forty shillings; and if any such overseer or other officer, collector, or assistant overseer, refuse or wilfully neglect to affix such notice of audit, and of the time and place for the inspection of such accounts, as above provided, he shall be liable, on conviction thereof, to forfeit forty shillings; and it shall be lawful for every rate-payer in any parish or union to be present at the audit of the accounts relating to such parish or union, and to make any objection to any such accounts before such auditor; and it shall be lawful for any such auditor to require any person holding or accountable for any money, books, deeds, papers, goods, or chattels, relating to the poor's-rate or the relief of the poor, to produce to such auditor his accounts and vouchers, and to make or sign a declaration with respect to such accounts; and so often as such person neglects or refuses to attend, either at the audit or any adjournment thereof, when so required by such auditor, or to produce to him such accounts or vouchers, or any of them, or to make or sign a declaration with respect to his accounts, if thereunto required by such auditor, he shall be liable for every such refusal or neglect to forfeit forty shillings, to be recovered as penalties and forfeitures under the said first-recited Act, or if he wilfully make or sign a false declaration in respect of such accounts he shall be liable to the penalties of perjury.

34. Balances found before the passing of this Act may be discharged.—And be it enacted, That in every case in which before the passing of this Act any balance has been struck by any auditor in the account of any officer of any parish or union, and such balance has not been paid nor any proceedings commenced before the passing of this Act for the recovery thereof, it shall be lawful, on the application of the officers of any parish or of any board of guardians of any union, and in all other cases of disputed accounts relating to the expenditure and management of the fund for the relief of the poor previous to the passing of this Act upon the application of the board of guardians to the said commissioners, and with the consent of the said commissioners, for the auditor to discharge the officers for the time being from the payment of such balance; and all balances struck against any person, and not so discharged, shall be recoverable, after the passing of this Act, as if the same had been struck and the amount thereof certified by an auditor appointed in pursuance of the provisions of this Act.

35. Certiorari for auditor's allowances or disallowances.—And be it enacted, That if any person aggrieved by any allowance, disallowance, or surcharge by any such auditor require such auditor to state the reasons for the said allowance, disallowance, or surcharge, the auditor shall state such reasons in writing in the book of account in which the allowance, disallowance, or surcharge may be made; and it shall be lawful for every person aggrieved by such allowance, and for every person aggrieved by such disallowance or surcharge, if such last-mentioned person have first paid or delivered over to any person authorized to receive the same all such money, goods, and chattels as are admitted by his account to be due from him or remaining in his hands, to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench for a writ of certiorari to remove into the said Court the said allowance, disallowance, or surcharge, in the like manner and subject to the like conditions as are provided in respect of persons suing forth writs of certiorari for the removal of orders of justices of the peace, except that the condition of such recognizance shall be, to prosecute such certiorari, at the costs and charges of such person, without any wilful or affected delay, and if such allowance, disallowance, or surcharge be confirmed, to pay to such auditor or his successor, within one month after the same may be confirmed, his full costs and charges, to be taxed according to the course of the said court, and except that the notice of the intended application, which shall contain a statement of the matter complained of, shall be given to such auditor or his successor, who shall in return to such writ return a copy under his hand of the entry or entries in such book of accounts to which such notice shall refer, and shall appear before the said Court, and defend the allowance, disallowance, or surcharge so impeached in the said court, and shall be reimbursed all such costs and charges as he may incur in such defence out of the poor-rates of the union or parish respectively interested in the decision of the question, unless the said Court make any order to the contrary; and that on the removal of such allowance, disallowance, or surcharge the said Court shall decide the particular matter of complaint set forth in such statement, and no other; and if it appear to such Court that the decision of the said auditor was erroneous, they shall, by rule of the Court, order such sum of money as may have been improperly allowed, disallowed, or surcharged to be paid to the party entitled thereto by the party who ought to repay or discharge the same; and they may also, if they see fit, by rule of the Court, order the costs of the person prosecuting such certiorari to be paid by the parish or union to which such accounts relate, as to such Court may seem fit; which rules of Court respectively shall be enforced in like manner as other rules of the said Court are enforceable.

36. Persons aggrieved may apply to commissioners, who may issue orders thereupon.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for any person aggrieved as aforesaid by any allowance, disallowance, or surcharge, in lieu of making application to the Court of Queen's Bench for a writ of certiorari, to apply to the said commissioners to inquire into and to decide upon the lawfulness of the reasons stated by the auditor for such allowance, disallowance, or surcharge, and it shall thereupon be lawful for the said commissioners to issue such order therein, under their hands and seal, as they may deem requisite for determining the question.

37. Cessation of powers of justices to audit. Existing district au··ors may be retained. Proviso.—And be it enacted, That in every district for which an auditor may be appointed under the provisions of this Act the powers of justices of the peace and of all other persons to examine, audit, allow, or disallow accounts shall, so far as relates to any accounts which such auditor is authorized to examine and audit, cease, and the same are hereby repealed: Provided always, that where any union or unions and parishes have been already combined by the said commissioners under the provisions of the said first-recited Act for the appointment of an auditor, and such an auditor has been appointed, or where any person has been appointed auditor for more than one union, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to continue such auditor in office, and such district shall be deemed to have been formed, and such unions to have been formed into a district, and such auditor to have been appointed respectively under this Act: Provided also, that if the said commissioners subsequently add any parish or union to any district now formed or to be formed after the passing of this Act, or which is to be deemed to be formed under this Act, or separate any parish or union therefrom, such addition or separation shall not vacate the appointment of any auditor appointed previously to such addition or separation, but it shall be lawful for the commissioners to continue such auditor in office for such increased or diminished district without any re-election of such auditor.

38. Accounts may be rendered half-yearly.—And be it enacted, That so much of the said first-recited Act as provides that accounts shall be made and rendered not less frequently than once in every quarter shall be and is hereby repealed; and such accounts shall be made and rendered at such times and as often as the said commissioners may direct, but not less often than once in every half year.

39. Taxation and allowance of law bills.—And be it enacted, That on application of any overseer, or of any board of guardians, or of any attorney at law, it shall be the duty of the clerk of the peace of the county or place, or his deputy, if thereunto required, to tax any bill due to any solicitor or attorney in respect of business performed on behalf of any parish or union situate wholly or in part within such county or place; and the allowance of any sum on such taxation shall be primâ facie evidence of the reasonableness of the amount, but not of the legality of the charge; and the clerk of the peace shall be allowed for such taxation after the rate to be fixed from time to time by the Master of the Crown Office, and declared by an order of the said commissioners; and if any such bill be not taxed before it is presented to the auditor, the auditor's decision on the reasonableness as well as the legality of the charges shall be final.

40. Parishes and unions may, within certain limits, be combined into school districts.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, as and when they may see fit, by order under their hands and seal, to combine unions, or parishes not in union, or such parishes and unions, into school districts, for the management of any class or classes of infant poor not above the age of sixteen years, being chargeable to any such parish or union, who are orphans, or are deserted by their parents, or whose parents or surviving parent or guardians are consenting to the placing of such children in the school of such district; but the said commissioners shall not include in any such district any parish any part of which would be more than fifteen miles from any other part of such district: Provided always, that when the relief of the poor has been hitherto administered in any parish or united parishes by guardians appointed under a local act, and not by overseers of the poor, if such parish or united parishes, according to the last enumeration of the population published by authority of Parliament, contain more than twenty thousand persons, it shall not be lawful for the said commissioners, without the consent in writing of the majority of such guardians, to include such parish or united parishes in a school district.

RAILWAY DEPARTMENT.

Minute of the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, relative to the Constitution and Mode of Proceedings of the Railway Department.

At the Council Chamber, Whitehall, the 6th August, 1844—By the Right Hon. the Lords of the Committee of Council, appointed for the consideration of all matters relating to trade and foreign plantations.

My lords read and considered the following paragraphs and resolutions, taken from the third section of the Fifth Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Railways (1844):—

"In recommending, therefore, that Railway Bills be submitted to the Board of Trade previously to their coming under the notice of Parliament, the committee conceives that that board (or such other public department as may be intrusted with the care of railway matters) might advantageously examine these Bills, and also the schemes themselves before they had assumed the form of Bills, with regard mainly to the following subjects:—

"1. All questions of public safety.

"2. All departures from the ordinary usage of railway legislation, on points where such usage has been sufficiently established.

"3. All provisions of magnitude which may be novel in their principle, or may involve extended considerations of public policy. For example, amalgamations and agreements between separate companies; extension of capital; powers enabling railway companies to pursue purposes different in kind from those for which they were incorporated; modifications of the general law.

"4. Branch and extension lines, in cases where, upon the first aspect of the plan, a presumption is raised that the object of the scheme is to throw difficulties in the way of new, and probably legitimate enterprises.

"5. New schemes, where the line taken presents a strong appearance of being such as to raise the presumption that it does not afford the best mode of communication between the termini, and of accommodating the local traffic.

"6. Cases where a Bill of inferior merits may be brought before Parliament, and where a preferable scheme is in bonâ fide contemplation, although not sufficiently forward to come simultaneously under the judgment of Parliament, according to its standing orders.

"7. Any proposed arrangements with subsisting companies which may appear as objectors to new lines.

"The adequate and satisfactory discharge of their duties would entail upon the Board of Trade a great additional amount of labour and responsibility; and it is the opinion of the committee that if the recommendations of this and of its other reports should be adopted, it would be necessary to enlarge the Railway Department of that board, and to improve its organization. Upon these grounds, and with these intentions, the committee have come to the following "Resolution.—That it is expedient that all Railway Bills should henceforward be submitted to the Board of Trade previously to their introduction into Parliament; and that the various documents and other requisite information connected with each project, and, if necessary, copies of the plans and sections of the line, shall be lodged at the office of the Board of Trade, at such periods as may afford sufficient opportunity for their examination."

My lords read and considered the heads of several clauses of the Railways Bill (now awaiting the Royal assent) which relate to the functions of thi department.

My lords read the letter of Mr. Lefevre to Sir George Clerk, dated the 2nd instant, in which it is proposed that provision should be made for the appointment of two secretaries to the Railway Department of this board, and of an assistant-inspector, and the reply of the 5th instant, in which is stated the approval of these arrangements by the Lords of the Treasury.

My lords are of opinion that they are not competent, without the aid of time and experience, to lay down definite and sufficient rules for the future practice of the Railway Department of this board; but they have decided upon the following general instructions (subject, of course, to reconsideration hereafter, if in any particulars they should be found inapplicable or inconvenient) with respect to:—

1. The constitution of a board for the purpose of transacting railway business.
2. The preparation of minutes and reports.
3. The provisions to be made for obtaining adequate and early information.

1. My lords are of opinion that for the adequate and satisfactory discharge of the duties which, as is now proposed, will devolve upon this committee, it is desirable that a distinct board should be constituted in the department for the despatch of railway business, and that such business shall be settled by written minutes, in the same manner as the ordinary business of this committee.

The president or the vice-president of the committee will act as the head of this board, and the remaining members of it will act as his advisers in all its transactions, and subject to his controlling authority.

The ordinary members of the board will be, besides the inspector-general, and, in his absence, the assistant-inspector, the superintendent and the joint secretaries.

2. Every minute of the board upon a railway scheme, and every report upon a Railway Bill, to have the signatures of,

Firstly, the president or vice-president of this committee; and,

Secondly, three members of the board, one of whom at least to be an engineering officer of the department.

As respects minutes upon railway schemes, to be made before the Bills for giving effect to them are framed, my lords direct that whenever the department has formed an intention to prepare such a minute, whether upon the application of parties or otherwise, notice shall be given of that intention in the Gazette, for the information of those whom it may concern.

My lords direct that in such notice shall be stated, as nearly as may be, the points into which inquiry is to be made in connection with the proposed line of railway. No such minute, unless of a preliminary or provisional nature, shall be signed until six weeks after such notice. Every such minute shall be published forthwith in the Gazette; and every such minute shall be laid on the table of both Houses of Parliament fourteen days after the opening of the session.

Reports to Parliament on Railway Bills shall be made within fourteen days, if there shall have been previous report on the schemes embodied in them respectively; and at all events within six weeks at the furthest from the receipt of any such Bill.

3. As regards the measures to be taken for obtaining early and regular information respecting Railway Bills and railway projects before they have assumed the form of Bills.

Adverting to the resolutions already adopted by the House of Commons on the 19th of July, and to those which it is the intention of the vice-president to propose for adoption in the House of Lords, and also to the provisions contained in the Joint Stock Companies' Registration and Regulation Bill, which, if that Bill shall become law, will insure the deposit in a public office, under the superintendence of this department, of all documents made public by the promoters of any such joint-stock undertaking as may be formed subsequently to the passing of the Act—my lords are of opinion that there will be adequate security for their being duly apprised, from time to time, of the origin and progress of future railway projects up to the periods of the presentation of the Bills.

To make similar provisions for their subsequent stages, before the passing of the Acts of incorporation, my lords will cause to be addressed to all the parliamentary agents the circular hereto annexed (A).

As regards railway projects already announced to the public during the present year, and now in existence, but not having assumed the form of law, my lords direct a list to be prepared of these, and the circular letter (B) hereto annexed to be addressed to the solicitors or other leading promoters of them.

CIRCULAR LETTER TO PARLIAMENTARY AGENTS.

Railway Department, Board of Trade,
Whitehall, August 1844.

Sir,—Referring to the recommendation of the Select Committee on Railways, that "Railway Bills be submitted to the Board of Trade previously to their coming under the notice of Parliament," with a view to the examination of these Bills by the Board, and to the resolution adopted by the House, "That in the case of Railway Bills, a copy of every Bill annexed to a petition be deposited in the office of the Board of Trade on or before the day of presentation of the petition to the House," I am directed by the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade to call your attention to the course of proceedings with regard to Railway Bills intrusted to your charge, which will become necessary in order to give effect to the proposed supervision of the Board of Trade over such Bills during their progress through Parliament.

My lords will be desirous of exercising this supervision with the least possible interference with the ordinary progress of Parliamentary business; and with this view they conceive that the most convenient course will be to require that the information necessary to enable them to form a judgment on the Bill at its different stages should be furnished to them by the agents at the same times as such information is required to be lodged at the Private Bill Office by the standing orders of the House.

Accordingly my lords think fit to propose, in regard to Railway Bills,

1. That a copy of such filled-up Bill as proposed to be submitted to the committee, as is deposited in compliance with the 136th standing order in the Private Bill Office at or before the time of giving notice of the committee, be at the same time deposited in the office of the Railway Department of the Board of Trade.

2. That a printed copy of every Bill as amended in committee, except in cases wherein the committee shall report the amendments to be merely verbal or literal, be deposited by the agent for the Bill at the office of the Railway Department of the Board of Trade, three clear days at least before the consideration of the report.

3. That in the case of Railway Bills, where it is intended to bring up any clause, or to propose any amendment in the report, or the consideration of the report, or on the third reading of any Bill, notice shall be given thereof, and a copy of such clause or amendment deposited in the office of the Railway Department of the Board of Trade on the day previous to such report, or consideration of the report, or third reading.

4. That in the case of Railway Bills, where amendments made by the House of Lords to any Bill sent up to them are to be taken into consideration, a copy of the same be deposited by the agent for the Bill in the office of the Railway Department of the Board of Trade, on the day previous to the same being proposed to be taken into consideration.

In fixing the same periods for the deposit of information regarding Railway Bills in the Railway Department of the Board of Trade, as is required by the standing orders of the House in regard to the deposit of similar information in the Private Bill office, my lords wish, however, to call your attention to the desirableness of furnishing, in all cases of Railway Bills, any information respecting them, at the earliest periods when it may be found practicable.

I am, &c.
(Signed) S. Laing.

CIRCULAR LETTER TO THE PROMOTERS OF RAILWAY SCHEMES.

Railway Department, Board of Trade,
Whitehall, August, 1844.

Sir,—Referring to the recommendation of the Select Committee on Railways, that a supervision should be exercised by a department of the Government over future railway schemes in their earlier stages, and to the resolutions founded on that recommendation which have been adopted by the House of Commons—I am directed by the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade to call your attention to the functions which this department is about to undertake with reference to the railway schemes in which you are understood to be interested, or in which you may hereafter become interested [as solicitor, agent, chairman of company, or otherwise, as the case may be].

It will be their lordships' wish to discharge these functions so as to incur the smallest possible risk of obstructing the progress of Railway Bills and undertakings by the delay necessary for adequate examination; and with this view it is obviously desirable that they should be placed by the promoters of such schemes in possession of the necessary information at the earliest possible period. Accordingly, my lords request that you will use due diligence in communicating with them from time to time without delay, as occasion may arise, respecting railway schemes in contemplation, in which you may be interested as a promoter or otherwise; and in due course respecting the detailed nature of such schemes, and the specific legal provisions which it is intended to seek from Parliament. I am, &c.
(Signed) S. Laing.

PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS.

Spirits (Ireland).—Accounts of Excise duties on spirits in Ireland, and prosecutions for offences against the distillery laws, &c. have just been embodied in a Parliamentary return, on the motion of Sir R. Ferguson, M.P. It was ordered to be printed on the 21st ult. We find from this return that the total quantity of spirits in Ireland brought to charge for home consumption amounted, in the year 1843, to 5,917,077 gallons, upon which the sum of 841,282*l*. duty was received; and in the year 1842, to 4,813,045 gallons upon which the sum of 882,391*l*. was received in the shape of duty. Thus, whilst the consumption of spirits in Ireland sustained an increase in the year 1843 of 1,104,032 gallons, the duty fell off by the sum of 41,109*l*.—a fact which may, in some degree, be attributed to the repeal, in August last, of the additional duty of 1s. a gallon granted by Parliament on the 11th of March, 1842, and which proved a complete failure. The quantity of spirits bought to charge for home consumption amounted, in the first quarter of 1843, to 1,207,810 gallons, paying 221,431*l*. duty; and in the first quarter of the present year (ended on Good Friday), to 1,581,571 gallons, paying 210,876*l*. duty, thus exhibiting an increase in the consumption of 373,764 gallons, and a decrease in the duty of 10,555*l*. Of the total quantity of proof spirits on which duty was paid for home consumption in the year ending the 5th of April, 1844 (5,917,077 gallons), it appears that 5,510,840 gallons were produced from a mixture of malt and unmalted grain, and 406,237 gallons from malt only. Of the 4,813,045 gallons consumed in 1842, 4,456,786 gallons were produced from a mixture of malt and unmalted grain, and 356,259 gallons from malt only. The total number of detections of offences against the laws for the suppression of illicit distillation, in Ireland, during the year ending the 5th of April, 1844, amounted to 3,190; the number of persons prosecuted, to 1,165; and the number convicted of the offences laid to their charge, 799. In 1842, 2,805 offences were detected; 1,239 persons prosecuted, and 803 convicted. The total number of persons confined in the various gaols of Ireland, for offences committed against the distillation laws, amounted, on the 5th of January, 1844, to 206; on the 5th of March, 1844, to the same number (206); and on the 5th of April (Good Friday), 1844, to 146 only.

Naval Force, Army Force, and Ordnance Department (Ireland).—An account shewing the amount of money issued for the payment of the naval force employed in Ireland, also similar accounts for the army and ordnance departments, was ordered some time ago by the House of Commons on the motion of Colonel Rawdon, M.P. for Armagh. The account shews that no money whatever was issued for the payment of any naval force employed in Ireland during the years 1838, 1839, 1840, 1841, and 1842, but that in 1843 the sum of 5,425*l*. was appropriated for that purpose. The Cyclops is the only vessel, it appears, which has been specially commissioned for service in Ireland, all other ships having been detached to that kingdom on their way to other stations. The naval force employed on the coast and in the rivers of Ireland, from 1834 to 1843, was as follows, viz. in 1834, six ships with a total complement of 1,131 officers and seaman, in 1835, four ships, with a total complement of 315 officers and seaman; in 1836, eight ships, with a complement of 2,022; in 1837, eight ships, with a complement of 1,457; in 1838, ten ships, with a complement of 2,197; in 1839, eleven ships, with a complement of 1,807; in 1840, fifteen ships, with a complement of 3,100; in 1841, ten ships, with a complement of 953; in 1842, eleven ships, with a complement of 527; and in 1843, forty ships (of which about sixteen are still serving), with a complement of 8,215 officers and men altogether. The gross total amount of money issued for the payment of the effective army force in Ireland was, in 1838-39, 689,787*l*.; in 1839-40, 616,014*l*.; in 1840-41, 621,497*l*.; in 1841-42, 603,868*l*.; in 1842-43, 575,424*l*.; and from April to December, 1843, 513,772*l*.; making a grand total for the above six years of 3,620,365*l*. of which 40,877*l*. was defrayed by the East India Company, and 3,579,487*l*. by votes of the House of Commons. The amount of money issued for the payment of the Ordnance department in Ireland was, in 1838, 257,119*l*.; in 1839, 256,718*l*.; in 1840, 259,288*l*.; in 1841, 233,890*l*.; in 1842, 212,670*l*.; and in 1843, 200,616*l*. Thus it appears that, whilst a trifling expense has been occasioned by the maintenance of a large naval force on the coast of Ireland, a considerable decrease has occurred in the amounts appropriated to the payment of the army and ordnance departments, within the last two years.

Arms (Ireland).—A return of the number of yeomanry arms registered in each county in Ireland, and also an account of the number of persons in each county in Ireland who have registered more than twenty stand of arms, has just been printed and published on the motion of two of the Irish "Liberal" members, Viscount Clements and Mr. Bellew. This return may, perhaps, serve to convey some idea of the operation of the Irish "Arms" Act, passed last session by the Government now holding office. It appears that the number of yeomanry arms registered in the various counties of Ireland is as follows, viz.:—in Antrim, 444 stand of arms; in Armagh, 62; in Carlow, 229; in Cavan, 1,256 guns; in Clare (none registered); in Cork, 63 muskets; in Donegal, 445 arms; in Down, 1,248; in Dublin county, one gun; in Fermanagh, 835; in Galway (no specific return); in Kerry (none registered); in Kildare, 69 arms; in Kilkenny, 22; in King's County, 95; in Leitrim, 401; in Limerick, 82; in Londonderry (no specific return); in Longford, 88; in Louth, 69; in Mayo (no return); in Meath, 107; in Monaghan, 268; in Queen's County (nil); in Roscommon (nil: there being no yeomanry at all in that county); in Sligo, 263; in Tipperary, 50; in Tyrone, 688; in Waterford (nil); in Westmeath, 196; in Wexford, 329; and in Wicklow, 542. The number of persons in the various counties above-mentioned who have registered more than 20 stand of arms is as follows, viz.:—In Antrim, 2; in Armagh, 2; in Carlow, 3; in Cavan, 3; in Clare, 2; in Cork, 5; in Donegal, 2; in Down, 5; in Dublin, 1 (Mr. G. A. Hamilton, M.P. of Hampton-hall, Balbriggan); in Fermanagh, 4; in Galway, 1; in Kerry, none; in Kildare, 5; in Kilkenny, 1; in King's County, 1 (the Earl of Rosse); in Leitrim, 1; in Limerick, 3; in Londonderry, 1; in Longford, 1; in Louth, 3; in Mayo, none; in Meath, 2; in Monaghan, none; in Queen's County, 5; in Roscommon, 2; in Sligo, 7; in Tipperary, 3; in Tyrone, 2; in Waterford, 1; in Westmeath, 4; in Wexford, 2; and in Wicklow, 4.

The Land-Tax.—A paper containing an account of the land-tax, redeemed and unredeemed, in England and Wales, has been printed by order of Parliament, on the motion of the member for Bolton. We hence find that the gross total amount of the land-tax in all the counties of England and Wales (both redeemed and unredeemed) is 1,858,924*l*. 6s. 1d. The total amount of the land-tax redeemed is 724,463*l*. and that of the land-tax unredeemed 1,134,460*l*. The land-tax is distributed as follows (both redeemed and unredeemed), viz.:—in Bedford, 28,433*l*.; in Berks, 40,197*l*.; in Bucks, 46,818*l*.; in Cambridge, 32,462*l*.; in Chester, 27,476*l*.; in Cornwall, 30,477*l*.; in Cumberland, 3,727*l*.; in Derby, 23,403*l*.; in Devon, 77,772*l*.; in Dorset, 32,026*l*.; in Durham, 10,444*l*.; in Essex, 88,647*l*.; in Glocester, 46,657*l*.; in Hereford, 20,106*l*.; in Herts, 41,783*l*.; in Huntingdon, 15,278*l*.; in Kent, 80,495*l*.; in Lancaster, 19,406*l*.; in Leicester, 34,238*l*.; in Lincoln, 70,548*l*.; in Monmouth, 9,612*l*.; in Norfolk, 81,819*l*.; in Northampton, 47,159*l*.; in Northumberland, 13,460*l*.; in Nottingham, 26,733*l*.; in Oxford, 38,127*l*.; in Rutland, 5,743*l*.; in Salop, 28,864*l*.; in Somerset, 69,902*l*.; in Southampton, 52,596*l*.; in Stafford, 26,140*l*.; in Suffolk, 72,499*l*.; in Surrey, 65,110*l*.; in Sussex, 58,399*l*.; in Warwick, 39,106*l*.; in Westmoreland, 3,030*l*.; in Wiltshire, 50,987*l*.; in Worcester, 32,411*l*.; and in Yorkshire, 88,405*l*. In the county of Middlesex, including both the cities of London and Westminster, the total amount of land-tax is 236,249*l*. viz. 87,794*l*. redeemed, and 148,455*l*. unredeemed. This return is made up from the accounts for the year ending the 25th of March, 1843, the accounts for the year ending the 25th of March, 1844, not being yet completed.

Railways and Canals.—In the appendix to a statement issued on behalf of the Grand Canal Company of Ireland, in the matter of the proposed railway to Cashel, there are given some curious details as to the effect of railways on canal property. Thus, the Grand Junction Canal, which forms the first 90 miles of water communication between London and Birmingham, had, in the three years immediately preceding the opening of the railway, an annual revenue from tolls, ranging from 174,722*l*. to 198,000*l*. regularly increasing. Since the railway was fully in operation, this revenue has varied from 121,139*l.* to 113,012*l.* The Rochdale Canal is 33 miles long, and throughout the entire distance the Manchester and Leeds Railway runs parallel to it. In the three years previous to the opening of the railway, the tolls ranged from 62,059*l.* to 59,258*l.*; in the last three years they have varied from 31,533*l.* to 27,165*l.* The Kennet and Avon Canal, and the Wilts and Berks Canal, are both affected by the Great Western Railway, and the tolls of the former have fallen since the railway was opened, from 46,703*l.* to 32,045*l.* and of the latter, from 19,328*l.* to 8,477*l.* The Forth and Clyde Navigation has gone down from 62,516*l.* to 42,218*l.* and the Union Canal, which connects Edinburgh with the Forth and Clyde Canal, has had its net profits reduced by railways from 12,000*l.* to 4,281*l.* The market price of canal stock has, of course, suffered in proportion. Thus, shares in the Grand Junction Canal have fallen from 330*l.* to 148*l.* per share; Warwick and Birmingham, from 330*l.* to 180*l.*; Worcester and Birmingham, from 84*l.* to 55*l.*; Kennet and Avon, from 25*l.* to 9*l.*; and Rochdale, from 150*l.* to 61½*l.*; while Coventry Canal shares, which at one time were as high as 1,200*l.* per share, have fallen as low as 315*l.*

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

INQUIRIES are beginning to be made if there is to be another Winter Circuit. From the silence of the authorities we augur that the scheme is abandoned, at least for the present. It was found to be fraught with inconveniences to all parties. Not that we approve the long confinement of prisoners previous to trial, but that we think another and better remedy might be found in the reconstruction and improvement of the Courts of Quarter Sessions, so often urged in the LAW TIMES. Whatever the decision of the Home Office, it ought to be made known to the Profession at once.

An extraordinary letter has appeared in the Times, the facts of which, if true, demand investigation. We extract it:—

JUSTICE TO IRELAND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

"Sir—The late decisions of the House of Lords, reversing judgments in Irish criminal cases, where parties have been enabled by their friends to sustain appeals, induced me to apply to the Governor of Carrick-on-Shannon gaol for particulars, referred to in his letter dated the 20th of September, 1844, respecting Bryan Sweeny, who was unlawfully tried and sentenced to transportation for ten years by Baron Lefroy.

"The following is the case of this helpless poor man who, without the remotest possibility of procuring means requisite to sustain an appeal to the House of Lords, is suffering under his illegal sentence of transportation.

"Having been instructed by Mr. Welsh, the respectable solicitor of the county of Leitrim, to defend Sweeney, as his counsel on a trial for horse-stealing, I felt it my duty to rest the defence on facts which could not possibly be controverted, and must, according to law, have secured the complete acquittal of my client, namely, 'that the indictment charged him with stealing a "horse;" that the prosecutor admitted the animal to be a "gelding;" and that the law made an express distinction between a "horse" and a "gelding."' Sweeny accordingly was acquitted of the offence imputed to him by the verdict of the jury, to whom he was given in charge, and who were duly sworn to try him.

"Baron Lefroy, however, contrary to the strongest remonstrance by me, directed, for the same offence, a second indictment to be preferred against him, and the same animal to be stated therein as a 'gelding,' instead of a horse. Sweeny, consequently, was a second time put on trial, and thus a verdict obtained against him for identically the same offence by Baron Lefroy, for which he was acquitted, with the privity of the Baron himself, in the previous part of the same day.

"I exerted all in my power to vindicate and uphold the law for poor Sweeny, who was tied 'as it were to a stake,' and forced, contrary to law, to be tried and convicted. I pleaded autrefois acquit, and using the strongest language my position would permit, stated to the Court that I knew no master but the law, and insisted on the prisoner's right to its protection, and to the benefit of his plea, but all to no effect.

"I only obtained from Baron Lefroy (thus cognizant of the identity of the prisoner, of the offence charged, and of the animal) his promise that after returning to Dublin, Sweeny should get the benefit of his plea of autrefois acquit, should he be deemed, on consideration, to be entitled to it. I beg to refer to the records of the county of Leitrim Crown Court, to the officers of that court, to the county books, and to Baron Lefroy's notes of Bryan Sweeny's trial, in support of the facts stated. The poor man's friends, I believe, were with difficulty able to procure even fees and the necessary expenses for one trial. An idea of their being enabled to sustain any additional expenses whatever for other law proceedings or appeal is not to be entertained.

"I have prepared several memorials to the Irish Government on the subject of this letter, for the members of Sweeny's family, which have not been attended with effect. Whether they have been referred to Baron Lefroy by the Irish government or not I am unable to state. But, however earnest the desire of government may be 'to administer the existing laws with scrupulous impartiality' in Ireland, absurdity itself could not expect redress by reference to Baron Lefroy for a decision against himself. I trust, therefore, your kindness will excuse my pressing Bryan Sweeny's case on the attention of your powerful and influential journal, for the purpose of relieving her Majesty's poor helpless Irish subject from a lengthened period of severe suffering under the cruel outrage committed on him by forms of law, but in violation of every principle of our constitution and of justice.

"The fate of Bryan Sweeny may, at no distant period, be the fate of other innocent people; and certainly no poor helpless subject of her Majesty in Ireland, who is without means of appealing to the House of Lords in England, can feel safe under such a system of perverting criminal justice.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"AN IRISH BARRISTER."

POOR LAW CIRCULAR.

POWERS OF AUDITORS APPOINTED UNDER THE ORDERS OF THE POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS.

The following circulars have been issued by the Poor Law Commissioners on this subject:—

11th July, 1844.

Sir,—I am directed by the Poor Law Commissioners to transmit for the information of the guardians, a copy of a circular letter which the commissioners have caused to be sent to all auditors appointed under their orders.

The guardians will probably deem it expedient to communicate to the several parish officers within their union the general purport of that letter.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

W. G. LUMLEY, Assistant Secretary.

To the Clerk to the Guardians of the ——— Union.

8th July, 1844.

Sir,—I am directed by the Poor Law Commissioners to transmit to you for your guidance, a copy of a judgment pronounced during the last term by the Court of Queen's Bench, in a case of The Queen on the prosecution of the Poor Law Commissioners v. The Governors and Directors of the Poor of St. Andrew, Holborn above Bars, and St. George the Martyr.

You will observe from this decision that it is your duty to inquire into the expenditure by the overseers, or other parochial officers, within your district, of the whole of the moneys raised by them under the name of the poor-rate, whether the expenditure by them be strictly confined to the relief of the poor or relate to any other object, and that if the accounts of such expenditure have not hitherto been laid before you, you must henceforth require them to be produced.

It is right, at the same time, to notice that these officers are not responsible for the expenditure by other parties of such sums as they are called upon by law to pay out of the poor-rates to such parties for specific application; thus, the overseers are not answerable for the expenditure by the guardians of the contributions which they have called for, or by the justices, of the sums paid to the county-rate, or for the application of the sums paid to the police commissioners, or to the treasurer of the borough, where police or borough-rates are made.

In these cases you will only require the production of the proper orders upon the overseers, or other vouchers, by which the amounts paid by them are legally demanded.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

W. G. LUMLEY, Assistant Secretary.

To the Auditor of the ——— Union.

IN THE QUEEN'S BENCH.

Westminster Hall, 8th June, 1844.

THE QUEEN v. THE GOVERNORS AND DIRECTORS OF ST. ANDREW, HOLBORN ABOVE BARS, AND ST. GEORGE THE MARTYR.(a)

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN.—In the case of The Queen against the Governors and Directors of St. Andrew, Holborn above Bars, and St. George the Martyr, and their collector, there were two questions proposed for our consideration: first, whether the defendants, having accounted to the auditor under the local Act of the 6th of George the Fourth, were also bound to account to the auditor appointed under the order of the Poor Law Commissioners; secondly, whether, if they were bound to account to the auditor, the account rendered by them as stated in the case is sufficient. With respect to the first question, the powers of the auditors under the local Act are so inadequate to the performance of the duties required of the auditor appointed under the order of the Poor Law Commissioners, having no power to disallow any of the items in the account, that we are clearly of opinion that the defendants were bound to account to the latter auditor, although they had already accounted to the auditor under the local Act. This part of the case was indeed scarcely contested on the part of the defendants, and was in effect settled by the decision of this Court in the case of the Alstonfield Union, in the 11th Adolphus & Ellis, p. 558. With respect to the second question, it was contended, on the part of the defendants, that they were not bound to render an account to the auditors appointed under the order of the Poor Law Commissioners of all the money collected by them under the rate denominated the poor-rate, which is partly applicable to other purposes than the relief of the poor, but only so much of the produce of the rate as was raised for and applied to the purposes of the relief of the poor. The defendants' made a rate of one shilling and twopence in the pound for the relief, maintenance, lodging, and employment of the poor, which by estimation would produce a sum of upwards of 6,000*l.*; but of this not much more than half was applied or intended to be applied to the relief of the poor, the residue was applied, and intended to be applied, to the police-rate and county-rate, and in payment of principal and interest due in respect of debts contracted under the authority of the local Act, and salaries and expenses attending the carrying of the local Act into effect. The defendants did account for so much of the money raised under the rate as had been applied and was intended to be applied to the relief and maintenance of the poor, but objected to account for the residue, which was raised for and applied to other purposes, and whether they are bound to do so is, in fact, the question. It is not necessary to refer to the local Act, as the question turns entirely on the Poor Law Amendment Act, and applies undoubtedly to every parish in England, where the poor-rate is in part applicable to the payment of the county-rates, police-rate, or any other expenses than the relief and maintenance of the poor. By the 46th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act, the commissioners may direct the guardians of any parish or union to appoint an officer for the examining, auditing, and allowing or disallowing of accounts of such parish or union, or united parishes; and may define, and specify, and direct the execution of the duties of such officers, and the places or limits within which the same shall be performed. In pursuance of this power, the commissioners did direct the guardians of the Holborn Union, of which the district in question forms a part, to appoint an auditor, whose duties were specified to be, among others, to audit the accounts of the said union, and of the several parishes comprised therein, at proper times, and to examine whether the expenditure in all cases was such as might lawfully be made, and to strike out such payments and charges as were not authorized by some provision of law or the order of the commissioners. By the 47th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act, every person having the collection, receipt, or distribution of the moneys raised for the relief of the poor in any parish or union, or holding or accountable for any balance relating to the relief of the poor, or the collection or distribution of the poor-rate of any parish or union, shall, where the orders of the commissioners shall have come in force, as often as the said orders shall direct, make and render to the guardians, auditor, or such other persons as by virtue of any statute or custom, or of the said orders, may be appointed to examine, audit, allow, or disallow such accounts, a full and distinct account in writing of all moneys, matters, and things committed to their charge; or received, held, or expended by them on behalf of any such parish or union; and all balances due from any person having the control and distribution of the poor-rate, or accountable for such balances, may be recovered in the same manner as any penalties are recoverable under the Act. Two things may be observed in this section—first, the accounts are to be rendered to a person appointed either by statute, custom, or order of the Poor Law Commissioners, to examine, audit, allow, or disallow such accounts; and secondly, that the account is to be made of all moneys, matters, and things committed to their charge, or received, held, or expended by them on behalf of the parish or union, and the balance may be recovered under the Act. The auditors under the local Act do not, as already observed, possess the power required for an auditor under this section: they have no power to disallow accounts, but the auditor appointed under the order of the commissioners does possess the power, and is therefore the person to whom the accounts should be rendered under the terms of the 47th section. With respect to the accounts themselves, the terms of the 46th and 47th sections of the Act include all moneys held by the parties accounting on behalf of the parish or union, and would therefore apply to all money raised by the poor rate. And it is also to be observed, that in the description of the persons who are to account given in the beginning of the early part of the 47th section, persons holding or accountable for any money or balance relating to the relief of the poor, or the collection or distribution of the poor rate are mentioned. It appears to us, therefore, that by the terms of the 46th and 47th sections of the Poor Law Amendment Act, as applied to this case, the defendants were bound to account to the auditor appointed under the order of the Poor Law Commissioners not only for so much of the money raised by the poor rate as was raised for and applied to the relief and maintenance of the poor, but for the whole amount of the money raised by the poor rate, and that the auditor may insist on ascertaining the amount of balance of the whole rate in the hands of the accountant. There is but one rate levied, and that professedly for the relief, maintenance, lodging, and employment of the poor, and even, although the inquiry into the mode of disposing of the proceeds of the rate may introduce matters foreign to the direct and avowed object of the rate, this is but a necessary incident in the inquiry, and seems to have been contemplated by the Legislature when a remedy is provided for the recovery of the balance in the hands of the accountant, obviously meaning the balance of the whole rate levied for the relief, maintenance, lodging, and employment of the poor. We are therefore of opinion that the verdict which has been entered for the prosecutors should stand.

Office of the Poor Law Commission,
Somerset House, Oct. 7.

This is to give notice that the Poor Law Commissioners did, on the 24th day of September last, appoint Samuel Hitch, esq., a Doctor in Medicine, to be an Assistant Commissioner, for the period of twenty days from the 11th of October, 1844, for the purpose of inquiring specially into the condition and treatment of the lunatic inmates of the workhouses at Birmingham and Leicester.

THE POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS AND THEIR OFFICERS.—Amongst the letters and other communications read at the board of guardians of the parish of St. Luke, Chelsea, at their usual weekly meeting on Wednesday last, was the following, received from the Bradfield Union, on the subject of the oppressive interference of the Poor Law Commissioners in refusing to sanction the appointment of Mr. Brangwin, late one of the guardians of that union, and recently twice unanimously elected by the board of guardians as a fit and proper person to fill the office of Master of the Bradfield Union Workhouse, and threatening proceedings against the board of guardians if they do not remove Mr. Brangwin and proceed to the election of another officer, which the board of guardians appear to see no grounds for doing:—

"THE BRADFIELD UNION AND THE POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS.—The committee of rate payers and guardians of the poor of the above union present their compliments, and have forwarded by post a copy of the Berkshire Chronicle, containing a report of the public meeting, and they earnestly request that it may be considered by the Chelsea Board of Guardians as a matter deeply affecting their privileges. The committee will be happy to receive any communication with a view to co-operation of other boards in the redress of such manifest injustice.

"Letters may be addressed to Mr. F. Penman, Chairman of the Committee, care of the Editor of the Berkshire Chronicle, Reading.

"To the Chairman of the Chelsea Board of Guardians, London."

Mr. Hill (one of the Chelsea guardians), who had previously heard of the rupture between the Poor Law Commissioners and the Bradfield Board of Guardians, said he considered the conduct of the Poor Law Commissioners so glaring, that he thought they (the Chelsea Board) ought to take the subject into their serious consideration. Several other guardians having spoken and it appearing that a general feeling prevailed that it was the duty of one board of guardians to protect another board against such tyrannous conduct on the part of the Poor Law Commissioners, the chairman (Mr. Ryder) then gave notice of the following motion for Wednesday next, viz.: "To consider the communication received from the board of guardians of the Bradfield Union in reference to a controversy now existing between that board and the Poor Law Commissioners respecting the retention in the guardians' service of Mr. Brangwin as master of the Bradfield Union workhouse, and to come to such resolutions on that subject as the circumstances of the case may call for."

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE recent exhibitions at the Bar continue to engross attention in professional circles, and from time to time to occupy the columns of the newspapers. An excellent letter, which we extract, has appeared in the Morning Chronicle:—

"PRACTICES AT THE BAR.

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING CHRONICLE.

"SIR,—The remarks which you have recently made on the conduct of some of our Profession are indeed very severe, and it is greatly to be lamented that such remarks should be merited, which, if report speak truly, I fear they are.

"I quite concur with you when you contend for the necessity of some kind of 'examination,' whereby to test the fitness of persons who present themselves for admission to our order. It certainly is a strange fact that while there is no other calling in life requiring at once so great a variety of acquirements, and so high a reputation for integrity, the calling of our [illegible] one in every respect the most easy to [illegible]; for it really is a fact in the present day, though it was not so formerly, that a barrister is obliged to know nothing whatever before his 'call,' while the expense to that end is perhaps less than will be [illegible] for a baker's or butcher's apprentice before he can open shop on his own account. According to old style all barristers not wearing full [illegible] were but 'apprentices in the law,' the disuse of which name is but consistent with conscience, seeing how nominally it would apply to many of those youths who are sent forth into the world of law from the universities called inns of court.

"It was said to have been proposed not long since that the benchers should admit none to be members but men of independent fortunes, the absurdity of which idea was equal to its injustice. In one of the inns there has of late been established an examination in Latin and Greek. But the reason, after all, assigned for the non requiring of law in the legal apprentice has been this, that if he venture to the Bar unfurnished with due learning he can expect no clients; that there is an attorney between the client and him; that the attorney (who now, by the bye, has to undergo a somewhat rigid examination before he is admitted), must himself be a tolerably good critic in the merits of counsel, and must have found out that heads were made before wigs, and that the lawyer's gown is not invariably the costume of a conjuror.

"Doubtless this train of reasoning is, in a great measure, sound enough, and the ordinary result may have been, that merit has been discovered by such medium of perception, and that the most meritorious have had the most to do.

"But this leads us to the assertions which, since the printing of your own remarks, have been publicly made by Mr. Crouch, Mr. Pyke, and Mr. Horry, assertions which have caused in me, and, I am sure, must have caused in the vast majority of our Profession, no less astonishment than displeasure. According to what these gentlemen have said, and the former relies on the authority of a number of the London Session Bar, the presumed sufficient reason (viz. the intervention of an attorney) is at an end. We may, it seems, be deprived of even that reason, for it may be now said, twisting an old legal maxim to the purpose, cessante lege cessat et ipsa ratio. But I shall not allow that the intervention of an attorney is to be dispensed with, nor that the rule having ceased, this imperfect reason, whatever its value, is gone. I beg to contradict the assertions of the gentleman above mentioned, and to assure you that the 'notoriousness' which is affirmed by Mr. Horry, is of something with which 'the Bar,' in its collective capacity, will have nothing to do, and which, as I confidently predict, they will repudiate in every manner that becomes them. [illegible] it be just for the press to call some of our members to account as you have done, I think the same sense of what is right must make you desire that the general body should be viewed in a true light, and not have attributed to it that against which, for the sake both of itself and the public, it has ever had, and still maintains an inflexible rule.

"It is a rule with us (and till now I always supposed it to be of universal observance) that a barrister must not take briefs for prosecutions but from attorneys. There surely is no one of us who does not know this, and there is no such one who does not also know that local practices, inconsistent with a rule of this kind, are unprofessional.

"If there be a difference in practice with regard to the defence of a prisoner, the attorneys throughout England must have observed that the Bar study to have their intervention also in such cases, and there are many reasons why we ought to do so. It is best for the public, best for the accused, and (above all, I may perhaps say) best for our own prospects and professional character, that instructions for a defendant in criminal cases should, if possible, come to us from the hands of attorneys alone. Necessity knows no law; and if a prisoner come to be tried, without the means of employing an attorney, no man at the Bar would object to conduct his case, if requested to do so. But the truth is, that this necessity is but occasional; and with those who are alive to what is becoming in this particular, there rarely arises any desperate need of acting without an attorney's assistance.

"I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,
"A BARRISTER.

"London, Sept. 2[illegible], 1844."

The remarks in this letter were thus noticed by Mr. HORRY, whose meaning was certainly misunderstood, for he has shewn himself among the most strenuous to condemn and suppress the practice.

"PRACTICES AT THE BAR.

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING CHRONICLE.

"SIR,—As the terms in which I am alluded to in the letter of 'A Barrister,' in this day's Chronicle, may [illegible] of my professional habits and opinions, I am sure you will allow me to explain how and why I used the term 'notorious,' in allusion to the practice of barristers to be retained without the intervention of attorneys, and, at the same time, to [illegible] that I [illegible] and entirely concur in the opinions expressed by him.

"On reading the report that a junior counsel, Mr. C[illegible] (with whom I have no private acquaintance), had been rebuked from the bench for a breach of professional [illegible] which had been tolerated at the London and Middlesex Sessions for a number of years, and that common practisers at those sessions, Mr. Ballantine in particular, had gravely assured the Court that no such custom existed, I thought it right, [illegible] the word 'notorious' in connexion with the above mentioned sessions only, without intending to imply, as your correspondent seems to suppose, that the practice was known to, or sanctioned by, the Bar or the Profession generally.

"I remain, Sir, yours very obediently,

"Temple Chambers, Chancery Lane,
"October 1, 1844."

It will be seen, by the correspondence in our columns, that a very general desire has been excited among the attorneys for the resumption of their professional costume, as the best security against the multitudes of sham lawyers by whom the courts are infested. We are requested to suggest that a convenient season for taking the question into consideration will be afforded by the meeting of the Union of Law Societies advertised in another column.

EXECUTION OF POWER.

TINDAL, C. J. stated his opinion that the power had been duly executed. He considered this case to be distinguishable from Wright v. Wakeford, and having briefly commented upon that and the other cases, his lordship proceeded thus:—

"The rule, therefore, deducible from those cases is that, wherever it does not appear by the attestation itself, either by express enumeration and specification or by necessary intendment, that every solemnity prescribed by the instrument creating the power has been complied with, the execution of the power is bad, and that the four cases above referred to have also established affirmatively that a memorandum of attestation mentioning the observance of some or one only of several solemnities required, and omitting the mention of one or more, is not an attestation within the meaning of the instrument creating the power. But the present attestation does not, as it appears to me, fall within the latter predicament; and it is upon this precise ground that my opinion is rested, viz. that the attestation of the will of Mrs. Skynner does not express some only of the solemnities directed to be observed and omit the rest, but by necessary intendment shews that all have been observed. It might, indeed, be argued that it mentions none expressly and is therefore bad upon that ground; but it cannot be held bad on the ground upon which Wright v. Wakeford was determined. I do conceive, however, that the signature of the names of the witnesses immediately underneath the general word 'witness' at the foot of the will constitutes a good attestation, the same being free from the objection raised by those cases and being supported by the authority of others, to which I shall afterwards refer, for, if that word is taken abstractedly by itself as constituting the whole of the attestation, I can see no objection to holding that the three persons whose names are subjoined to it must be taken to be witnesses to all that was actually done at the time, which is found by the special verdict to be all that was required to be done; or, if the word 'witness' is to be construed with reference to the statement immediately preceding it at the end of the will (and one or other must be the sense to be put on the word 'witness'), then the word 'witness' necessarily implies that the testatrix did in their presence declare the instrument to be her will, and that she did in their presence put her hand and seal thereto, that is, in the language of the settlement, that she 'signed, sealed, and published it,' in the presence of those three witnesses; for, I think it cannot be contended successfully, that, if a testatrix declares an instrument which she executed to be her will, any other publication beyond such declaration can possibly be required. To this construction an objection was taken by the counsel at your lordship's bar, which has also been relied upon by some of the learned judges who have delivered their opinions before me, viz. that it proceeds upon the supposition that the whole of the instrument may legally be read together to explain the meaning of the word 'witness,' and that it supposes the witnesses are conusant of the contents of the instrument, neither of which circumstances can be supposed. But I cannot feel the force of this objection. There has been from the earliest time at which deeds were known a marked and acknowledged distinction between the operative part of the deed itself and the testimonium clause (as it is called) at the end of the deed. The essential part of the deed is properly that part, and that only, which contains the grant; the clause at the end is introduced, not as constituting any part of the deed, but merely to preserve the evidence of the due execution of it. Admitting, therefore, the deed itself is matter which may be properly held to be confined to the knowledge of the parties, namely, the grantor and the grantee, the testimonium clause is expressly introduced into it for the use of the public and the witnesses to the deed. It is well known that a similar clause was constantly inserted in old deeds and charters at the close thereof, beginning with the words 'his testibus,' and thence generally called the his testibus clause, in which the names of the persons present who heard the deed read by the clerk were written, not by themselves, but by the clerk who prepared the deed. Spelman, in his 'Glossary,' p. 228, traces out the variations in the form of the clause at different periods of our history; and Madox, in the dissertation prefixed to his 'Formulare Anglicanum,' goes more fully into the matter, and in the work itself gives numerous instances, which it is impossible to read without being satisfied that the sense requires that the witnesses whose names are inserted in the his testibus clause must of necessity have known the words preceding it, or in fact they would have witnessed nothing at all. Take, for example, among many, that numbered 312: 'And, that this my gift, grant, and confirmation may remain firm for ever, I have confirmed this present charter with the impression of my seal. His testibus,' &c.: or again, No. 631, 'And for the greater security of my obligation, I have made oath, and put my seal to this present writing. His testibus,' &c. Who can doubt for a moment that these witnesses either actually read, or heard read over to them, the words of the deed immediately preceding their names, and that the introduction of that preceding clause had no other object or purpose? And this practice continued down to the reign of Henry the Eighth, as appears on the authority of Lord Coke (2 Inst. 78), who states the practice then began of separating the attestation from the deed itself, and for the witnesses to subscribe their own names to it, either at the bottom or indorsed on the deed. But that the clause 'in cujus rei testimonium,' so long as it was found at the close of the deed, never formed part of the deed itself, is evident from 'Sheppard's Touchstone,' p. 55, where he says, "a deed is good albeit these words in the close thereof 'in cujus rei testimonium sigillum meum apposui' be omitted,"—citing the authorities which shew it is no more in fact than what it imports to be—the very attestation of the deed which has preceded it. There is, therefore, no reason why the word 'witness,' written immediately after this testimonium clause, in the case now under consideration, should not be considered as incorporated with it, and as calling the attention of the witnesses to all that had preceded in the testimonium clause. On the contrary, there is every reason why it should have that effect; the bare inspection of the fac-simile set out in the appendix to the case of the defendant in error shewing as much, and the sense and context also proving that it must have been written for that very purpose, and no other; and this appears to me to be the answer to the argument on the ground of the danger which is apprehended if the witnesses must necessarily be supposed to be conusant of the contents of the deed; for the witnesses are not supposed to be conusant of the contents of the deed, but of the testimonium clause only, which is introduced for their express use, and for that express object and purpose. If all the particulars of the solemnities required by the instrument creating the power were formally enumerated in this will just before the testimonium clause, and therein stated to have been performed, and if the three witnesses had signed their names beneath the word 'witness' immediately subjoined to that clause, it could not, I think, be denied that such attestation would be sufficient, whilst it is admitted, that, if the very same particulars were repeated in a separate attestation at a small distance below the will, and such attestation is signed by the very same witnesses, the latter attestation would be complete. This would be rather struggling for a formal than a substantial distinction, and would be in direct opposition to the acknowledged maxim in the construction of all instruments, namely, 'ut res magis valeat quam pereat.' And, further, so far is it from being a rule of law that you may not, in the attestation to a deed, look back to that which is found at the close of the deed itself, that, on the contrary, in most of the cases which have been relied on by the defendant in error express reference has been made to the close of the deed itself. Thus, in Moodie v. Reid (7 Taunt. 355), the power is directed to be executed 'by will signed and published in the presence of and attested by two or more credible witnesses,' and there are found at the end of the will these words, namely, 'These my last bequeathes signed by me,' and immediately beneath the word 'witness' follow the names of the two witnesses. Now, upon this state of facts, Chief Justice Gibbs says: 'Here the witnesses have clearly attested the signing; the question is whether they have attested the other formality of publication.' But how does it appear they have attested the signing, except by looking back to that which is inserted in the close of the will itself, and importing it into the attestation. Again, in the case of Stanhope v. Keir (2 Sim. & Stu. 37), a direct reference is made to the words which are inserted in the will. The will concludes, 'This is my last will and testament, made and signed' &c.; the words at the bottom of the will are, 'in the presence of;' and Sir John Leach, Vice-Chancellor, said he could not assume more from the attestation than that the witnesses saw Mrs. Keir sign the instrument, and held the execution bad where the power was directed 'to be signed and published' in the presence of and attested by three witnesses. But, in that case, as in the former, the Court look back to the statement of the testatrix contained in the will itself, in order to see what it is that the witnesses attest. And lastly, the authority of Sir John Leach, Master of the Rolls, in the case of Buller v. Burt, is express to the very point, that, where the word 'witnesses,' without more, is used in the attestation, it affirms that all has been done in the presence of the witnesses which has been stated in the body of the deed. It appears, therefore, upon the authority of these cases, that the Court do look back beyond the general word of attestation, whether it be 'witness' or 'in the presence of,' to the concluding clause of the will itself, to discover what it is that the witnesses do attest; and, in the present case, if such reference is made, I think it appears upon the face of the will that the witnesses do attest the signature, sealing, and publication of the will, which are all the solemnities prescribed by the settlement for the execution of the power. For these reasons, the opinion which I offer humbly to your lordships, is, that, under the particular circumstances of this case, the power is well executed."

Lord Lyndhurst, C. was of opinion that the power had been properly executed. There would have been little or no doubt about it, but for previous decisions. Having reviewed each of the cases, his lordship concluded by moving that the judgment of the Queen's Bench be affirmed.

Lord Brougham took the same view of the question:—

"It is perfectly true, as was stated by my noble and learned friend, that, in this as in all other cases where a decision has been held to make the law, where it has been acted upon, as this has been in other cases—two of which particularly have been mentioned by my noble and learned friend—when it has been acted upon by professional men, has been assumed to be the law by professional men, and has obtained the faith of parties, and has regulated the transactions of men upon most material points affecting their most important interests: it is of the highest possible importance, and even of the most absolute necessity, that the courts should not, without a very strong reason indeed to induce them so to do, depart from that rule—it being of very much more importance, in nine cases out of ten, that the law which is to regulate the conduct of professional men and to govern the transactions of their clients should be known and fixed, than that perhaps the best possible rule of law should in each case be adopted."

"Lord Campbell.—My Lords, It gives me great satisfaction in this case to agree in opinion with the majority of the learned judges. When your lordships consult the Queen's judges, I do not at all consider that you are bound by the opinion of the majority, or even by their unanimous opinion, unless you are perfectly satisfied with the reasons which they assign for the opinion they give. But it is always a very painful thing to differ from those venerable magistrates, who are always to be looked to with so much reverence and respect. My Lords, In this case the only question is, whether the will was attested by three credible witnesses. It is not at all disputed—indeed, that is found by the special verdict—that it was signed, sealed, and published in the presence of the witnesses. The question is, whether it has been attested by them. The witnesses saw all these solemnities performed, and they signed their names to the will as attesting witnesses. The question is—is not that will attested by them? My Lords, Independently of authority I cannot doubt that for a moment. The only objection that can be made is this, that the will upon the face of it does not contain any procès verbale or history of the transaction. Well, but the power imposes no such condition: it does not say, a will signed, sealed, and published in the presence of three witnesses and attested by them, and a will containing a history of the solemnity; there are no such words in the power; and I know not how such a condition is to be added to the power which the donor has given. Then, my Lords, I am very glad to think that there is no authority in this case to prevent us from giving the natural construction which such a power ought to receive—a construction in analogy to the statute of frauds respecting the execution of wills. My Lords, the statute of frauds, respecting the execution of wills, enables the donor to give the power: the testator is the donee of the power; and, unless the donee complies with the solemnities required by the donor, the power is not well executed. Now, the statute of frauds, as your lordships are aware, upon this subject is almost ipsissimis verbis the same with the power, the construction of which we are now considering: and it has been determined over and over again, that, if a will is properly executed in the presence of witnesses, and they simply sign the will, that is a due execution of the power, and the will is good under the Statute of Frauds. With regard to powers contained in private deeds, we have Wright v. Wakeford (4 Taunt. 213, 17 Vesey, 264), and the class of cases which have succeeded that case. Now, fortunately, it is not necessary for this house to overturn those cases to-day; although had they been brought by appeal before this house in proper time, I apprehend that the probability is, that your lordships would not have approved of them. But in those cases there is not a mere simple attestation by witnesses, that is, the subscription of their names, but there is an imperfect history of the transaction. There is a declaration by them that they saw certain solemnities performed which are required by the power, without having seen all; and that maxim of law has, I think, been misapplied, that the expression of one is the exclusion of the other, and therefore this has been supposed sufficient to negative the performance of any solemnity which is not mentioned in the history of the transaction of the will. But, my Lords, there is no case, I am happy to think, in which there has been a simple signature by witnesses, the witnesses having seen all the solemnities duly performed, which has been held not to be a due execution of a power. If it were necessary, my Lords, I think that the testimonium clause here might be resorted to, both upon principle and upon authority. I beg leave humbly to express my opinion, that without the testimonium clause, there would have been a good execution of the power; because here the will was signed, sealed, and published in the presence of three credible witnesses, who signed that will as the attesting witnesses. I say that that was the attestation, and that this is a good execution of the power, without reference to the testimonium clause. My Lords, the very common expression we have of 'attesting witnesses to a deed' explains this. What is the meaning of an attesting witness to a deed? Why, it is a witness who has seen the deed executed, and who signs it as a witness. He is a good attesting witness, although there should not be upon the deed itself a memorandum saying that it is 'signed, sealed, and delivered' in his presence. My Lords, these are good attesting witnesses; and I apprehend that, upon principle, and not contrary to authority, this will was attested in the presence of three credible witnesses; and that therefore it is a good execution of the power. The consequence is, that the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber will be reversed, and that of the Court of Queen's Bench will be affirmed.

Lord Brougham.—There is no authority for saying that a general attestation is insufficient.

Lord Lyndhurst, C.—The party who sees the will executed is a witness. If he subscribes as a witness, he is then an attesting witness.

Judgment reversed."

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

A LAW COURT IN JERSEY.

"A libel case, Le Sueur v. Wilson and Le Gros, which has lately engaged the attention of the Royal Court of Jersey, deserves notice as exemplifying some of the most prominent absurdities of Jersey justice. The defendant, Charles Carus Wilson, of whom one of the judges took judicial cognisance as 'a very tall man,' and who, as an English attorney and solicitor, is legally a 'gentleman,' was the principal defendant. Le Gros was proceeded against as the printer of the Jersey Gazette, in which the alleged libel had been published. Le Sueur, the plaintiff, is a Jersey advocate, and the libel of which he complained was an accusation against him of his having wilfully betrayed the cause of a Mrs. Stratton before the petty jury of St. Clement's. Le Sueur, disregarding a certain old saw which warns litigants against being counsel for themselves, undertook the conduct of his own cause, and soon found that he had 'caught a Tartar' in the shape of the 'very tall' defendant. The Jersey Solicitor-General, who appeared for Le Gros, and Mr. Hammond, the advocate for Wilson, also found themselves involved to a greater extent than they had promised in the litigation. Wilson having avowed himself the author of the alleged libel, the Solicitor-General 'was surprised that the name of his client was still remaining in the action. Had he not hoped that it would be withdrawn, he must confess he would not have undertaken this case; but, having promised to plead for Mr. Le Gros, under the erroneous impression that he would be set aside at the first hearing, he was necessarily compelled to carry out the task he had undertaken, and fulfil his mission.' The awkwardness of his not being able to shirk his task was increased by his being hampered with the proceedings which Wilson took. It does not appear whether it depended on the particular form of action, the course originally taken for the defence, or the universal rule of the court; but in every plea put in by Wilson, however crotchetty, Le Gros, it seems, was obliged to join, for the sake of not being prejudiced. Mr. Hammond, too, had accepted his retainer under the mistaken belief that Wilson, as 'a man of law,' would have conducted his own case, and that he should have merely had to watch it, and explain to his client the mode of proceeding; but suddenly found himself, 'instead of being a passive agent, compelled to come forward as his counsel.'

"The scene opened by a claim on the part of Wilson that, as he did not understand French, the Court would allow the case to be conducted in English, or would appoint a sworn interpreter. This claim was supported by the advocates of the defendants, and opposed by the plaintiff. The Court came to a decision of most amusing absurdity; for, after a grave consultation, they split the difference between the parties, allowing Wilson to plead his own cause in English, but refusing to have the rest of the proceedings conducted in that language.

"After this decision had been communicated to the defendant, he rose and observed, that it was the greatest possible absurdity to allow him to answer arguments advanced in an unknown language (which he termed gibberish). They might just as well have refused him the right of reply altogether.

"The President said, that this was the decision of the Court, and must be maintained. He also requested Mr. Wilson to be more guarded and respectful towards the Court.

"From this piebald decision Wilson appealed to the full Court, and the appeal was granted en fin de cause.

"Mr. Hammond having thus been compelled to take an active part in the proceedings, the main fight began by Wilson's challenging the President, on the ground of personal enmity. It is impossible in an abridgment to give our readers any sufficient notion of the mess into which the Court was thrown by this proceeding, and by others of a similar character, which, in accordance with the practice of the Court, Wilson adopted. So far as we can make out from the report, it seems that a Jersey defendant has about as extensive a right of challenge for the purpose of setting aside the jurats by an allegation of their bearing enmity against him, as the most desperate litigant could desire; and possibly this may be a very necessary safeguard against injustice in the island. Wilson's challenge of the President apparently operated as a primâ facie disqualification of him, for the Court did nothing more till, a third jurat having been sent for, there were two unchallenged on the bench: but no sooner had he made his appearance, than up started Wilson with a challenge against him also, and put the Court again in 'a pretty particular considerable fix.' After a lengthened discussion, in which the plaintiff made a tolerably free use of the 'gibberish,' the new comer settled the dispute by withdrawing from the court, and his exit put a stop to the second scene and first act of the farce. The curtain having drawn up after a few days' interval, it appeared that Wilson had not wasted his leisure. He began by handing in a protest against the validity of the former proceedings, on the ground of the record not having been duly signed and attested by the magistrates. Before this was decided on, the question of making up the court was entertained; and a disengaged judge having been secured, the original president gave up his post. The discussion on the protest then coming on, was proceeding with Jersey decorum, the plaintiff (as we infer, though the report is in English) making liberal use of his mother tongue, when the never-tiring Wilson handed in a protest against the two original judges whom he had not previously challenged; and it was about as neat a specimen of a legal document as perhaps was ever framed. That a Court should seriously take it into their consideration, —and the Royal Court of Jersey appears to have had no option in the matter—is enough of itself, we should think, to amount to a self-condemnation.

"To get out of their hobble the judges proposed to name as juge commis their new colleague; but the wide-awake defendant 'had brought with him a number of blank pleas, which he was filling up with the names of those jurats who made their appearance;' and as soon as ever the juge commis was suggested, Wilson let fly another challenge and winged him. This course frightened the plaintiff himself, and he protested against the appointment of a juge commis on the ground that 'it would be an acknowledgment of the validity of the plea, and would give Mr. Hammond's client ample opportunity to screen himself from justice.' After another long argument, abounding with strong personality, and tending still further to lower the dignity (?) of the Court, the last challenge was refused, and the judges retired for a half-hour's consultation. The mode by which they got out of their difficulties was on a par with the rest of the proceedings. Two of the challenged judges satisfied the others, 'having solemnly on their honour said that they entertained no enmity against the defendant Wilson. Each of them, in short, pleaded not guilty,' and so purged themselves of their incompetency sufficiently to enable the case to be proceeded with to the next stage, which was an appeal (granted en fin de cause) to the full court!

"The judges being at last enabled to attend to the merits of the case, and the plaintiff having requested the Solicitor-General 'to emit a plea,' which he declined to do, Mr. Hammond 'emitted' one which threw the Court into fresh confusion, 'stating that Mr. Wilson was not properly denominated in the action, inasmuch as he had a right to the title of gentleman, by virtue of two appointments (which he produced), the one to the office of attorney in the Court of King's Bench, the other to that of a solicitor in her Majesty's Court of Chancery;' and the Solicitor-General followed it up by another, complaining that his client, Le Gros, had been called 'Mr. J. Le Gros,' instead of blunt 'J. Le Gros,' in some of the proceedings; and that the other defendant (docked of his postfix of 'gentleman' in the judgment of the Court) had been summoned with the same prefix of 'Mr.' instead of by his plain unvarnished name 'C. C. Wilson.' Great importance was evidently attached by all parties to these weighty objections. The Solicitor-General declared that if the Court refused Wilson's claim 'on the plea that he was not born in the island,' —for there seemed no doubt that if a Jersey 'gentleman' had been so shorn of his honours the cause must have stopped, 'then he might well say there was no justice for Englishmen in that court.'

"Want of space precludes our making any observation on this curious exhibition of insular pettifogging, except that we could scarcely have wished for a better proof of the necessity of extending to the Channel Islands some such ameliorations of the practice of the law as those which of late years have been adopted in England.—Times.

A subsequent article in the Times continues the history of this very curious case:—

"The Royal Court of Jersey have shifted their scenes, and the libel case Le Sueur v. Wilson and Le Gros, instead of continuing to be enacted as a broad farce, has become somewhat tragic. The defendant Wilson has been lodged in a felon's cell for having protested against the gross injustice with which the Court treated him. His manner, which the insolent attacks made on him by the plaintiff, Le Sueur, with the tacit approval of the Court, had rendered somewhat more energetic than suited the bailli and jurats, appears to have been the real, though it was not the legal, excuse for inflicting on him the vengeance of his judges. The adjourned hearing of the case commenced with an objection on the part of the defendants, that owing to their not having been legally summoned, and the cause not having been legally placed 'à table,' it could not then be regularly called on. That the objection was perfectly well founded was shewn by the Solicitor-General, to whom the plaintiff replied, that deviations from the strict letter of the law had frequently been acquiesced in, and that the objection came too late.

"The rejoinder, that loose practice could not repeal the law (barely ten years old), and that an objection taken at the earliest possible opportunity could not without manifest absurdity be rejected as "à tard," may appear to have been sufficient; but how the Court, though they came to a decision on the point, had made up their minds, is left to conjecture. The Court was composed of the Bailli Sir J. De Veulle, and Jurats D'Avranche and Bisson, who had all been 'recused' (challenged on the ground of personal animosity) by the defendant Wilson, and who, according to another jurat, Picot, ought not, after having been recused, to have assisted in the hearing of the cause. As soon as they returned from their consultation on the plea, with their decision reduced into writing, Wilson said, 'Mr. Bailiff, I enter my solemn protest against that Act being read, because it emanates from an incompetent court, composed of a bailiff who has been recused, and two lieutenant bailiffs who have been recused, from which recusations they have not yet purged themselves, neither have they the power to purge themselves.' These words—probably as respectful to the Court as any plea to its competency which could have been framed, and merely stating plain indisputable facts, and an opinion on a point of law, which, whether correct or not, any suitor under similar circumstances must have a right to hold and express—were uttered with great vehemence. The report of the case, with which we have been furnished, states, that 'Mr. Wilson is a man of a warm and animated manner, and under the pressure of Mr. Le Sueur's insolent attacks (unchecked by the Court) he occasionally rose to a trifle more than the energetic;' and that 'it is difficult to decide whether or not Mr. Wilson's manner was justifiable.' We will give the Court the benefit of the doubt, and grant, for the sake of argument, that his manner was even as intemperate as Le Sueur's; still in the words he employed there is nothing even approaching intemperance; but for those words, and for those words only, so far as can be learned from the record, was he punished for contempt of Court! As soon as Wilson had concluded his protest, the Bailli ordered him to sit down, and asked the Attorney-General his opinion on the language made use of by the defendant.

"The Attorney-General rose to address the Court, but was interrupted by Mr. Wilson, who requested that he would speak in English.

"The Attorney-General (in English).—I might do so by courtesy, but NOT BEING BOUND, I CERTAINLY WILL NOT UNDER THESE CIRCUMSTANCES.' Under these circumstances, forsooth! Being on the point of moving the Court that the defendant should be criminally punished, he would not be guilty of the courtesy of making use of words which the defendant could understand. Pretty well for an Attorney-General! We recommend him to read the old State trials, where he will find that even when it was the fashion for Attorney-Generals to bully prisoners, they did so in their own mother tongue, and whence he may possibly get some hints for improving the severity of the Royal Court. After this scandalous avowal, the 'Commis au Greffe,' profiting by the example, took down at first only a part of the protest, leaving out the concluding words, but was soon compelled by Wilson to make a note of the whole. Wilson's protest having been recorded, the Attorney-General, after having observed, in Jersey-French, on 'the indulgence of the Court in allowing a man to plead his own cause,' and alluding to the defendant's 'greatest ingratitude,' moved that he 'be condemned TO PAY A FINE OF TEN POUNDS TO HER MAJESTY, AND TO DEMAND PARDON OF THE COURT.'

"Mr. Wilson rose and said—Mr. Bailiff and Gentlemen—Every person even in Jersey has, I should presume, a right to defend himself when a sentence is about to be passed upon him. Tread upon a worm and it will turn. I understand the Attorney-General demands that I pay 10*l*. fine to her Majesty, and ask pardon of this Jersey Court. I will neither do one nor the other—never, even if I should in consequence perish on a scaffold instead of by the rascalities of a Jersey gaol. The words I uttered were words that I had a right to utter. They are the truth. The bailiff is recused—is not that a truth? D'Avranche—no, Mr. Judge Avranche, is recused—is that true? Mr. Judge Bisson is recused also—and is not that a truth? And, gentlemen, they cannot purge themselves of that recusation. Is it because I am an Englishman, and they Jersey jurats, that I am to be trampled upon? Having said this, I leave the Court to pronounce its sentence.'

"After having made a firm and respectful protest against the competency of the Court to pass sentence on him, he was condemned to pay the fine and ask pardon. He refused to obey, and was removed to the gaol, under the escort of the Deputy-Viscount and a rabble, yelling out their joy at the fancied victory over an Englishman, and encouraged by the Court's having permitted those who were present when the sentence was passed to express their delight, without the slightest rebuke from the Bench, by loud clapping of hands and stamping of feet. Wilson is about fifty years of age, and afflicted with gout and asthma.

"The criminal cell to which he was removed contains an open privy and has an open window. His daily allowance of food is scarcely better than that of paupers under the new Poor Law—two pints of gruel, half a brown loaf, a pint of soup, and a pound and a half of potatoes. His drink, cold water only. He is denied the use of both books and writing materials. All letters to him must be first read by the gaoler. No one can see him without a pass from his persecutors, nor 'unless there be nothing to render the interview inexpedient,' and then all conversation must be carried on in the immediate presence and hearing of the turnkey. He is not allowed even to speak to the debtors who walk in front of his cell. An application from him to be attended by his own medical attendant, an Englishman, was refused, and a Jer-seaman was sent to him, by whom he was grossly insulted at his first visit. Mrs. Wilson sent him a basket of food. This was first searched, and then refused admittance.

"The absurdities and injustice of Jersey laws and practice, and the gross partiality of their judges, find a suitable climax in this peine forte et dure, which they dare to inflict on an English suitor, because, accustomed to English courts, English judges, and an English Bar, and smarting under the persecution inflicted on him by petty tyrants revelling in the license of their trumpery jurisdiction, he is carried away by the warmth of his feelings, and takes the liberty of being as intemperate as he sees Le Sueur, the advocate and plaintiff, is permitted to be: but is it to be endured that such flagrant iniquity shall be continued to be practised with impunity? The Jersey jurats have reckoned without their host; and they will find that the notoriety which they have now given to the absolute necessity of a radical change in the administration of justice in the Channel Islands will end far otherwise than they could have imagined. We do not defend Wilson's intemperance; but we must say that he has plenty of matter to plead by way of extenuation of his offence; and that if a man can rely under any circumstances on the certainty of general sympathy when he is punished for open contempt of Court, it must be in such a case as this, when it would be sheer hypocrisy for any third person to regard that Court with respect. For public interests it is not to be regretted that Wilson has dared even to beard the Royal Court. Many important liberties of Englishmen in England are greatly owing to the boldness with which the Bench has been confronted by the Bar or by suitors; and the term by which Wilson's manner will eventually be characterized may depend on the result of his resistance to oppression. If Erskine had succumbed to Mr. Justice Buller in the Dean of St. Asaph's case, his conduct would have been regarded as gratuitous impertinence; but the success with which he maintained the right of trial by jury on that celebrated occasion won him the reputation of a legal hero. But, however much it might be for the advantage of Englishmen in general that Wilson should undergo the extreme of the torture which his irascible judges can inflict on him, he must not be suffered to rot in gaol for the benefit of others; and if he is not immediately treated with as much leniency as Jerseymen under somewhat similar circumstances have been, the Home Secretary must interfere with the strong arm of authority. According to the Jersey Gazette, Messrs. Nicolle and Ste. Croix, two of the jurats, committed for real contempt in refusing to obey orders made by the Royal Court in its judicial capacity, were merely lodged in the governor's house, 'and were never really imprisoned at all.' The difference between those lodgings and the felon's gaol in which Wilson is incarcerated may serve to shew the difference in the estimation of that Court of Jerseymen and Englishmen, and how far he was justified in challenging his judges on the ground of personal hostility to himself. If they had been anxious to prove the validity of his recusations, they could not have taken a more effectual course than they have done; if they had desired to destroy their own jurisdiction, they could not have laid a better foundation than they have for the eventual introduction into the Channel Islands of TRIAL BY JURY."

At the Court at Windsor, the 7th day of October, 1844, present, the Queen's most excellent Majesty in Council: It is this day ordered by her Majesty in Council, that the Parliament which stands prorogued to Thursday the 10th day of October instant, be further prorogued to Thursday, the 12th day of December next.—From the London Gazette of Tuesday, Oct. 8.

WHITEHALL, Oct. 7. The Queen has been pleased to order a writ to be passed under the great seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for summoning the Right Hon. Edward Geoffrey Smith Stanley (commonly called Lord Stanley) to the House of Peers, by the style and title of Baron Stanley, of Bickerstaffe, in the county palatine of Lancaster.

IMPORTANT DECISION. — Considerable excitement was occasioned at Greenwich on Wednesday, by the announcement that the long-pending law suits between Sir R. Dobson and Mr. Sutton on the one side, and the watermen of Greenwich on the other, had been finally decided by Sir J. Bailey, to whom they were referred at Maidstone Assizes in March last, in favour of the watermen. The decision of the case of Reg. v. Sir R. Dobson and Others is not only of importance to the prosecutors, but also to the owners of all waterside property. The facts appear to be shortly these:—The watermen, by means of barges, placed a floating-pier at Garden-stairs, for landing and embarking passengers from steam-boats. This greatly interfered with the profits of the defendants as principal shareholders in the Greenwich Pier Company, and after in vain, for the space of two years, trying to remove the floating-pier, they hit upon the expedient of purchasing from the commissioners of Greenwich Hospital the Salutation Tavern, and other houses adjoining the stairs. Having completed the purchase, they then applied to the corporation of the city of London for a license to embank the River Thames in front of their newly-acquired property, to the extent of about sixty feet into the bed of the river, and thus entirely preclude the landing of passengers excepting from small boats at the stairs. The City granted the license, and the defendants commenced the embankment, when the watermen were advised that, the City not having the power to grant such license, the embankment was unlawful. An indictment was then preferred, and the result is, that in accordance with the decision of Lord Chief Justice Abbot in a similar case, the arbitrator has decided that no such power is possessed by the City authorities. Thus it will appear that the vast revenue derived by the City for driving piles, embanking the river, &c. is illegally taken from the different parties possessing river frontage.

ARTICLED CLERKS.—By an Act passed on the 9th of August last, a remedy was provided for articled clerks in cases where the attorneys had not taken out their annual certificates, or had not registered the same under a recent Act for consolidating the laws of the Profession. A very material question arose, whether a clerk articled for a certain number of years, and whose principal had not taken out his certificate, could be admitted as a person who had served a clerkship in the manner prescribed by the statute. It is now declared by the 4th section of the 7th & 8th Vict. c. 86, that whereas many attorneys, solicitors, notaries public, and others, may have omitted, or may hereafter omit, to take out annual certificates, or to enter and register the same in the proper office, and persons who may have served as clerks to such attorneys, solicitors, or notaries public, may, by reason of such omission, have incurred, or may hereafter incur, certain disabilities, for preventing whereof "be it enacted, that no person who now has, or hereafter shall have regularly served any attorney or attorneys, or notary public, for the term of years required by law, shall be prevented or disqualified from being admitted an attorney, solicitor, or notary public, by reason of any omission of the person or persons whom he served for the same term, or any part thereof, having neglected or omitted to take out his annual certificate, or to enter or register the same, provided such person so having served is otherwise entitled to be so admitted, as aforesaid, by the laws for the time being in force relating thereto."

MATRIMONIAL SUITS.—It appears that the number of matrimonial suits instituted in the metropolitan diocesan courts from 1810 to 1813, was, in England 160, in Wales 2, and in Ireland 16. In Scotland, during the same period, the number of cases brought before the Court of Session, which alone has jurisdiction in marital matters, was 169. This proportion is remarkable, and may arise from the facilities which the public in Scotland have for obtaining divorces. Lord Eldon is reported to have said, "he had been a long time trying to discover what would not constitute a marriage in Scotland." The Scotch law is analogous to the Roman in this respect, a promise of marriage, if followed by connection between the parties, constituting a marriage which may be judicially declared to exist by a decree in an action of declarator. The number of Divorce Acts passed in the same four years was twenty-seven, and the average amount of the fees of the House of Lords on each Act was 87*l*. 16s. 0d. In the Court of Session, the only court in Scotland having jurisdiction in marital matters, the average expenses, when the proof is simple and clear, is about 30*l*. and in other cases upwards of 500*l*.

SINGULAR DISCOVERY OF THE INEFFICIENCY OF THE NEW INSOLVENT LAW.—In a case that came before Mr. Commissioner Evans, on Friday, at the Court of Bankruptcy, in which it appeared that the insolvent had assigned considerable property to his uncle under very suspicious circumstances, Mr. Wilkins, the barrister, said that he had been retained to oppose the insolvent, but he was bound to draw the attention of the Court to the 4th clause of the 5th and 6th Vict. c. 116, which prevented him offering any opposition to the insolvent obtaining his interim order. The clause in question provided that the Court had authority to withhold its protection and punish an insolvent when he unfairly disposed of property after filing his petition; but the statute gave the commissioner no power to act in case of the insolvent making off and squandering away his property, provided he did either before he filed his petition. Mr. Commissioner Evans concurred in the view of the law taken by Mr. Wilkins, and added, that it was another instance of the Act enabling fraudulent debtors to rob their creditors. The insolvent obtained his interim order, and walked off with his protection.

PERISHED WINE.—Before the passing of the Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 25, repealing the excise duty on British vinegar, which has recently come into operation, it was the practice to allow perished or sour wine, which, from the length of time it had remained in the vaults at the docks, or other causes, had become unfit for consumption, and not worth the duty to which, as wine, it was liable, to be delivered on payment of the duty as British vinegar, on certain conditions—viz. that a specified quantity of vinegar be put into each cask containing the perished wine, on the open quay, in the presence and under the superintendence of the revenue officers, so as completely to spoil it and render it unfit for use as wine; which being done it was removed to the premises of the party, and placed in charge of the excise, being mixed with stock, and chargeable with the excise duty on British vinegar. But since the Act named came into operation, it has become a question, it having repealed the duty altogether on British vinegar, to what rate of duty sour or perished wine, so delivered, should be liable; and applications have been made to the Lords of the Treasury, requesting that under such circumstances it might, after the usual process of spoiling had taken place, be delivered, duty free. It has, however, been decided that being foreign wine, and strictly liable to that duty, it cannot be delivered as British vinegar, without payment of any duty, but shall, after the regulations with respect to spoiling, &c. have been complied with, be delivered on payment of the duty of 4d. per gallon as foreign vinegar.

WILL OF THE LATE MR. BECKFORD.—The will of this celebrated man (whose singular history is well known) has been proved at Doctors'-commons. At ten years of age he succeeded to the enormous income of 100,000*l*. a year. He expended 273,000*l*. upon Fonthill, which he made a place of unparalleled magnificence. In December, 1822, the great tower fell, destroying a considerable part of the mansion, which was rebuilt at immense expense. In consequence of excessive expenditure and other circumstances, he sold this property, which was purchased by Mr. Farquhar for 330,000*l*.; and Mr. Beckford, with his diminished fortune, retired to Bath. His property has been sworn to as under 80,000*l*. The will has been proved by the Duchess of Hamilton and Brandon (wife of the Duke of Hamilton) and R. S. White, Esq., solicitor to deceased. He gives to his daughter, the Duchess of Hamilton, the bulk of his property, and leaves his executor, Mr. White, 500*l*. He also gives annuities to servants and other persons, and desires to be buried near Lansdowne Tower. The will is very short.

SHIPPING AND TONNAGE (AMERICA).—A return of the number and tonnage of all vessels entering and departing from the ports within the limits of all the Consular stations in the United States of America, for the years ending the 31st day of December, 1839, 1840, 1841, 1842 and 1843, was moved for some time back by Sir Howard Douglas, the hon. member for Liverpool. The House of Commons ordered it to be printed on the 1st of August instant. Taking the year 1843 by itself, we find that the following information is afforded by the return before us. The number of vessels which arrived at New York was—British, 276, and foreign, 201. The number which departed stood thus—British, 258; foreign, 177. The gross total invoice value of their inward cargoes was 4,951,041 dollars, and the gross total invoice value of their outward cargoes, 4,787,249 dollars. Into the port of Philadelphia, 59 vessels entered (British and foreign), whose cargoes were valued at 39,185*l*. while 59 vessels cleared outwards, whose cargoes were valued at 52,320*l*. Into Charleston, 92 British vessels entered, with cargoes valued at 31,223*l*. and 96 cleared outwards, with cargoes valued at 447,850*l*. Into New Orleans, 268 vessels entered inwards (British and foreign), with cargoes valued at 1,002,008 dollars, whilst 249 cleared outwards (British and foreign), with cargoes valued at 5,234,486 dollars. Into the ports of Massachusetts (Boston, &c.), 901 vessels (all British), entered inwards, with cargoes valued at 514,099*l*. and 900 (all British) cleared outwards, with cargoes valued at 87,427*l*. From various other ports of the Union, accounts have not yet been received, whilst in some cases the figures are not sufficiently significant to warrant us in occupying our space with a lengthened detail. The ports in question include those of Maryland, Alabama, and Floridas, Virginia, Georgia, Maine, New Hants, &c.

A Return, pursuant to Act 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 29, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, and to an Order of the Honourable the House of Commons, dated May 9, 1844, shews that: In 1841, the amount of dividends transferred, was 602,228*l*. 0s. 8d.; in 1842, 702,816*l*. 16s. 4d.; in 1843, 1,118,599*l*. 2s. 10d. The amount paid out was, in 1841, 523,148*l*. 9s. 3d.; in 1842, 661,230*l*. 19s. 8d.; in 1843, 1,067,976*l*. 3s. 5d. In the same years respectively, payments made by orders of the Court were, 13,452*l*. 7s. 10d., 5,012*l*. 11s. 6d., 7,686*l*. 14s. 6d; by the Judges: Lord Chancellor, 7,060*l*. 3s. 4d., 660*l*. 13s. 9d., 655*l*. 10s. 2d.; by the Commissioners, 360,314*l*. 6s. 10d., 251,967*l*. 10s. 10d., 413,571*l*. 19s. The amount exhibited in the payments made by order of Commissioners, arises in consequence of an order of the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal, dated 31st October, 1835, whereby the signature of the judge, for payments out, was dispensed with, and the signature of a commissioner, testified by a deputy registrar, was substituted. The net balances existing on the 1st January, 1844, were: On the Bankruptcy Fund account, 1,506,407*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*; on the interest arising from Bankruptcy Fund Account, 31,398*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*, and 60,000*l.* invested in Consols; on the Unclaimed Dividend Account, 7,387*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, and 23,000*l.* invested in Consols; on the Secretary of Bankrupts' Account, 7,048*l.* 15*s.* 1*d.*, and 15,000*l.* invested in Consols; and on the Secretary of Bankrupt's Compensation Account, 8,774*l.* 9*s.*

LETTER BEFORE ACTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Will you allow me, as one of your subscribers, to inquire of experienced practitioners whether an attorney can legally charge the party to whom he writes, demanding debt, for the letter, if the debt is tendered, either to him or the plaintiff, before a writ issues? There is an opinion entertained by some members of the Profession that he cannot do so, and that if a debtor tenders the debt under such circumstances either to the plaintiff or his attorney, they are bound to receive it; and if they do not, and commence an action, the debtor may plead a tender, which will be an answer to the action, as the action would only be brought to recover the debt, and not the costs.

Mr. Dax, in his work on Costs, p. 141, says: "In the case of a letter requiring payment of a debt, before the commencement of an action, a fee of 3*s.* 6*d.* is allowed, and may be claimed by the attorney, even in the event of the debt being paid before a writ issued."

It appears highly reasonable that an attorney should be able to make the debtor pay for the letter; under such circumstances he could not refuse to pay for a writ, if it were issued in the first instance, and I think it very advisable that one uniform practice should exist throughout the Profession with regard to this subject. I shall, therefore, feel glad if some one of your experienced correspondents would favour the Profession with his views on the subject, and point out, through your valuable journal, the proper course for an attorney to adopt to recover his charge for the letter under such circumstances.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

REGISTRATION APPEALS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Many members of the Profession would with myself feel greatly obliged to any of your readers who were engaged in the registration appeals of last year, if they would inform us, through your columns, what was the cost of the appeal, either in the total, or (which would be more useful) the items of those costs. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Liverpool, Oct. 7, 1844. AN ATTORNEY.

ATTORNEYS' GOWNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Portsea, Oct. 8, 1844.

SIR,—On this subject I would make a few remarks. Mr. Durrant has given several reasons for adopting either this practice or some other, which would have the effect of procuring for attorneys that attention in courts of justice, and that facility for performing the duties which devolve upon them there, which it is manifestly unjust not to afford them. Ready access ought at all times to be afforded to attorneys in the courts, in order that, whenever they may choose to do so, they may put themselves in the way of acquiring a practical knowledge of duties which the very next day may find them called on to discharge, and may also have the advantage of hearing the speeches of counsel, and remarks of the judges, in the cases which come before them for adjudication. But how much more ought they to be able easily to gain admission into courts when they actually are engaged in the conduct of a cause; indeed, what a crying injury is it that they should experience the slightest difficulty in so doing. But how do we find it in practice? First, the attorney has to fight his way up to the door of the court; having happily accomplished this, the next difficulty is to prevail with the gentleman who keeps it to let him in; this person, on the attorney's exhibiting his brief, and saying "he is an attorney," will probably open the door; first, however, it may be politely making the remark (which I once heard made to a gentleman), "why you are all attorneys." Having advanced thus far, he has to make his way through the crowd to his counsel; this he will find to be no easy matter, if, indeed, he should be able to do it at all, and not be compelled to throw his brief at the counsel's head. The crowd being penetrated, he will find, perhaps, that he has, goose like, to hide his head under his wing, lest, in passing the gentleman who is addressing the judge or jury, any part of the oration should be lost by the interposition of so solid an obstacle. At last, he is near his counsel; if he is a reasonable man, he will not expect to obtain a seat at all, much less a comfortable one, but will content himself with communicating with the advocate by making a desk of the crown of his hat, and forwarding notes through the medium of the tipstaff, who will possibly condescend to fix the aforesaid notes on the point of his long stick, and "poke" them over to the learned gentleman addressed, who, in due time, will procure the tipstaff to match, with his long stick, to "poke" back answers.

Now, I do say, that for attorneys, who are really the officers of the court, and rank next to barristers in point of importance, to have all this inconvenience superadded to the anxiety they must naturally feel properly to discharge their duties, is a crying injustice; every proper accommodation ought to be rendered to them, in order to the due performance of their obligations, the same as is rightly rendered to barristers. So keenly do I believe this rude treatment, to which attorneys attending courts are subject to be felt, that I strongly suspect it sometimes causes an unwillingness on the part of old practitioners to take a cause into court. And no wonder. Here are persons educated as gentlemen, living as gentlemen, and accustomed to be addressed and treated as gentlemen, who are no sooner called upon on the part of their clients to attend the courts, than they find themselves reduced to the necessity of almost seeking as a favour that which is their right.

These observations apply to the first and second reasons Mr. Durrant has given for wearing gowns, and I think these are the most important. The others, and especially the being distinguished from the contemptible and disreputable fry of "sham lawyers" of various species, are, however, very cogent ones. But I would suggest that, whatever is done, should be done, not merely by voluntary arrangement, but by the order or recommendation of the judges, who, I presume, on proper application, would readily sanction the wearing of gowns, or adopting any other custom, to attain the proposed ends, especially now the "sham lawyer" question is exciting so much public attention; this would insure the general observance of the regulation decided upon, and unanimity on the subject would be very desirable.

I remain obediently yours,

A. CHAMBERLAIN.

ATTORNEYS' GOWNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR, I am glad to find the subject of attorneys' gowns has excited the attention of the Profession. The frauds and malpractices committed by sham attorneys and others at the Central Criminal Court and within the purlieus of the metropolitan police courts, so ably and properly exposed and reprobated in your columns, alone shew the necessity of attorneys wearing their proper costume, for no step seems better calculated to eradicate the evil complained of than the universal adoption of that practice. Independently, however, of this consideration, I have long been of opinion that the members of the honourable Profession of the Law ought to take every available method of increasing its dignity and importance, and to which end the practice of wearing gowns may doubtless be resorted to with the greatest propriety. Mr. Abell states, in your last number, that some of the professional men here intend, on the opening of our new Town Hall (which will shortly take place) to adopt the practice: I beg to say I am one of the attorneys alluded to, and that I have provided myself with a gown accordingly.

The clergy, whilst discharging their public duties, wear a respectable and fitting costume; barristers, whether exercising the more grave and sober duties of judge, or appearing as advocate, give due weight and importance to their station by wearing the gown and wig; and proctors, who stand in the same relative position in the Admiralty and Ecclesiastical Courts as Attorneys in the courts at Westminster, are not allowed to attend in court without their gowns. Why, then, should not attorneys be at once known and distinguished by their costume? I should think all legal functionaries, from the judges downwards, would hail with satisfaction the improved and orderly appearance the courts of law would present, were the practice of wearing the respectable and uniform garb of the Profession generally adopted.

Mr. Durrant, of Chelmsford, alludes to the difficulties sometimes experienced by attorneys in obtaining admission to courts of justice at assizes and sessions; this a crying evil! and even if a professional man succeeds in gaining an entrance, he finds, to his mortification, the attorneys' seats occupied by prosecutors, witnesses, or idle lookers-on, who evince no disposition to vacate their places, because the attorneys cannot be distinguished from any other person; but once adopt the professional costume, and way will be made, as well by the bailiffs as the occupants, for those who are entitled to the seats.

I would, in conclusion, remark, that when attorneys are admitted and sworn they are invested with the gown, the distinguishing garb and characteristic of their profession.

Trusting that the practice will be adopted by the Profession universally, and hereby enrolling myself amongst the number of those who are willing to join Mr. Shapland, Mr. Abell, Mr. Durrant, and others, "in order to put the wearing of the gown in practice!"

I beg to subscribe myself faithfully yours,

JOHN H. CHURCH.

PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I beg to suggest a very simple plan of teaching the black sheep of the Bar good manners; which is for the solicitors to come to a resolution never to give a brief to any such people. They are most of them known, and those that are not so already cannot go on long without discovery.

One-third of the business transacted in court by barristers could be performed just as well by any solicitor of ordinary ability; but if a solicitor attempts to address a Court, if it be only to ask leave to put a paper into the hands of the clerk of assize or clerk of the peace, up jump half-a-dozen gentlemen of the Bar to protest against the invasion of their professional rights. Not, by the way, that I blame them at all for so doing; no respectable solicitor wishes to deprive counsel of their rights, and no respectable barrister will act as attorney and counsel.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Hadleigh, Oct. 10, 1844. ISAAC LAST.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"A COUNTRY PROCTOR" thus replies to a practical query in a previous number on the relationship of Attorney and Proctor:—

In reply to the query of your correspondent "Curator" (LAW TIMES, Sept. 28) relative to the legality or illegality of an attorney's participating in the profits of the proctor whom he employs, I would beg to refer him to 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, ss. 8 & 9. By sec. 8 any proctor, whether of the Arches Court of Canterbury, or any other ecclesiastical court, is liable to be struck off the rolls who shall permit his name to be used in any business appertaining to the office of proctor, "to or for or on account of, or for the profit or benefit of, any person or persons not entitled to act as a proctor, or shall permit or suffer any such person or persons to demand or participate in any such profit and benefit," and by sec. 9 a penalty of 50*l.* is imposed (for every offence) upon any person, who in his own name, or in the name of any other person, shall "make, do, act, exercise, or perform any act, matter, or thing whatsoever in any way appertaining or belonging to the office, function, or practice of a proctor, for or in consideration of any gain, fee, or reward, or with a view to participate in the benefit to be derived from the office, function, or practice of a proctor, without being admitted and enrolled."

The language of the 8th section I think too unequivocal to be mistaken; and indeed it has been construed by some proctors at Doctors' Commons into a prohibition against their permitting, not only attorneys, but proctors of diocesan courts, to share in the emoluments of any ecclesiastical business with which they may intrust them, on the ground, I conclude, that a proctor of a diocesan court is "not entitled to act as a proctor" in the Arches Court. The 9th section it seems to me would only apply to persons not being proctors, who, in their own names, or in the names of others, actually perform the duties of a proctor for gain, &c.; thus an attorney may quietly participate in the profits of his proctor with impunity, so long as he does not himself perform any proctorial act, but the proctor permitting such participation is unquestionably liable to be struck off the rolls of his court; and this appears to have been the view taken by the framers of the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill, brought in by Dr. Nicholl, Sir James Graham, and the present Chief Baron of the Exchequer, in February, 1843; for, by the 28th section of that Bill, it was intended to enact that 53 Geo. 3, c. 127 should be applicable to "proctors and branch-proctors of her Majesty's Court of Arches," and goes on further to impose a penalty of 50*l.* on any attorney, solicitor, surrogate, or other person who should "receive from any such proctor or branch-proctor any gain, fee, or reward in respect of the doing, exercising, or performing of any act, matter, or thing whatsoever, in any way appertaining or belonging to the office, function, or practice of a proctor;" thus inflicting a punishment on both offending parties, the attorney client as well as the proctor. It is, doubtless, an impropriety for an attorney to share any of the emoluments arising from business not within his own peculiar province, though he may have introduced it to the professional man to whom the performance of such business properly belonged; but I must confess myself at a loss to see any greater impropriety or injustice in a proctor of the Arches Court of Canterbury permitting his country client, the diocesan proctor, to share in the profits of business furnished by such country proctor, than in the recognized practice between the London agent and country attorney. I will not, however, trouble you with any discussion upon that point. What I have stated will, I think, satisfy your correspondent that the practice alluded to by him is illegal. I know not whether the practice of an attorney dividing with his broker the commissions on sale and purchase of stock be legal or not, but the great impropriety of such a practice cannot, I am satisfied, be for one moment questioned by any honourable professional man.

Our Correspondent "Pous" has obliged us with the following useful hint as to the Duties of Constables under the recent statute.

Permit me to direct your attention to the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 33, entitled "An Act for facilitating the Collection of County Rates, and for relieving High Constables from attendance at Quarter Sessions in certain cases, and from certain other duties." Sec. 8, after reciting that it is expedient to relieve high constables, in certain cases, "from the duty of attending at the Court of Quarter Sessions," enacts, That where high constables have heretofore been usually appointed at courts of quarter sessions, the high constables of such places shall hereafter be appointed by such justices as may be present at the special session of their division, held for the purpose of hearing appeals against the rate.

As high constables have an idea that their attendance will not, under the Act, be required at the quarter sessions, perhaps it will be as well to destroy that pleasant hope, to prevent their getting into a scrape, by informing them, that although the Act recites that it is expedient to relieve them in certain cases from the duty of attending, yet the slight mistake (not by any means unusual) has been made of omitting any mention of what those certain cases are. The whole section is a confused jumble, both as regards the sense and structure of the sentence—"But if the hundred or other like division." What is a like division? A new legal phrase has been used in one place, where justices may determine the DIVISION of the special sessions. The whole section well deserves your attention, and your able commentary to arrive at the true meaning, which at present can only be guessed at.

The subject of "PROFESSIONAL COSTUME" continues to excite a great deal of interest. We select from the correspondence on the subject some of the best of the arguments pro and con. J. B. W. thus writes:—

The resumption of an appropriate professional costume is of more importance than many are inclined to suppose. Mr. Durrant's letter places the matter in a proper light. If wearing gowns do no more for us than relieve us from the crush, obstruction, and general inconvenience of a crowded court, that is sufficient to overthrow the only "argument" I ever heard against it. But as it will also manifestly mark the attorney, it will also mark the fraudulent pretender. We shall be more observant of the person who, without a frock, is yet doing in court that which denotes an attorney. Counsel will and must be less blind to the real character of him who hands over a brief.

The only counter observation is that the appearance of a gentleman is more appropriate than the close resemblance to an usher. But I presume the gown to be used will sufficiently mark a distinction. If the matter were put to the vote, a vast majority would be found in favour of the proposal. Still it is manifest the silent majority quail to the fear of being ridiculed by some of their dissenting brethren. Permit me to suggest a simple mode of turning the laugh upon the other side. Let those in favour of the revival request the leaders on their circuit upon the opening of the commission, to announce to the judge their intention and solicit his lordship's direction to the officers of the Court that they take cognizance of the attorney's gown and see the wearer has his rightful facility of entrance and his proper seat in court. If, as I assume, the right to wear a gown is clear, his lordship would doubtless comply, and methinks the ambition, the misplaced ambition, of being in a court of justice "a gentleman" instead of "a lawyer," will gradually subside before the prospect of comfort attached to the wearer of the gown; and who can doubt that the provoking smile of ridicule which curled the lip outside the court will sink into sobered gravity at the usher's sceptical remark, "You are not an attorney, sir"? It is true he might beckon to a costumed brother to testify that he is an attorney, but as the gown would supersede the unpleasant necessity of the reference to one upon whom he had inflicted the sneer, depend upon it gowns would prosper while sneers died away.

The same plan is applicable to all courts, even to petty sessions; and since nobody can be more interested in the aspect and order of his court than its president, it is difficult to imagine any judge, commissioner, or magistrate who would not feel that in compliance he studied his own official dignity while he granted ease and comfort to the practitioners before him.

On the same subject of "Attorneys' Gowns," X. Y. who dates from South Ham, Devon, differs from the majority of our correspondents, and thus urges the argument. He subjoins some just remarks upon SHAM ATTORNEYS.

"It appears to me that gowns would prove very inconvenient to be worn by attorneys in crowded courts such as the assizes; their case differs widely from that of counsel, for the former are necessarily more locomotive, and it often happens that they are obliged to pass in and out and to and fro through densely-crowded avenues, and to go about the assize town "in all weathers." I submit that gowns would therefore prove a sad incumbrance. Counsel, too, have, I believe, generally the privileged accommodation of a robing-room, where they divest themselves at pleasure of their gowns and wigs, but which cannot be expected to be provided for attorneys. Nevertheless I am an advocate for a distinctive badge; what it should be I am not prepared to suggest, unless it were something like the costume which I remember seeing worn in a French court at Paris. I cannot well describe it, except by terming it a sort of scarf attached to the back, of very chaste appearance, and free from the least approach to an incumbrance; indeed, I should say it was invented to avoid that objection; some of your correspondents can no doubt describe it better, and add their opinion as to its eligibility for our purpose.

SHAM ATTORNEYS.

I have reason to suspect that the names of attorneys are often indorsed on briefs without their knowledge, and even with fictitious names purporting to be those of attorneys; and how is this to be detected, seeing that no address or description is required?

Suppose a brief handed to counsel with the name of "Smith," or even "John Smith," indorsed; this is primâ facie the name of an attorney, and it cannot be expected that counsel should go into a cross-examination to ascertain whether it be a real Simon Pure who hands or sends him the brief; the name may not be even a forgery, but that of the pseudo practitioner himself, and so the matter passes: no impropriety seems to be surmised as possible, so as a name be indorsed. The only feasible mode I can suggest of obviating this palpable mischief is, that all cases and matters coming before courts of justice, or for the present argument I may confine myself to the quarter sessions, should be entered with the clerk of the peace after the manner of entering causes at Nisi Prius, or appeals at sessions, in a book for this express purpose, in a tabular form, with columns for the names of the attorneys concerned on each side (and, query, counsel also), or, if none be employed by a party, then the words "in person" to be inserted. It might not be practicable to insist on this being done previously to the sessions, or within a limited period before the coming on of the business; but, so far as convenience would admit, this should be required; and, in all cases not previously entered, the object might be attained by the officer of the court demanding the names at the time of calling on the business, and immediately inserting them in the appropriate columns; but both the Christian and surname should be given, and the place of residence, or there would be no effectual security, especially in populous towns or districts. Let this "Book of Entry" be accessible to attorneys without fee, and the malpractice complained of would be cut up by the root. This hint may doubtless be improved on. Something must be done to quash the grievance, and I can think of nothing better than that every person presenting himself as an officer of the court should produce his testimonial, or, which would have same result, comply with a regulation perfectly facile, by which his qualification may be tested.

A SUGGESTION.

SOME correspondents have reminded us of a suggestion we threw out some months since for the formation of an Insurance and Reversionary Interest Society among the Profession.

We can assure our friends, that although other subjects have for a time engrossed our attention, this one has not been forgotten. The many communications which the publication of the plan called forth have been duly weighed, objections have been considered, and improvements adopted, and again we propose to direct to it in a more matured shape the attention of the readers of the LAW TIMES.

The proposition is founded upon the following considerations. Societies for the purchase of Reversionary Interests and Insurance Offices everywhere flourish. By whom are they mainly supported? By the Solicitors. What advantage do they reap in return? A paltry five per cent. upon their payments. The profits pass into the pockets of capitalists, for whose lion's shares the attorney is the provider.

The plan we are about to submit to the serious consideration of the Profession will have for its object the securing to those who bring the business all the benefits of it. As thus.

We propose to form a Solicitors' Reversionary Interest and Insurance Society, for the purpose of Life Assurance in all the forms required in practice, and the purchase of Reversionary Interests.

The Society to be in the nature, partly of a Mutual, and partly of a Proprietary office; for inasmuch as a capital will be necessary at first, this can only be supplied by shares, which we propose shall bear a fixed interest, and to be paid off as soon as the funds will permit.

The profits of the Society we propose to apply thus—and herein lies the novelty, and to the Profession the vast advantages of the scheme—One half to be divided among the insurers. The other half to form a permanent fund to be applied as follows:

Pensions to the widows of members of the Profession transacting their business with the Society.

Pensions to unmarried daughters, and children under age.

Pensions to members of the Profession in old age.

Occasional relief to distressed members.

The amount of pensions to be regulated, first, according to the amount of profits, of course; and secondly, according to the amount of business brought into the office by each member.

Estimating the vast amount of insurances which the Solicitors yearly effect, and which it will be in their power to bring to their own Society, there is little doubt that in a very few years the profits would be sufficient to provide liberally for the old age or orphan families of all its members.

We do not propose that this Society should attempt to obtain business by any of the usual arts. Every security for the interest of the insurers should be taken that ingenuity can suggest. A competent and responsible Directory should be formed, the sanction of an Act of Parliament given to it, and the fund that is to meet the calls held sacred and apart. Our design is only that the legitimate profits which the Solicitors now carry to other offices and stranger proprietaries, shall be secured for their own benefit.

It may be said that already we have the Law, the Legal, and other professional Insurance Offices; but these, though in name associated with the Profession, are not so in reality. Who reaps any advantage from them save the proprietary, who are not of us? The plan we have suggested differs from all existing ones in this, that it will bonâ fide secure to the Profession the entire profits of their own business.

This is but a rude outline of a scheme, the details of which would occupy two or three pages. We throw it out for discussion, and shall be glad to hear opinions upon it and suggestions of improvement. We conscientiously believe it to be one of a series of measures to be accomplished by a cordial union of the Profession, which will go far to make it what it ought to be and will be, if the work be begun in right earnest, the most influential, because the most respectable and intelligent, body of gentlemen in the empire.

IRREGULAR PRACTICES.

Assuming as undeniable the fact, that in the Central Criminal Court and the Middlesex Sessions frequently, and at the assizes and county sessions sometimes, briefs are accepted by some counsel from persons who are not attorneys, and therefore not authorized to give them, we proceed now to the consideration of the remedies for the mischief.

The Morning Chronicle, which has handled the subject with great spirit and ability, is of opinion that, in a more strict examination and in a closer scrutiny into character, before admission to the Bar, is to be found the cure. This might do something: it might check, but it would not eradicate, the evil. Unscrupulous persons would still find their way to the counsel table, for few fall until they are tempted, and temptation seldom besets a man until he is thrown upon the world. An unexceptionable youth might yet result in a very disreputable manhood.

While, therefore, we would not oppose the subjection of an aspirant to the duties of an Advocate to any fair trial of his fitness, when on his way to the post which his ill-conduct disgraces as much as his worthy maintenance of its high standard of honour exalts, we would strenuously urge the superior advantages of a stricter watch over him when he has arrived there. The checks now nominally imposed must be really brought into play. The Bar must set itself up as the jealous guardian of its own honour. The Benchers must perform the duty devolving on them. The Judges must lend their aid; and, last, but not least—for they may accomplish more than Bar, Benchers, and Judges together—the Attorneys must take up the question, and not only wield the rod they hold in their hands in terrorem, but use it!

What should the Bar do? Adopt some formal resolutions to the effect that the practices recently revealed are unprofessional, and that it is contrary to etiquette to accept briefs from any but an attorney or his known clerk acting bonâ fide for and under the immediate sanction of his master. This, though the acknowledged rule, is evaded under various pretences. A formal reissuing of it will leave no excuse for its violation hereafter.

And at the courts which have witnessed the worst instances of its breach, there should be a special interference for the suppression of the mischief. Let the Bars of the Central Criminal Court and the Middlesex Sessions form a mess, as do the Bars on the Circuits, dining together once a year. If any offend against the rules, let them be expelled. If any refuse to join, or be expelled, let the Attorneys do their duty towards those who act honourably, and one and all refuse to give briefs to one who will not make, or will not keep, a rule framed as much for the benefit of the Attorneys as for that of the Bar—or more.

The Benchers should second the effort at purification by disbarring for very gross breaches of professional decorum.

And the Judges might exercise their authority, and virtually suspend, by refusing to hear, a counsel who has forfeited his character.

But the Attorneys, as we have said, may do more than all; indeed, they have the remedy in their own hands, if they will but use it fearlessly. Let them unanimously resolve, and let the resolution be known, that their briefs will not be given to any counsel who offends against the rule that a brief shall come only through an attorney.

And that the sham lawyers may be extinguished, we would earnestly recommend the establishment of a roll of practitioners at the Central Criminal Court, to which any attorney shall be admissible, but over which the Judges shall have so much control as to enable them to erase from it the name of any person guilty of improper conduct. There could then be no excuse for counsel accepting a brief from any person who is not on that roll; and were he to do so, his punishment would be signal, and his employer would be subject to the penalties of the Solicitors Act.

We throw out these suggestions with deference, and if there be objections, we shall be glad to hear them. It is agreed on all hands that something must be done; and that being admitted, the wisest course is to set ourselves seriously to the consideration of what that something shall be. The time for talking is past; the time for action is come; but it will be as well to deliberate before we act.

THE HEIR-AT-LAW SOCIETY.

We are about to lay before our readers the arcana of a speculation calling itself The Heir-at-Law Society. Ere we do so, we desire to be armed with as many documents as possible which may throw light upon its dark doings. We shall feel obliged for any authentic information which may have reached any member of the Profession in the course of his practice. If expressly desired, communications on the subject will be held in strict confidence.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

From two or three quarters has our attention been directed to a highly reprehensible advertisement in the Birmingham Gazette of Oct. 7th. If any of our readers could help us to trace the offender, we will place him in the pillory. Here it is:—

"TO SOLICITORS.

"A Professional Gentleman in London being desirous to extend his Practice, will undertake the Agency of any respectable Country Solicitor, at a stated annual remuneration, to be regulated according to the nature of the practice.—Letters addressed to A. Z. at Mr. Gregory's, Law Stationer, No. 7, Cook's-court, Lincoln's-inn, London.—References as to respectability will be given and required."

We should like much to see the "references as to respectability." The same advertisement has appeared also in the Liverpool Mail.

SHAM LAWYERS.

Another of these suspicious personages has made his public appearance. This is a copy of a card which has been circulated in the neighbourhood of Slough. Let the Law Societies look out:—

"J. HARMAN,

"County Court Bailiff, for Bucks, Berks, and Surrey, and Collector of Debts and Rents, Slough, Bucks.

"Attends at No. 14, Church-street, Windsor; the George Inn, Colnbrook; Swan Inn, Maidenhead; and Barleymow, London-street, Reading; once a fortnight: the George Inn, Iver; George Inn, Chalfont, St. Peter's; One Tun, Sunning-hill; Red Lion, Great Marlow; Bull Inn, Wooburn Green; and King's Arms, Egham; once a month: where all orders in J. Harman's department will be duly attended to, and all money paid over as soon as received.

"Commission, two shillings in the pound, on the amount collected, and one shilling for a letter, if nothing got."

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The fourth number of Bittleston and Symons's Magistrates' Cases was published yesterday, and the first part, containing all the cases of the last two Terms, is now ready. Price to members, 4s.; to the public, 6s.

The third and fourth numbers of the Real Property and Conveyancing Cases are in the press.

We are pleased to be enabled to announce a considerable accession of members. The following gentlemen have joined the Society since our last publication:—

Gregson, Edw. R. Walton, Norfolk.
Edge, Mathias, Ormskirk.
Tucker, Robert, Ashburton.
Waldron, James, Wiveliscombe.
Scholey, John, Wakefield.
Wartnaby, George, Lutterworth.
Mounsey, G. G. Carlisle.
Gaches, Wm. Daniel, Peterborough.
Palin, Richard, Shrewsbury.
Knowles, Isaac, Wellington, Salop.
Collis, Wm. Blow, Stourbridge.
Preston, Chas. Abbot, Debenham.
Sperling, J. M. Walton-on-the-Naze.
Cowdery, Chas. Newport, Isle of Wight.
Handy, John T. Malmesbury.
Badger, Thomas, Attorney and Coroner, Rotherham.
Dewes, William, Ashby-de-la-Zouch.
Sykes, Edward, Wakefield.
Kenyon, George, Thorne.

Best on Presumptions of Law and Fact.

Mr. Best then proceeds to consider the presumptions that arise in international and maritime law. He remarks:—

"With respect to international law, its very existence as a science rests on one important presumption. 'In the silence of any positive rule,' says Dr. Story, 'affirming or denying, or restraining the operation of foreign laws, courts of justice presume the tacit adoption of them by their own government, unless they are repugnant to its policy, or prejudicial to its interests.' (Story, Conflict of Laws, chap. 2, art. 38.) 'So,' says Professor Greenleaf, 'a spirit of amity, and a disposition to friendly intercourse, are presumed to exist among nations as well as among individuals.' (Greenl. L. Ev. art. 43, p. 48.)"

The various presumptions as to domicile, &c. are then examined seriatim. So in maritime law the presumptions of seaworthiness, of loss of the ship from absence, and so forth, are set out in order.

The next chapter is devoted to miscellaneous presumptions, such as the ownership of the soil of rivers, highways, wastes, ways, and in cases of contracts.

"In the case of contracts between individuals, many presumptions of law are to be found, based on general policy and convenience. Thus, it is conclusive presumption of law, that an instrument under seal has been given for consideration; which presumption can only be removed by impeaching the document for fraud. (3 Stark. Ev. 931, 3rd ed.; Lowe v. Peers, 4 Burr. 2229.) There is a remarkable exception to this rule, where the consideration of an instrument under seal is a restraint of trade, in which case a consideration must appear on the face of the instrument. (See Mitchell v. Reynolds, 1 P. W. 181, and the judgment of Parke, B. in Mallan v. May, 11 M. & W. 65, where most of the cases are referred to.) So, although in the case of contracts not under seal a consideration is not in general presumed (Rann v. Hughes, 7 T. R. 350, n. a), we have seen that the rule is reversed in bills of exchange, promissory notes, and some other mercantile documents. (Chitty and Hulme on Bills of Exchange, 68, 69; Byles on Bills, 2, 88, 4th ed.)"

We come now to

Part III.

ON PRESUMPTIVE PROOF IN CRIMINAL CASES.

All judicial evidence is divided into direct or circumstantial.

"When the existence of any fact is attested by witnesses, as having come under the cognizance of their senses, or is stated in documents, the genuineness and veracity of which there seems no reason to question, the evidence of that fact is said to be direct, or positive. By circumstantial evidence, on the contrary, is meant, that the existence of the principal fact is only inferred from one or more circumstances which have been established directly. And when the existence of the principal fact does not follow from the evidentiary facts as a necessary consequence of the laws of nature, but is deduced from them by a process of probable reasoning, the evidence and proof are said to be presumptive. (3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 2.)

The value of presumptive evidence is thus accurately set forth:—

"The elements, or links, which compose a chain of presumptive proof in criminal cases, are certain moral and physical coincidences, which individually indicate delinquency in the accused; and the probative force of the whole depends on the number, independence, weight, and consistency of those elementary circumstances. A number of circumstances, each individually very slight, may so tally and confirm each other, as to leave no room for doubt of the fact they tend to establish; but if they are not independent of each other, and all arise from one source, an increase in the number of the circumstances does not increase the probability of the hypothesis. (Beccaria, s. 7; Theory of Presumptive Proof, 57; 1 Stark. Ev. 567, 3rd ed.) But it is also of the utmost importance to bear in mind, that, where a number of independent circumstances all point to the same conclusion, the probability of the justness of that conclusion is not merely the sum of the simple probabilities of the circumstances composing the chain, but is the multiplied, or compound ratio of them.(a) 'Not to speak,' says Mr. Bentham, 'of greater numbers, even two articles of circumstantial evidence, though each taken by itself weigh but as a feather—join them together, you will find them pressing on the delinquent with the weight of a millstone.' (3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 242.) Thus, on an indictment for uttering a bank-note, knowing it to be counterfeit, proof that the accused uttered a counterfeit note amounts to nothing, or next to nothing—any person might have a counterfeit note in his possession: but suppose further proof adduced, that, shortly before the transaction, he had, in another place, and to another person, offered another counterfeit note, the presumption of guilty knowledge becomes very strong. Lastly, the circumstances composing the chain must all be consistent with each other,—a principle sufficiently obvious in itself, and which will be further illustrated presently."

Mr. Best properly condemns the absurd arguments frequently urged against presumptive evidence in general. But, on the other hand, he is equally energetic in denouncing an opposite error, still more dangerous.

"Juries have been told from the bench, even in capital cases, that 'where a violent presumption necessarily arises from circumstances, they are more convincing and satisfactory than any other kind of evidence, because facts cannot lie' (b). Numerous remarks might be made on this strange proposition; the first of which that presents itself is, that the moment we talk of any thing following as a necessary consequence from others, all idea of presumptive reasoning is at an end. (2 Ev. Poth. 329.) Secondly, even assuming the truth of the assertion, that facts or circumstances cannot lie, still, so long as witnesses and documents, by which the existence of those facts is to be established (Domat, liv. 3, tit. 6; Theory of Presumptive Proof, p. 28), can, so long will it be impossible to arrive at infallible conclusions. But, without dwelling on these considerations, look at the broad proposition—facts cannot lie. Can they not, indeed? When, in order to effect the ruin of a poor servant, his box is opened with a false key, and a quantity of goods stolen from his master deposited in it: or, where a man is found dead, with a bloody weapon lying beside him, which is proved to belong to a person with whom he had a quarrel a short time before, and footmarks of that person are traced near the corpse; but the murder has been in reality committed by a third person, who, owing a spite to both, put on the shoes and borrowed the weapon of one to kill the other,—do not the circumstances lie—wickedly, cruelly lie? (c) There is reason to fear, that a blind reliance on the dictum, that 'circumstances cannot lie,' has occasionally exercised a mischievous effect in the administration of justice." (d)

Having compared these two classes of evidence, and clearly pointed out their relative advantages and disadvantages, he thus draws his conclusion:—

"The true principle of criminal jurisprudence is, that, whatever the nature of the evidence against an accused party, his guilt must be essentially connected with the facts proved, so as to flow from them by a species of moral necessity. In other words, conviction must not be grounded on suspicion, or even on a preponderance of probability on the side of delinquency in the accused, but must be based on such a moral certainty of his guilt, as, if not sufficient to destroy all contrary hypotheses, shall at least reduce them within the limits of physical possibility.(e) The nature of this moral certainty is, however, more easily conceived than defined,(f) and, as applied to presumptive proof, will be best understood by attentive consideration of instances where the ends of justice have been successfully attained by well-conducted reasoning on evidence exclusively of that nature."

Some remarkable instances of presumptive evidence in criminal cases are related, and then Mr. Best proceeds to define the rules that should govern circumstantial proof. But to these we must revert in another notice.

By the text of the Roman law, prosecutors were to be required to prove their charges, either "idoneis testibus, apertissimis documentis, vel indiciis luce clarioribus." Cod. lib. 4, tit. 19, l. 25. See also the rescript of the Emperor Trajan, Dig. lib. 48, tit. 19, l. 5; and, for the canon law, see Sanchez de Matrimonio, lib. 10; Disput. 12, No. 40 and 41.

(f) Beccaria dei Delitti e delle Pene, Vienna, 1798, s. 7. "For which reason," continues the author, "I deem that the best judicial system which associates with the principal judge assessors, not selected, but chosen by lot; for in such matters the conclusion of an untechnical mind, judging by common sense, is safer than that of a learned one, judging by opinion. Where the law is clear and precise, the duty of the tribunal is limited to ascertaining the existence of facts; and although, in seeking the proofs of crime, ability and dexterity are required; although, in summing up the result of those proofs, clearness and precision are indispensable; still, in order to draw a conclusion from them, nothing more is required than plain ordinary good sense—less fallacious than the science of a judge accustomed to seek the proofs of guilt, and who reduces every thing to an artificial system formed by study." What a tribute to our common-law mode of trial by judge and jury, which, independent of its value on constitutional grounds, affords justice a double chance, by uniting the wisdom of a fixed, with the integrity of a casual tribunal, while it avoids in a great measure the inconveniences of both! See also the observations of Lord Tenterden, in R. v. Burdett, 4 B. & A. 162; Paley's Moral Philosophy, b. 6, c. 8; and 1 Stark. Ev. 539, 3rd ed.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

THE MONEY MARKET.

FRIDAY.—The Stock Market is more buoyant to-day, business having been resumed in many of the "shut Stocks," which are now marked ex. dividend. Consols are 100⅝ ¾ again for Money, and for Account we should call them 100¾ to ⅞. Bank Stock is marked 205½ to 206½, without the interest, and India Stock is 288 to 289. The New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents. 102¾ to 103. Exchequer Bills are 75s. to 77s. prem.

The Foreign Securities have been at about previous rates. In Spanish there is not much doing. They are 23⅜ ½ for the Five per Cents. and 34⅜ ½ for the Three per Cents. Portuguese Converted Bonds have been 50½ to 51. Mexican Stock is quiet at 34½, and Colombian at 14½. Brazilian Stock is worth 85½ to 86¼, and Peruvian, 26. Belgian Bonds are 1 4¼. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents. 62½ ¾.

The Railway Shares have been quiet again. The new opposition line to Portsmouth affects South-Western. The French lines are very brisk, especially the Orleans, Tours, and Bordeaux of Mackenzie, which has obtained the grant from the French government, though, we apprehend, upon terms which are too favourable to the State, and only likely to make it more exacting.

PROPERTY IN SHARES.—On Friday, at the Auction-mart, Mr. Shuttleworth put up for sale by auction 100 shares in the Thames Tunnel, upon which 50*l.* each had been paid, amounting to 5,000*l.* The attendance of capitalists was rather numerous, in consequence of the same auctioneer having several other lots of valuable property to dispose of: but they appeared to "resolve unanimously" that this was a bad lot, and after a very sluggish and slight competition, they were knocked down to an extensive shareholder in the undertaking at the exceedingly low price of 6s. per 50*l.* share, realizing only 30*l.*, and 4,970*l.* less than had been paid for them. The sale was a bonâ fide one, the shares having been put up by the executors of a deceased gentleman.—Sun.

COOKE v. TURNER.

Practice—Insufficiency of answer—Will—Clause of forfeiture.

Sir G. O. P. T. by his will gave an annuity of 2,000l. a year to his only child and heiress-at-law: the will contained a proviso that if at any time she should dispute his will or his ANIMUS TESTANDI, or refuse to confirm the same so far as she could, or if any proceedings should at any time be taken by any person or persons whomsoever, by any possible result of which any estate or interest could by any way be attained by his said daughter of larger extent than was intended by the will, and such proceedings should not be formally disavowed by her to the full extent of her ability, then in lieu of the said annuity of 2,000l. per annum the testator gave her an annuity of 300l. a year only. A bill was filed by the trustees of the will against the heiress-at-law, and other parties interested in the testator's estate to have the will established, and the trusts thereof carried into execution. The bill, among other things, alleged that the testator had been a lunatic, but that he had recovered his senses before the execution of his will. H. E. F., his heiress-at-law, under the fear of incurring the forfeiture, would not, in her answer, set up the testator's insanity, and, therefore, did not answer any of the interrogatories relating to that point. To this part of the answer the plaintiffs excepted:—Held, that the defendant was not bound to answer any part of these interrogatories wherein the forfeiture clause was involved, as the defendant might thereby be placed in a worse position.

The testator, Sir Gregory O. P. Turner, by his last will and testament, dated June, 1841, devised all his real estates to the plaintiff, Rev. T. L. Cooke and the Rev. L. G. G. Dryden, in fee simple during the life of his wife Dame Helen Eliza Page Turner, and his daughter Helen Elizabeth, the wife of C. G. Fryer, and the survivor of them upon trust, among other payments therein mentioned to pay his said daughter an annuity of 2,000l., and the residue of his income, after payment of his debts, funeral, and testamentary expenses, to his said wife for her life; and after the decease of either his said wife or daughter, to pay the whole of the income to the survivor, with remainder over as therein mentioned. And the testator afterwards declared, "that if his said daughter or her husband, or any person or persons in her, his, their, or any or either of their names, or upon her, his, their, or any or either of their behalf should dispute his said will, or his the said testator's competency to make the same, or if his said daughter and her said husband, or either of them, should refuse to confirm his said will, so far as he or she lawfully could when required by the said testator's executors, or either of them, so to do; or if they, or either of them, should lodge any caveat against proving the same, and if his said daughter and her said husband, or either of them, should refuse or neglect to withdraw, or cause to be withdrawn, such caveat for ten days after request made by his executors, or either of them, to that effect; or if any proceedings should at any time be had or taken by any person or persons whomsoever by any possible result of which any estate or interest could be in any way attainable by his said daughter or her husband, or any person or persons in her right of larger extent or value than was intended for her by his said will, and such proceedings should not be formally disavowed, stayed, or resisted by his said daughter and her husband to the full extent of their, her, or his ability so to do, then he revoked the trust, direction, and disposition thereinbefore contained for payment to his said daughter, or her appointees, in manner thereinbefore contained of the aforesaid yearly sum of 2,000l. and also the trust, direction and disposition thereinbefore contained for payment to her, or her appointees, in the event thereinbefore mentioned of the net rents, issues, and profits of his real estates thereinbefore devised, and also the liberty of residing in his said mansion-house, and all other benefits thereby given for his said daughter, or derivable by her under his said will: and in lieu thereof the said testator directed his said trustees by and out of the net rents, issues and profits of his said real estate to pay to his said daughter thenceforth the yearly sum of 300l. only during her natural life by equal half-yearly payments, to the intent that the same might be held and enjoyed by his said daughter for her own sole and separate use and enjoyment, independent of her then present, or any future husband, and that the same, or any part thereof, might not be subject to his debts, control, or engagements." The testator then directed that in case his said daughter should dispute his said will, or his competency to make the same, &c. the said trustees should, from and after the decease of his said wife, receive the rents, issues, and profits of the said real estates, and invest the same or the net surplus thereof after payment thereout of the said yearly sum of 300l. in their or his names or name, and stand possessed of the said stocks and funds, and all accumulations thereof, upon trust for, and for the only proper use and benefit of the person or persons who should first become entitled to an estate of inheritance of and in his real estates thereinbefore devised. The testator died without revoking the trusts of his wife in favour of his said daughter, Helen E. Fryer, in the month of March 1843, leaving her his only child and heiress at law surviving him. Shortly after proving the will of the testator, the plaintiffs filed the present bill, for the purpose of having the trusts thereof carried into execution. The testator's daughter, the said H. E. Fryer, who never had any issue, and her husband, Charles G. Fryer, were made defendants in the suit. Sir E. G. J. P. Turner and his son, who were also defendants, were entitled to the estates expectant upon the death of Helen Elizabeth Fryer without issue male. The bill alleged that the defendants, C. G. Fryer and Helen Elizabeth his wife, had refused to execute a deed to confirm the will of the testator, and charging that they refused to do so upon the ground that the testator was not capable of making a will. Several of the interrogatories were framed for the purpose of eliciting the fact of the testator's sanity at the time when he executed his will. The defendants, C. G. Fryer and Helen Elizabeth his wife, although they did not by their answer admit the testator's will; yet they admitted that the writing set forth and described in the bill to be the last will and testament of Sir G. O. P. Turner contained the clause of forfeiture and the other beforementioned clauses. They moreover admitted that they did not execute a deed which had been sent to them by the plaintiffs for execution; but they refrained from answering any of the interrogatories that had been put to them for the sake of proving the soundness of the testator's mind, or which might seem to have respect to that question. Out of sixteen exceptions which the plaintiff took for insufficiency to the defendant's answer, the Master allowed three only. The plaintiff took exceptions to the Master's report, and upon these exceptions the case was brought before the Court; but the exceptions upon which the plaintiff mainly relied and insisted were, the sixth, seventh, and twelfth. Exception the sixth was—that the defendants had not answered whether the testator did not make occasional or some excursions or excursion into the country, and whether or not to the sea-side, and whether or not without any keeper, and whether or not without any attendants other than his own domestic servants. The seventh exception related to the intimacy which the defendants had with the testator in the latter part of his life; his capability of forming a correct and rational judgment of all such affairs as came under his notice, and of understanding and transacting matters of business; and whether they the said defendants, or any of the testator's other relations and friends, ever, during the last three or four years of his life, expressed or intimated a doubt of the testator's capacity to understand or take part in the usual transactions of life, or to form a rational judgment of the state of his affairs. The twelfth exception was, that the defendants had not answered the interrogatory relating to divers conversations and communications which the defendants had during the testator's lifetime, and since his decease, with each other and various other persons, respecting the mental capacity and the habits of the testator, and whether they had not thereby admitted and stated, and heard it stated by persons competent to form an opinion, that the said testator was before, and at, and after the date and execution of his said will, competent to make and execute a will, and to understand the purport or effect thereof, and generally to understand and transact business.

Stuart and Freeling, in support of the exceptions, contended that for a testator to insert a clause of forfeiture to prevent his will being disputed, was contrary to the policy of law, and that in the present instance, the clause in the testator's will having such for its object, was therefore invalid, it being a different case from that wherein the heir-at-law is put to his election. But, even upon the supposition that the forfeiture clause was valid, when some actual proceedings had been instituted by the defendants for disputing the will and the sanity of the testator, could it be said that the mere involuntary act of theirs in answering the interrogatories introduced into a will, for the purpose of eliciting an answer touching those facts, be looked upon as constituting a forfeiture? Lastly, supposing such an answer did amount to a forfeiture, have not the defendants already incurred that forfeiture by their answer, wherein they admit that they have not executed the deed confirming the will? If so, is not their refusal to answer the bill under the pretence of their liability to forfeiture utterly groundless? as was decided in the late case of Yewing v. Osbaldiston, where a defendant, having answered one portion of the bill, which brought him under the penalty of a certain Act of Parliament, he could not, upon the ground of liability to the statutory penalty, refuse to answer the other portion of the bill.

Cases cited: Lloyd v. Spillet (3 P. W. 344); Powell v. Morgan (2 Vern. 91); Morris v. Burroughs (1 Atk. 399).

Bethel and Willcock, who appeared for the defendants, were not heard.

The Vice Chancellor.—It appears to my mind that these defendants ought not to be compelled to put in any further answer, for a most serious question stands in the background, viz. whether a forfeiture may not be incurred by answering, and that certainly is not a point which can be determined upon the question whether the answer shall proceed any further. The parties have already answered to a certain extent, and in a manner which they conceived prevented their incurring the risk of forfeiting the benefit they derived under the will. They, however, are now called upon to put in a further answer. Take, for instance, the third exception; one of the interrogatories is, whether the wife of the testator had not separated herself from the said Sir Gregory Osborne Page Turner in consequence of his unsoundness of mind, and whether she did not [illegible] return to and [illegible] with him as his wife until his decease. Now it would be no benefit to [illegible] if the defendants answered this part of the interrogatory whilst they left the [illegible] not answered. The same reasoning is applicable to the other exceptions. No advantage could be [illegible] by answering them only partially. The only point to be decided seems to be this, whether, when such a question of forfeiture is raised upon [illegible] of the bill as this, can the Court, in justice, compel the defendants to answer further, placing them perhaps, by so doing, as regards the question of forfeiture, in a more unfavourable position? Suppose the defendants even answered fully, and at the hearing the plaintiffs' counsel stated there was an objection to the will and that they wanted an issue to try its validity, it would be a matter of course for the Court to direct one. On the whole, it appears to me that these defendants ought not to be compelled to answer any further. Exceptions overruled.

HARDY v. HULL.

Practice—Service under the 23rd Order of August 1841.

Where a defendant, under the above order, was served with a copy of the bill, but was not required to appear or answer, died before appearance, it is necessary to bring his representative before the Court by a supplemental bill, and not by bill of revivor.

A defendant in this suit had been served with a copy of the bill under the 23rd order of August 1841, but was not required to appear to or answer the bill. The defendant died without having put in his appearance, or desired to be served with a notice of the proceedings therein under the 27th order. A question, therefore, arose in a former stage of the proceedings(a) whether, by virtue of the 25th order, the plaintiff could proceed in the suit without reviving it against the representatives of the deceased party, when the Court ordered the suit to be revived, and put in the same plight as it stood at the death of the defendant; it therefore stood over as an abated cause, with liberty to amend. A bill of revivor was afterwards filed to bring the personal representative of the deceased defendant before the Court.

The cause now came on to be heard.

Bethel appeared for some of the defendants, and objected that a bill of revivor was not the proper one to bring the representative of the late defendant before the Court, and cited Crowfoot v. Mander (9 Sim. 396).

K. S. Parker and Stinton, for the plaintiffs, contended that a simple bill of revivor was the only proper method of bringing such representative before the Court, for that, under the 23rd order, they were entitled to proceed in the suit exactly in the same manner as if the defendant had put in his appearance.

His HONOUR the VICE-CHANCELLOR thought that the proper means of bring the representative of the deceased defendant before the Court was by a supplemental bill.

Examination when insolvent not present—Order of remand.

The insolvents had been discharged from custody, and now did not appear, nor any one on their behalf.

Sir C. WILLIAMS.—If an insolvent prisoner gets his discharge for the mere purpose of going away, I shall treat him as guilty of fraud, and regard his discharge as void; but as his schedule is in court, I shall proceed with the examination of it as if he was present. If no one appear to account for an insolvent's absence, I shall certainly make an order of remand, that the Court may commit him again to custody, as this contempt of Court, for such it is, cannot be allowed.

Attorneys—and Attorneys' Clerks.

Re ANN DANKS.

Mr. W. H. Norton, of New-street, Bishopsgate-street, appeared in opposition and was examining the insolvent, when an individual present made a suggestion to her.

Mr. Norton inquired what the party was; was he a solicitor?

The reply was in the affirmative, when

Mr. Norton rejoined, "Do you mean to say you are a solicitor?"

The answer to this question was, "Not exactly a solicitor, but the clerk to one."

Sir C. WILLIAMS.—Who is the solicitor, then? why don't he attend? he ought to be here. To whom do you say you are clerk?

The individual replied, "To Mr. Roberts, of Church-street, Trinity-square."

Sir C. WILLIAMS.—Then Mr. Roberts ought to be here. If persons pay for legal advice and assistance, they ought to have it, and not be cheated by the attendance of clerks. What control have I over clerks? none. But I have over solicitors of the Court, and if any thing goes wrong in the case, I know what to do with them.

Mr. Norton inquired the gentleman's name, when he said "Jones."

Mr. Norton.—But your Christian name?

Jones.—Jacob.

Mr. Norton. Then you say your name is Jacob Jones, and you are clerk to Mr. Roberts?

Jones having assented, Mr. Norton directed his clerk to make a memorandum of the name.

Sir C. WILLIAMS.—And now, pray, why is not Mr. Roberts here?

Jones.—I prepared the schedule, and, being acquainted with the proceedings, I attended here for him.

Sir C. WILLIAMS.—I will not tolerate this conduct. I can perfectly understand the meaning of it. Persons would find it by far the cheapest plan to employ respectable people at once, and there are plenty of respectable solicitors in London willing to do business on fair and reasonable terms. Pray, madam, how came he to be employed by you?

The Insolvent.—He came to me in prison where I was confined. [She then added, with a strong emphasis], If I had known he was not a solicitor he never should have been employed by me.

Sir C. WILLIAMS.—And have you ever seen Mr. Roberts?

Jones.—Why, Sir Charles, Mr. Roberts himself witnessed her signature.

Insolvent.—And very much astonished I was to see him; and I have never seen him before or since.

Sir C. WILLIAMS.—A very strong inference arises out of that fact, certainly.

Mr. Norton.—Then you only knew this gentleman as your attorney?

Insolvent.—That was all.

Mr. Norton.—Did he ever represent himself to you as an attorney?

Insolvent.—Not exactly; but I always thought he was a man of law, or something of the sort.

Sir C. WILLIAMS.—I am very glad that this incident has come out. Poor people really ought and shall be protected in this court. It is monstrous that a poor creature is perhaps scraping and rending every thing he has in the world to raise a guinea or two to procure qualified legal assistance, and is then imposed on by a person who can't appear on his behalf. Why should an attorney send his clerk here to conduct his case? By the same rule the clerk might send his clerk, and a counsel his clerk, and then where would the Court be? I shall keep a careful look-out on certain parties; there are too many such practices going on.

The learned Commissioner subsequently added, that as he had been the means of depriving her, to a certain extent, of the assistance she had anticipated, he would take care she should not suffer by the misconduct of another. The examination then proceeded.

REGISTRATION COURTS.

CITY OF LONDON.

Thursday, Oct. 10.

(Before Mr. ARNOLD.)

Re JOHN AUGUSTUS LOCK.

Occupation by lodgers.

Occupiers of rooms in a house not occupied by the landlord are entitled to vote.

The REVISING BARRISTER gave judgment in this case. John Augustus Lock was duly objected to. His name was in the list in respect of the occupation of "two rooms, 26, Botolph-lane." It was proved that he occupied, for the purposes of dwelling, two rooms on the first floor of a house, 26, Botolph lane, which communicated with each other. The house consisted of four stories. The ground-floor was occupied as a warehouse, to which there was a separate entrance from the street. The second and third floors were occupied each by another party. The access to the first and other floors was by the common street-door of the house, a key of which was in the possession of each of the tenants of these three floors; and each tenant had the key and exclusive right of access to the apartments in his own occupation. The landlord did not reside in, or occupy any part of, the house. No question arose as to residence, value, or rating, as upon the latter point it appeared that the party had claimed to be rated upon the only rate made in this parish in the course of the year; and that at the time of such claim the rates for the house had been paid. In support of the objection it was urged, not only that the qualification as proved was not sufficient, but that the qualification as stated in the list was insufficient in law, and that therefore the name ought to be expunged under the 40th section of the 6th Vict. c. 18. With regard to the latter point, I am of opinion that the objection cannot prevail. Assuming that the two rooms in question constitute such a "building" as would under the 27th sect. of the Reform Act, confer the franchise on the occupier thereof, although it may be that designation is not the most accurate or proper that might have been adopted, I cannot say it is such a statement of the qualification as to render it "insufficient in law." Suppose an entire building consisted of two rooms only, or that two rooms, forming what in common parlance might be considered as a portion of a building, were quite detached and separated from all other portions of the building, and had a distinct entrance; in either case there can be little doubt that the occupation of these two rooms would be sufficient. If they were occupied for the purposes of dwelling, they might properly be designated as a "house;" if used as a "warehouse," "counting-house," or "shop," they might be so described; if used professionally, there probably would be no objection to their being called "chambers" or "offices;" or they might possibly be occupied in some manner which would render it difficult to give them any particular designation. In that case it might be said that the generic term "building" might be adopted; but that would appear to be open to more objection on the score of vagueness than the description now in question; and in the former class of cases, where a more particular description might be given, the only objection would be, that such description had not been adopted. That would, however, I think, be rather a case where the revising barrister might, if he thought it necessary, change the description of the qualification, "for the purpose of more clearly and accurately defining the same," under the same section of the Act first referred to. Whether that power should be exercised in this case it would be premature just now to consider. The other point is the more important and difficult one, and it resolves itself into the general question of the right of a lodger to vote where the landlord does not reside upon the premises, or occupy any part thereof. This question was under my consideration in 1811, when I revised the lists for the city of Westminster; and after a review of all the authorities on the subject, I was very much disposed to come to the conclusion that a person situated like the party in the present case was entitled to vote. As, however, the barristers who had preceded me had uniformly decided the other way, and at that time no direct appeal existed to a superior tribunal, I thought it the more prudent, as well as the more becoming, course to give up my own opinion, and not to introduce uncertainty into the franchise of that city. But as the Registration Act now enables parties to obtain a binding and satisfactory decision upon any point of law connected with the revision of the list of voters, I feel myself released from the difficulties I experienced on the former occasion. I have, therefore, again reviewed all the authorities which I formerly examined, and on further consideration I do not feel disposed to abandon my former opinion. It will not be necessary to recapitulate all those authorities, as they will be found to be cited or referred to by Mr. Elliott, in his work on registration, pp. 147 to 160, 2nd edition. The only two cases I would particularly mention are Rex v. Trapsham (2 Leach, 478), and Fenn v. Grafton (2 New Cases, 617). In the former of these cases, upon the question as to what was the dwelling-house of a party in which a robbery might be committed, Justice Gould, delivering the opinion of all the judges, used this language:—"The owner of the house is, if I may so express myself, the lord of it; but having relinquished every part of it to the habitation of others, it cannot with any propriety be considered his mansion or dwelling-house. The entirety which resides with him is split into several possessions, and every separate apartment, being in distinct and separate occupation, is the distinct mansion-house of its respective possessor." In Fenn v. Grafton, the Court of Common Pleas held, after consideration, that a plaintiff, who had only the separate use and occupation of the first floor and some other parts of the house, the defendants being in the occupation of the remainder, was in possession of a messuage, which term was also held to be synonymous with a dwelling-house. It does not distinctly appear from the report in Bingham that the defendants were not the landlords; but in the report of the same case in 2 Hodges, 58, it appears that both the plaintiff and the defendants held under the same landlord; and this fact, as the plaintiff and the defendants were in the occupation of the whole house between them, excludes the possibility of any part having been in the occupation of the landlord. And this case was fully recognized in Monks v. Dykes (4 M. & W. 567). And I find that my opinion upon this subject is confirmed by that of Mr. Elliott (pp. 156 and 157), and by a recent decision of my learned colleague Mr. Moylan, in the borough of Marylebone. I come, therefore, to the conclusion that the party whose case is now under consideration is entitled to be registered as for the occupation of "a dwelling-house." And I also think that this is a case in which I may change the description of the qualification from "two rooms" to "dwelling-house," so as more clearly and accurately to define the same. I shall therefore make that alteration, and the name of the party will be retained.

Re CHARLES ROBINSON.

Notice of claim—Insufficient description.

The occupier of rooms is not properly described as claiming for "part of a house." He should claim for "rooms."

The REVISING BARRISTER said—When the case was before me I did not advert to the description of the premises of the claimant, and received evidence upon the case generally, when it certainly appeared that the claimant was in occupation of the considerable portion of a house; that he resided there; that another party occupied a much smaller portion; and that the landlord did not reside upon, or occupy any part of, the premises; and upon this state of the facts, in conformity with the decision I have just given in Lock's case, I should have thought that the party was entitled to be registered as the occupier of a dwelling-house, or generally of a house. But upon consideration, I am of opinion, as I thought in a case on Saturday last, that the description of the qualification given in the claim is insufficient; that, in the language of the 38th section of the Registration Act, the party was not entitled to have his name inserted in the list of voters in respect of the qualification described in his notice of claim. "Part of a house" is clearly an insufficient qualification; and this is not like Lock's case, where the party was on the list in respect of the occupation of "two rooms." If this party had claimed in respect of the occupation of two rooms, the case would, I think, have been the same, because I there considered that "two rooms" might constitute a whole house, or a whole warehouse, &c.; and, in fact, I decided in that case that the two rooms in question did in law constitute an entire dwelling-house. But the case would have been different if the party had been on the list or had claimed as the occupier of "part of two rooms;" one room may constitute sufficient qualification, "part of a room" I think clearly would not. I think, therefore, I ought not to have received any evidence as to the nature of the premises occupied by the claimant, and that I must deal with the claim alone, which, for the reasons above given, I consider insufficient. I was reminded that in a case last year I came to a different decision. I have carefully reconsidered that case, and have come to the conclusion that I was wrong on that occasion; the present claim, therefore, will be disallowed.

REG. v. VALLER, EURICO, and HARRISON.

Forgery under 1 Wm. 4, c. 66, s. 19—Engraving a plate for a portion of a note, within the Act—A party employed to engrave a plate for the purpose of forgery on a foreign Government, communicated with the consul of that Government, and under his direction procured other persons to make the plate. Held, that those who actually engraved it were to be assumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to be innocent agents, and that the parties who had originally given the order were correctly indicted as principals in the forgery.

The prisoners were indicted under the 1 Wm. 4, c. 66, s. 19, for having engraved a plate for the purpose of forging certain orders for the payment of money, purporting to be the orders of the Administrator of Funds in the kingdom of Holland. There were other counts, charging them with knowingly having such forged plate in their possession. It appeared in evidence that the prisoners had applied to an artist named Rosenthal to engrave a copy of the coupons of the Netherlands Bank. Rosenthal, suspecting that there was an intention to defraud, communicated with the police, and also with the Dutch consul, on the subject, and, under the direction of the latter, he employed persons to engrave the plate in accordance with the order given him.

Clarkson, for the prisoner Eurico.—Rosenthal, without the privity of the other parties charged, employs others, and there is no evidence to shew that those who really made the plate were not guilty. If so, the indictment is incorrectly framed, since, if they were principals, the prisoners could only be accessories before the fact. Here all the counts charge a making, and not a causing to be made.

Charnock, for the prisoner Valler.—The parties engraving the plate, although taken to be innocent of any fraud, had no competent authority to engrave it. In legal contemplation, therefore, they are not innocent agents, so as to render the parties here indicted principals. The case of R. v. Bannen (2 Moody's Cr. Ca. 309) was somewhat similar to this, but there the Mint gave the authority to the agent to make the die, and was legally empowered to do so. Moreover, the coupon engraved is an imperfect instrument. It wants both number and signature; without these it is valueless.

GURNEY, B.—The instrument is laid in the indictment as part of an undertaking, and the Act of Parliament expressly mentions a perfect or imperfect instrument. As to the other objection, my brother Wightman and myself think it is answered by the facts of the case. The agents appear to have acted bonâ fide. If the prisoners rely on their being guilty, and therefore principals in the felony, it is for them to prove it. As to authority, this is a better authority than the one which was held sufficient in Reg. v. Bannen. There the solicitor to the Mint was the authorizing party; here it is the Consul of the Netherlands. A legal authority to coin or forge is impossible, but a sufficient authority has been given here.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THE various measures propounded by the Government at the close of the session, for the purpose of discussion during the recess, have certainly effected their object. They are eagerly debated everywhere. The balance of opinion appears to incline against the New Settlement Bill and the Medical Reform Bill. We regret that we have as yet been unable to find room for at least an abstract of the two admirable Consolidation Bills; but the statutes of the session are so many, so long, and so important, that they claim an unusual number of our columns.

NEW STATUTES.

Of the Session 8 Victoria.

[In this record of actual Legislation, we adopt the plan of giving the titles alone of the statutes of no general or professional interest, and analyses of the more important changes in the law, printing at length such statutes or parts of statutes only as are of particular interest to our readers.]

CAP. CI.

41. Districts for providing asylums for houseless poor may be formed in the town specified in schedule (B.)—And whereas it is expedient that more effectual means should be provided for the temporary relief of poor persons found destitute and without lodging within the district of the metropolitan police, or the city of London, and the city, towns, and boroughs named in the schedule annexed to this Act, and for avoiding the introduction of infectious disease, by the reception of such poor persons into the workhouses established for the ordinary relief of the poor within such districts and places; be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, as and when they may see fit, by order under their hands and seal, to declare so many parishes or unions, or parishes and unions, any part of which may be within the district of the metropolitan police, or the city of London, or within the limits respectively of the city, towns, or boroughs named in the schedule marked (B.) annexed to this Act, as such limits are described in an Act passed in the third year of the reign of King William the Fourth, "to settle and describe the division of counties, and the limits of cities and boroughs, in England and Wales, so far as respects the election of members to serve in Parliament," to be combined into districts for the purpose of providing and managing asylums for the temporary relief and setting to work therein of destitute houseless poor who are not charged with any offence, and who may apply for relief, or become chargeable to the poor's rates within any such parish or union.

42. Constitution of the district boards for schools and asylums.—And be it enacted, That a board shall be constituted for every district formed under this Act for the maintenance of a school or of an asylum; and every district board so constituted shall respectively consist of members to be elected from amongst the persons rated within the district to the relief of the poor; and the said commissioners shall fix the qualification of such members, such qualification to consist in being rated within the district to the relief of the poor, but not so as to require a qualification exceeding the net annual value of forty pounds; and such members shall be elected at such periods, not exceeding three years, and in such proportions and in such manner, as the said commissioners may from time to time direct, by the guardians of every parish or union governed by a board of guardians under the provisions of the said first-recited Act or of any Local Act, and if there be no such guardians then by the overseers of a parish not governed by such guardians; and the chairman of every board of guardians constituted under the provisions of the said first-recited Act shall, if he consent thereto, be ex officio a member of any district board constituted under the provisions of this Act.

43. Powers and duties of district boards.—And be it enacted, That every such district board shall have such of the powers of guardians for the relief and management of the poor within any school or asylum, and for the appointment, payment, and control of paid officers, as the said commissioners may direct; and the legal and reasonable orders of such district board shall be obeyed and obedience thereto enforced in the same manner, and by the same remedies and penalties as the legal and reasonable orders of guardians; and it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, with the consent in writing of a majority of any district board, to direct such district board to purchase or hire or build, and to fit up and furnish, a building or buildings, of such size and description, and according to such plan, and in such manner as the said commissioners may deem most proper, for the purpose of being used or rendered suitable for the relief and management of the poor to be received into such school or asylum; and the said commissioners may, with the like consent, alter the district for which such district board was originally constituted, by adding thereto or taking therefrom any parish or parishes, union or unions, as aforesaid; and the said commissioners shall have the same powers for regulating the proceedings of any district board or of any committee thereof, and for directing and regulating the appointment, duties, remuneration, and removal of paid officers to be appointed by any district board, as they have with respect to the proceedings of boards of guardians, or with respect to paid officers to be appointed by any board of guardians; and every such board for a school district shall appoint, with the consent of the bishop of the diocese, at least one chaplain of the established church as one of the paid officers aforesaid, who shall be empowered to superintend the religious instruction of all the infant poor being under the control of such district board; and it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to issue rules and regulations for the government of any such school or asylum, and the inmates thereof, as if such school or asylum were a workhouse; and any orders or regulations of the said commissioners made in pursuance of this Act shall be enforced in the same manner and by the same penalties as if the same were an order or regulation made in pursuance of the said first-recited Act: Provided always, that no rules, orders, or regulations of the said commissioners, nor any regulations made by such district board, shall oblige any inmate of any such school or asylum to attend any religious service which may be celebrated in a mode contrary to the religious principles of such inmate, nor shall authorize the education of any child in any religious creed other than that professed by the parents or surviving parent of such child, and to which such parents or surviving parent may object, or, in the case of an orphan or deserted child, to which his next of kin may object: provided also, that it shall be lawful at all reasonable times of the day, according to rules and regulations to be made for this purpose by the said board, for any minister of the religious persuasion professed by an adult inmate, or of the religious persuasion in which any child has been brought up, or in which the parents, or surviving parent, or next of kin, as the case may be, may desire such child to be instructed, to visit the school or asylum at the request of such adult inmate, for the purpose of affording to him religious assistance, or to visit such child for the purpose of instructing such child in the principles of his religion: Provided also, that it shall be lawful at all times for any inspector of schools appointed by her Majesty in Council to visit such schools, and to examine into the proficiency of the scholars therein.

44.—Powers of district board for purchasing and hire of land, &c. Sums to be raised for providing schools or asylums not to exceed one fifth part of the average annual rates.—And be it enacted, That for the purpose of providing a building for such school or asylum it shall be lawful for such district board, subject to the order of the said commissioners, to exercise the powers given to boards of guardians by the said first-recited Act or any other Act or Acts for the purchase and hire of lands and buildings, and to borrow, in like manner as is provided in the said first-recited Act or in any other Act or Acts, such sum or sums of money as may be necessary for the purpose of purchasing any site, or purchasing, hiring, or building, and of fitting up and furnishing such building or buildings as aforesaid, and to charge the future poor rates of the parishes or unions, or parishes and unions, so combined as aforesaid, with the payment of such sum or sums of money, and interest thereon: Provided always, that the consent of any rate-payers or owners of property of any parish shall not be necessary to any sale, exchange, lease, or other disposal by guardians or overseers to or with any such district board of any workhouse, tenement, building, or land: provided also, that the principal sum or sums to be raised for the purpose of providing any such building or buildings as aforesaid, and charged on any union, or on any parish not included in an union, shall in no case exceed one-fifth of the average annual amount of the aggregate expenditure relating to the relief of the poor within any such union, or of the like expenditure within any such parish, for three years ending the twenty-fifth day of March next preceding the raising of such money; provided also, that the principal sum or sums required for the purpose of providing any such building or buildings shall, if the same be borrowed, be repaid, with all interest thereon, within a period not exceeding twenty years.

45. District board to hold property of the district as a corporation.—And be it enacted, That every such district board shall be enabled to accept, take, and hold, on behalf of the district for which they act, any lands, buildings, goods, effects, or other property, as a corporation, and in all cases to sue and be sued as a corporation, by the name of the board of management of the   district school or asylum, as the case may be.

46. Payment of contributions to district boards.—And be it enacted, That every district board for the management of any school or asylum shall from time to time call on the parishes and unions included in such district for such contributions as they may deem requisite for the purposes of this Act; and notice in writing of the amount of such contributions, purporting to be signed by the clerk or other officer of such district board, in any form prescribed by the said commissioners, shall, fourteen days at least before such contribution becomes due, be forwarded, by post or otherwise, to the clerk to the board of guardians of any union, and to two at least of the overseers or other officers authorized to make and levy rates for the relief of the poor in every parish from whom such contributions or any part thereof will become due; and if such contributions are not duly paid to the treasurer of such district board, such district board shall, in addition to any other remedy which now is or hereafter may be given to any persons against any board of guardians, have the like remedy for recovery of the same from the overseers or other officers authorized to make and levy the rates for relief of the poor of the several parishes, whether comprised in an union or otherwise, and which may form part of the district for which such district board may act, as are given to guardians for the recovery from overseers of the contributions of parishes; and in case of any addition or separation of obligations of parishes or unions, the said commissioners shall ascertain the proportionate value of property and amount of every parish or union affected by the change, and shall fix the amount to be received or paid, or secured to be paid, by every such parish or union.

47. Distribution of charges for schools.—And be it enacted, That the expenses incurred by any district board in the purchase or hire of any building or buildings to be used as a school, or in erecting, repairing, adding to, or fitting up any building, and in the purchase of utensils and materials for the employment of the inmates of such school, or of books and other objects and things necessary for the instruction of such inmates, and the salaries of the officers and servants of the establishment, and all other expenses incurred on the common account of the parishes or unions, or parishes and unions, so united for the management of any class of infant poor, or incidental to the discharge of the duties of such district board, shall be paid by such unions in the proportion of the averages last declared for every such union, and by such parishes in the proportion of the average expenditure of every such parish for the like period and purposes as those to which the declared averages of such unions shall relate; and the said commissioners shall from time, by order under their hands and seal, ascertain and declare the proportion and rates of contribution in the above respects of every such parish and union; and that all other expenses incurred in the relief of the children under the management of such district board shall be separately charged by such district board to the parish or union from which each such child may be sent.

48. Distribution of charges for asylums.—And be it enacted, That the expenses incurred by every such district board in the purchase or hire of any building or buildings, or in erecting, repairing, adding to, or fitting up any building as an asylum, and in the purchase of utensils and materials for the employment of the inmates of such asylum, and other objects and things necessary for the relief of such inmates, and the salaries of the officers and servants of the establishment, and all other expenses incurred by such district board in the relief of the poor, or in the management of such asylum, or incidental to the discharge of the duties of such district board, shall be charged by such district board upon the parishes or unions, or parishes and unions, comprised in such district, in proportion to the annual value of messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments upon which such parishes and the parishes combined in such unions are respectively assessed to the county or borough rate, or oth rate in the nature of a county or borough rate; and where any parish or place comprised in such district does not contribute in respect of the whole thereof to any county or borough rate, the said expenses shall be paid by such parish or place in proportion to the net annual value of all the property therein assessed to the rates for the relief of the poor; and any information necessary for the distribution of such charge shall be furnished, on demand of such district board or of the said commissioners, by every parish officer, and by every clerk of the peace, town clerk, or other li e officer of any county, city, town, or borough, or other place raising rates in the nature of county or borough rates.

49. Appointment of auditors for district boards.—And be it enacted, That the Poor-law Commissioners shall appoint some person, being at the time the auditor of some parish or union situated within the district for which any district board for any school or asylum may be appointed, who shall be the auditor of such district, and shall be empowered and required to audit the accounts of each district board, and of the officers of such district board; and the salary of every such auditor of a district shall be paid by the district board thereof; and the said commissioners shall have the same powers for regulating the duties and remuneration of such auditors as they have with respect to paid officers appointed by any board of guardians; and it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, as they may see fit, to remove any auditor of such district, and in case of vacancy to appoint another person as aforesaid to the office; and every district board constituted under this Act, and every officer of such district board, shall, twice in the year at least, at such time and in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the Poor Law Commissioners, account to the auditor appointed as aforesaid; and such auditor shall have all the powers of allowing and disallowing any charges in such accounts as are or may hereafter be given to auditors under the provisions of the said first-recited Act or any other Act for the audit of accounts relating to rates for the relief of the poor; and all sums disallowed or reduced, or charged as balances against any person by such auditor, shall be recovered, on the application of such auditor (which application he is hereby empowered to make), in the same way as penalties and forfeitures under the said first-recited Act, from the person making or authorizing such illegal payment; and within thirty days of such audit each district board shall cause to be printed, and shall forward by post or otherwise to each board of guardians, and to the officers of every parish within their district, an abstract of the accounts of their district, so audited, in such form as the Poor Law Commissioners may direct.

50. Guardians may visit and inspect asylums.—And be it enacted, That every guardian of every union or parish included in any such district formed for the maintenance of an asylum shall at all reasonable times be entitled to enter the asylum of such district, and inspect any part thereof, and enter his remarks thereon in a book to be kept for that purpose.

51. Children may be sent to district schools from parishes and unions not combined, but not distant more than twenty miles.—And be it enacted, That in any case where a parish or union is not combined in a school district, and where any part of such parish or union is not more than twenty miles from a district school, the board of guardians of such parish or union may, with the consent of the board of such district, send to such district school any infant poor not above the age of sixteen years, being chargeable to any such parish or union, who are orphans, or are deserted by their parents, or whose parents or surviving parent or guardians are consenting thereto; and the costs of the maintenance, employment, and instruction of such infant poor in such district schools shall be paid by such board of guardians to such district board, according to such rates and at such times and in such manner as may be agreed upon by the said boards, with the approbation of the said commissioners; and such infant poor while at such district school shall be subject to the control and management of such district board and their officers, in like manner as if the said parish or union were combined in such school district by virtue of this Act.

52. Repeal of the Acts 7 Geo. 3, c. 39, and 2 Geo. 3, c. 22.—And be it enacted, That the provisions of the Act passed in the seventh year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act for the better Regulation of the Parish poor Children of the several parishes therein mentioned within the Bills of Mortality," and of an Act passed in the second year of the reign of his said late Majesty, intituled "An Act for the keeping regular, uniform, and annual Registers of all Parish poor infants under a certain Age within the Bills of Mortality," shall be and are hereby repealed.

53. Class of destitute poor to be relieved in such asylum.. 5 Geo. 4, c. 83. Mode of admission into asylum. Regulations with respect to poor persons admitted into such asylums. 5 Geo. 4, c. 83.—And be it enacted, That every district board for the management of any asylum under this Act shall make provision for the temporary relief and setting to work therein of any poor person found destitute within any such district, not professing to be settled in any parish included therein, and not known to have any place of abode there, and not being charged with any offence under the provisions of an Act passed in the fifth year of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the Punishment of idle and disorderly Persons, and Rogues and Vagabonds, in that part of Great Britain called England," or of any other Act; and, subject to any regulations of the said commissioners, every such district board or any committee thereof may direct the mode of admission of such poor persons to the asylum of such district; and it shall be lawful for any constable of the metropolitan police, or of the police of the city of London, or any constable of the police acting under the chief constable of any county, district, or division, or any constable of the city, towns, or boroughs respectively named in the schedule marked (B) annexed to this Act, personally to conduct any such poor person found wandering abroad within any district to any asylum established in such district in pursuance of this Act, and such poor person shall, if there be room in such asylum, be temporarily relieved therein; and the serjeant of police or constable conducting such poor person shall sign his name in a column, headed to the following effect, in a book to be kept, in such form and manner as the said commissioners may from time to time direct, by some officer of every such asylum, in which shall be entered the alleged names of all poor persons admitted:

> "We, the undersigned constables of the metropolitan police [or of the police of the city of London, or constable, &c. as the case may be], do severally declare, so far as each of us is concerned therein, that we have conducted the poor persons (whose alleged names are set opposite our respective signatures) to the asylum of district, the said poor persons having been by us found wandering abroad, and apparently destitute, and not having committed or being charged with any offence punishable by law, within our knowledge."

And every such book, purporting to be signed and to be certified at the foot of the page by the officer keeping the same, shall be received in all courts of justice as sufficient evidence of the fact that the poor persons described therein were chargeable to the said district at the time of their admission, and, if not contradicted by other evidence, of such other particulars as are therein duly recorded; and all poor persons admitted into any such asylum shall, if they desire it, be relieved with food and lodging for the night succeeding such admission; but no such poor person shall be detained against his will for any longer space of time than until the ordinary hour of breakfast of the day next succeeding his admission, and four hours afterwards, unless such poor person, since his admission, have become lawfully punishable for misbehaviour within such asylum, in which case it shall be lawful to detain such poor person for a space of time sufficient for such punishment; but no poor person shall be punished for any offence or misbehaviour in any asylum by confinement for any longer space of time than twenty-four hours, and such longer space of time as may be necessary in order to have such person before a justice of the peace; and if any poor person so admitted as aforesaid shall be disabled by sickness, or shall be unwilling to depart from such asylum, he may receive relief therein, if he consent to remain, and conform to the rules of the house, until the next meeting of the district board or of s ne committee (which such district board, subject to the rules of the said commissioners, is hereby authorized to appoint), who shall give such directions respecting such poor person as they may deem right, by discharging him from such asylum, with a direction to apply for relief in the district where he has dwelt, or otherwise as to them may seem fit: provided always, that, except under a medical certificate of sickness, it shall not be lawful for the officers of any such asylum to relieve any poor person for a longer period continuously in such asylum than is sufficient to enable his case to be decided by the district board or committee as aforesaid; provided also, that if any person received into such asylum shall wilfully give a false name, or make a false statement, or shall be proved to have given two or more different names on two or more different occasions, when so received into any such asylum, such person not having lawfully changed her name in consequence of marriage, such person shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond within the meaning of the said Act passed in the fifth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the Punishment of idle and disorderly Persons, and Rogues and Vagabonds, in that part of the United Kingdom called England."

54. Liabilities of persons relieved in such asylums. 55 Geo. 3, c. 137.—And be it enacted, That every poor person relieved in any asylum under the management of any district board shall be liable to the same obligations in respect of the relief afforded to him as if the same were afforded in any workhouse, and shall be subject to the same punishment and penalties as are provided by an Act passed in the fifty-fifth year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled "An Act to prevent poor persons in Workhouses from embezzling certain Property provided for their Use; to alter and amend so much of an Act of the Thirty-sixth Year of His present Majesty as restrain Justices of the Peace from ordering relief to poor Persons, in certain Cases, for a longer Period than One Month at a Time; and for other Purposes therein mentioned relating to the Poor," or under any other Act or Acts, for refusal or neglect to work, in pursuance of any regulations or directions prescribing a task of work, or for wilfully destroying or injuring his own clothes or any property, or for absconding with any clothes or other articles provided by such district board, or for damaging any of the property of such district board, or for any misbehaviour in such asylum, by disobedience of the rules and regulations in force therein, or otherwise, as if he were relieved or set to work in any workhouse under the control of a board of guardians acting under the orders and regulations of the said commissioners in pursuance of the said first-recited Act: provided always, that nothing in this Act contained shall relieve any guardian, overseer, relieving officer, or master of a workhouse from any obligation now imposed upon him by law with regard to the relief of cases of sudden and urgent necessity, or shall prevent the reception into a workhouse of any person labouring under dangerous illness, or shall authorise the transfer to an asylum of any person received into such workhouse in a case of dangerous illness, unless with the certificate in writing of a medical man duly licensed to practise, to the effect that such person is then in a fit state to be removed, and stating the manner in which such person, in the opinion of such medical man, may be safely removed.

55. Penalty for returning after removal. 5 G. 4, c. 83.—And be it enacted, That if any poor person return and become chargeable in the asylum of any district after removal from any parish in such district, he shall be deemed to have returned and become chargeable, without any certificate, to the parish whence he has been legally removed by order of two justices of the peace, within the meaning of the said Act made and passed in the fifth year of King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the Punishment of idle and disorderly persons, and Rogues and Vagabonds, in that part of Great Britain called England."

56. Workhouse to be deemed to be situate in every parish of an union, &c.—And be it enacted, That for the purposes of relief, settlement, and removal of poor persons, and the burial of the poor, the workhouse of any union or parish, and every such district school, shall be considered as situated in the parish to which each poor person respectively to be relieved, removed, or buried, or otherwise concerned in any such purpose, is or has been chargeable: provided always, that every birth and death within any such workhouse or building shall be registered in the parish or place in which such workhouse or building is locally situated; and all fees for registering births and deaths in any such work house or building shall be charged by the guardians to the parish or union to which the person dying or the mother of the child respectively is chargeable.

57. Committal of offenders in workhouses to the gaol of the place to which the offenders belong. 27 Geo. 2, c. 3.—And be it enacted, That if any person be convicted before any justice or justices of any offence committed in any workhouse, while maintained therein, or of absconding from any workhouse, and carrying away clothes or other property therefrom, and be liable to be committed for such offence to any gaol or house of correction, it shall be lawful for the justice or justices before whom such person is convicted to commit such person to the common gaol or house of correction of the county or place in which the parish is situated to which such person at the time of the commission of the offence was chargeable, notwithstanding that such workhouse may not be situated in such county or place, and notwithstanding that such justices may not be justices of such county or place; and if such person have not goods or money within such county or place sufficient to bear the charges of himself and those who convey him, then such charges shall be defrayed at the expense of the county, place, or parish, according to the provisions of an Act passed in the twenty-seventh year of the reign of King George the Second, intituled "An Act for the better securing to Constables and others the expenses of conveying Offenders to Gaol; and for allowing the charges of poor Persons bound to give Evidence against Felons;" provided that in cases of such conviction and committal as aforesaid all further proceedings in respect thereof may be taken; and the costs and charges of such proceedings, and for the maintenance of such offender in such gaol or house of correction, shall be payable in like manner and under the like authority as such proceedings would have been taken, or as such costs and charges would have been payable, in case the offence had been committed within the parish or place to which such offender was chargeable at the time when he committed such offence.

58. Punishment of persons in workhouses for misconduct.—And whereas by the said Act passed in the fifty-fifth year of the reign of King George the Third, it is enacted, that if any person or persons shall desert or run away from any workhouse or workhouses, and carry away with him, her, or them any clothes, linen, or other goods as aforesaid, such person or persons, being thereof lawfully convicted, either by the confession of such party or parties, or by the oath or oaths of one or more credible witness or witnesses, before any justice or justices of the peace, shall by such justice or justices of the peace be forthwith committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to remain without bail or mainprize for the space of three calendar months; and it is further enacted, that in case any person or persons maintained in any public workhouse or workhouses established for the relief, maintenance, and employment of the poor shall refuse to work at any work, occupation, or employment suited to his, her, or their age, strength, and capacity, or shall be guilty of drunkenness or other misbehaviour, every such person or persons, being thereof lawfully convicted before any justice or justices of the peace, shall thereupon by such justice or justices of the peace be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to remain without bail or mainprize for any period of time not exceeding twenty-one days, and during such time to be kept to hard labour: and whereas it is desirable that justices of the peace should have a power to commit such persons as are first mentioned for a period less than three months, and such persons as are last mentioned for a period greater than twenty-one days, in cases of repeated offences; be it therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for any justice or justices to commit any such person as is first mentioned to the common gaol or house of correction, to be kept there in the manner provided by the said recited Act for any period not less than seven days nor greater than three months, and to commit any such persons as are last mentioned, in case such persons have been before convicted of a like offence, to the common gaol or house of correction, in manner provided by the said Act, for any period not exceeding forty-two days.

59. Costs of certain civil and criminal proceedings to be paid out of poor rates.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for any board of guardians or district board to pay out of the funds in their hands the reasonable costs of the apprehension and of the prosecution of any person who, according to the laws in force at the time being, is charged with refusing or neglecting to maintain himself or his family, or with running away and leaving his family chargeable, or whereby such family has become chargeable, or with wilfully neglecting or disobeying the rules, orders, and regulations of the Poor Law Commissioners, or with any offence or misbehaviour in any workhouse, or with deserting or running away from any workhouse, and carrying away clothes, linen, or other goods or things belonging to any workhouse, or given or procured or provided as or for relief, or with neglect or disobedience of the reasonable and lawful orders of justices or guardians, or of any district board, in the administration of the laws relating to the relief of the poor, or with obstructing or assaulting any officer engaged in the administration of the laws for relief of the poor, or with fraudulently obtaining, stealing, purloining, embezzling, wasting, or injuring, or wilfully misapplying, any property applicable to or connected with the relief of the poor, or with any offence directly affecting the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, and the reasonable costs of apprehending and prosecuting any officer who may have been employed in the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, for any neglect or breach of any duty of his office, or for any maltreatment or abuse of any poor person; and, subject to the approval of the said Commissioners, every board of guardians or district board shall pay the costs of all legal proceedings taken by any auditor, or under his direction, for the protection of the poor rates or property of any parish, union, or district, or taken by any other person whom the board of guardians or district board have authorized or directed to institute such prosecution or legal proceedings; and to the extent to which any such costs may not be repaid by the offending or other party, or from the county, liberty, or borough rates, the guardians of any union then may, in any of the cases aforesaid, having due regard to the circumstances of the case, and subject to the approval of the Poor Law Commissioners, charge such expenses, either to the common funds of the union, or to any parish or parishes comprised therein; and the district board of any district may, having like regard to the circumstances of the case, and subject to the like approval of the Poor Law Commissioners, charge such expenses, either to the funds of the whole of such district, or on any one or more of the unions and parishes comprised therein.

60. Expenses of jury lists and boundaries of parishes may be paid out of poor rates. 6 Geo. 4, c. 50.—And be it enacted, That the costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by the officers of the parish in making out, preparing, printing, and collecting the lists of persons qualified to serve on juries, according to the provisions of the Act in the sixth year of the reign of his Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act for consolidating and amending the Laws relative to Jurors and Juries," and relating thereto, shall be paid and allowed to them out of the poor rates of the parish, together also with all expenses properly incurred by the same officers on the perambulation of the parish, and in setting up and keeping in proper repair the boundary stones of the parish, provided that such perambulations do not arise more than once in every three years.

61. Collectors appointed by guardians may be appointed to perform the duties of assistant overseers. 2 & 3 Vict. c. 84; 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76; 59 Geo. 3, c. 21.—And whereas by an Act passed in the third year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled "An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Assessment and Collection of Rates for the Relief of the Poor," it was amongst other things enacted, "that all orders heretofore made and issued under the hands and seals of the Poor Law Commissioners, and not rescinded by them or quashed before the sixth day of May in the present year, by which the said commissioners may have directed the overseers or guardians of any parish or union to appoint any person to collect the rates for the relief of the poor in any parish or parishes, or shall have defined or specified or directed the execution of the duties of such person, or the places or limits within which the same shall be performed, or shall have directed the mode of appointment, or determined the continuance in office or dismissal of any such person from his office, or the amount or nature of the security to be given by any such person, or shall have regulated the amount of salary payable to any such person, or the time or mode or the proportions of payment thereof, shall be deemed and the same are hereby declared to have the same force and validity as if the same had been warranted by an Act passed in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws for the Relief of the Poor;" and the commissioners shall have the same powers and authorities with respect to all such orders, and to the persons appointed in pursuance thereof, as they have with respect to orders made and issued, and the paid officers appointed, under the provisions of the said Act; and that every person appointed by guardians of the poor under any such order of the said commissioners shall have the like powers, authorities, privileges, immunities, protections, and remedies, in and for the performance of his duty under such order, as are by law given to overseers of the poor in the performance of the like duty;" and it is expedient that such collectors should in certain cases be invested with other of the duties of overseers of the poor; be it enacted, That the inhabitants in vestry assembled of any parish situated within the district for which any collector or assistant overseer appointed under any order of the said commissioners now acts may appoint such collector or assistant overseer to discharge all the duties of an overseer of the poor, in addition to those of collector of poor rates for such parish, and in the same manner as if he were appointed thereto as an assistant overseer under the provisions of an Act passed in the fifty-ninth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act to amend the Laws for the Relief of the Poor;" and wherever any such collector or assistant overseer has been or may be appointed under any order of the said commissioners, and whilst the said order remains in force, the powers of any vestry or parish officers, or of any other persons, other than the board of guardians of such parish or union (if a board of guardians have been constituted,) to appoint any collector or assistant overseer, and (if so directed by the said commissioners) every appointment under such powers shall cease: Provided always, that where the appointment of such assistant overseer shall have been made under the powers of any local Act of Parliament of a parish containing more than twenty thousand persons such appointment shall continue, and the powers of such local Act, as to any future appointment of an assistant overseer, shall be exercised, but subject always to the powers of the Poor Law Commissioners, notwithstanding the provisions of this Act; provided always, that no overseer shall be discharged by the appointment of any such collector or assistant overseer from his responsibility for the provision and supply of monies necessary for the relief of the poor, or for any of the purposes to which the rates made for the relief of the poor may be by law applicable; and every collector appointed or to be hereafter appointed as aforesaid, and every assistant overseer appointed or hereafter to be appointed, in pursuance of the said Act of the fifty-ninth year of the reign of King George the Third, or of the orders of the said commissioners, shall, subject to the rules of the Poor Law Commissioners, obey, in all matters relating to the duties of overseer, all directions of the majority of the overseers of the parish for which he acts; and the said commissioners shall have the same powers with respect to all collectors or assistant overseers as are given to them by the said first-recited Act with respect to paid officers; and every collector or assistant overseer appointed as aforesaid shall be bound to give to the board of guardians of the parish or union, or if there be no such board of guardians then to the overseers of the parish for which such collector or assistant overseer may act, sufficient security for the due performance of his duties; and no bond or any other security entered into in pursuance of this Act, or of the said Act of the fifty-ninth year of the reign of King George the Third, shall be charged or chargeable with, or be deemed to be or to have been subject or liable to, any stamp duty whatsoever; and wherever any parish for which such collector or assistant overseer may be appointed is situated in an union, or is governed by a board of guardians, every bond or security given by any officer, in pursuance of this Act, or of the said Act of the fifty-ninth year of the reign of King George the Third, or of the said first recited Act, and not contrary to the rules of the said commissioners, shall, if the guardians shall see fit, be put in suit by the board of guardians of the union in which the parish or district for which the officer acts or has acted may be situated, notwithstanding that such bond or security may have been originally given to the overseers of a parish, or to any other persons; and every bond or security given by or on account of any officer appointed by any board of guardians, for the due performance of the office to which he is so appointed, shall remain in full force and effect, notwithstanding any change in district for which such officer may have been appointed or required to act at the time when such bond or security was given, or the addition of any parish to or the separation of any parish from such union since the giving of such security.

62. Poor Law Commissioners, on application of board of guardians, may direct appointment of paid collector of poor rates.—And be it enacted, That if the board of guardians of any parish or union make application to the said commissioners to direct the appointment of a paid collector of the poor rates in such parish or union, or in any parish or parishes of such union, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, by order under their hands and seal, to direct the said board of guardians to appoint such a collector; and the said commissioners shall have the same powers with respect to such collectors as are given to them by the said first recited Act with respect to paid officers; and all powers of the inhabitants of any parish in vestry assembled, or of justices of the peace, or of any persons, other than the board of guardians of such parish or union, to appoint any collector for any such parish as aforesaid, and (except when otherwise directed by the said commissioners) all appointments under such powers, shall cease.

63. Penalty on overseers neglecting to obtain a supply of funds for the relief of the poor.—And be it enacted, That if the overseers of any parish wilfully neglect to make or collect sufficient rates for the relief of the poor, or to pay such moneys to the guardians of any parish or union as such guardians may require, and if by reason of such neglect any relief directed by the board of guardians to be given to any poor person be delayed or withheld during a period of seven days, every such overseer shall upon conviction thereof forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not exceeding twenty pounds.

64. In what manner guardians under local Acts shall conduct their proceedings. Parishes under local Acts, with a population exceeding 20,000, not to be united without consent of guardians. Exception as to vagrant and audit districts.—And be it enacted, That the guardians of every parish or union acting under any local Act for the relief of the poor shall hold their meetings once in every fortnight, or oftner, and in all matters concerning the relief of the poor shall act as a board at a meeting, and not individually; and whenever under any such local Act there is no person particularly designated or authorized to act as chairman, such guardians shall elect and appoint annually, and from time to time as vacancies may occur, a chairman and vice-chairman of such board, and shall at any meeting at which no chairman or vice-chairman is present elect a temporary chairman to preside at that meeting: Provided always, that when the relief of the poor has been hitherto administered in any parish by guardians appointed under a local Act, and not by overseers of the poor, if such parish, according to the last enumeration of the population published by authority of Parliament, contain more than twenty thousand persons, it shall not be lawful for the said commissioners, after the passing of this Act, without the consent in writing of two-thirds at least of such guardians, to declare such parish to be united with any other parish for the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, any thing in the said first-recited Act to the contrary notwithstanding; provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall prevent the said commissioners from including any such last-mentioned parish in a district for providing and managing an asylum for the temporary relief of and setting to work of destitute houseless poor, or from including such parish in a district for the audit of accounts, under the provisions of this Act, except as herein-after enacted.

65. Parishes with a population exceeding 20,000, under local Acts, having adopted the provisions of 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 60, and parishes in the metropolitan district having auditors, not to be included in any district for audit of accounts. Proviso.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That where any parish which is not governed by a board of guardians constituted under the said first-recited Act, or comprised in any union, but is governed by guardians or directors under a local Act, and contains a population exceeding twenty thousand persons, according to the last enumeration of the population published by the authority of Parliament, have before the first day of January in the present year adopted and acted upon the provisions of an Act passed in the second year of the reign of King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the better Regulation of Vestries, and for the Appointment of Auditors of Accounts, in certain Parishes of England and Wales," and that where any two or more parishes situated within the district of the metropolitan police, containing together a population exceeding twenty thousand, according to the last enumeration of the population published by the authority of Parliament, have been united for the purposes of rating or settlement under the provisions of any Local Act, and are governed by guardians or directors under such Local Act, and have not been comprised in any union formed under the provisions of the said first-recited Act, and have an auditor or auditors appointed and acting under any provisions of such Local Act relating to the audit of accounts in such parishes, it shall not be lawful to include such parish or such two or more parishes respectively in any such district for the audit of accounts: provided always, that it shall be lawful for any Assistant Poor Law Commissioner to be present at any audit as if the same were a meeting of a board of guardians or vestry, and to inspect, examine, and take copies or extracts from any books, accounts, or vouchers produced at such audit.

66. Commissioners may separate parishes from unions, or add parishes to unions, without the consent of the guardians of the union.—And whereas it is provided by the said first-recited Act that the said commissioners may, from time to time as they may see fit, by order under their hands and seal, declare any union not united for the purposes of settlement or rating to be dissolved, or any parish or parishes to be separated from or added to any such union, and that such union shall thereupon be dissolved, or such parish or parishes shall thereupon be separated from or added to such union accordingly; and it is thereby further provided that no such dissolution, alteration, or addition shall take place or be made unless a majority of not less than two-thirds of the guardians of such union concur therein; and it is expedient to enable the said commissioners to separate any parish or parishes from any union, or to add any parish or parishes to any union, without the concurrence of the guardians of such union respectively; be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to exercise the powers given to them by the said Act for the separating of any parish or parishes from any union formed under the provisions of the said Act, or for the addition of any parish or parishes to any such union, without the concurrence of the guardians of such union respectively in such separation or addition; and the said commissioners may, if they see fit, cause a board of guardians to be elected under the provisions of the said Act for any single parish separated from any union in pursuance hereof, notwithstanding the provisions of any Local Act in force in such parish.

67. Repeal of 55 Geo. 3, c. 137, s. 7 as to notices of contracts for supplying workhouses.—And be it enacted, That so much of an Act passed in the fifty-fifth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act to prevent poor Persons in Workhouses from embezzling certain Property provided for their Use; to alter and amend so much of an Act of the Thirty-sixth Year of His present Majesty as restrains Justices of the Peace from ordering relief to poor persons in certain cases for a longer period than one month at a time; and for other purposes therein mentioned relating to the poor, as relates to the giving of notice of the intention to enter into contracts relating to the relief of the poor, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

68. Clerks and officers may conduct proceedings before justices at petty sessions on behalf of boards of guardians, although not certified attornies.—And be it enacted, That notwithstanding any thing contained in an Act passed in the seventh year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled "An Act for consolidating and amending several of the Laws relating to Attornies and solicitors practising in England and Wales, it shall be lawful for any clerk or other officer to any board of guardians constituted under the said first-recited Act or under any local Act, or to any district board, if duly empowered by such board, to make or resist any application, claim, or complaint, or to take and conduct any proceedings on behalf of such board before any justice or justices of the peace at petty or special sessions or out of sessions, although such clerk or officer be not an attorney or solicitor, or have not obtained a stamped certificate in pursuance of the provisions of the said Act.

69. Guardians, &c., may make a certain certificate, which may be received in evidence, &c.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for any board of guardians or district board, at any meeting thereof, to make a certificate in the form or to the effect contained in the schedule of this Act marked (C.), and that every such certificate, and every copy of a minute of any order, complaint, claim, application, or authority of any such board of guardians or district board, purporting respectively to be signed by the presiding chairman of such guardians or district board, and to be sealed with their seal, and to be countersigned by their clerk, shall, unless the contrary be shewn, be taken to be sufficient proof of the truth of all the statements contained in such certificate, and of the directions respecting such order, complaint, claim, or application having been given as alleged in the copy of such minute, and shall be received in evidence accordingly by and before all courts of justice and all justices, without any proof of the signatures or of the official characters of the persons signing the same, or of such seal, or of such meeting; and that for the purpose of making any order of removal or other order, no further or other evidence of chargeability than such certificate shall be required, provided that every such order bear date within twenty-one days next after the day of the date of such certificate.

70. Justices at petty sessions or out of sessions, may summon witnesses, and compel them to attend and give evidence.—And be it enacted, That in any proceedings to be had before justices in petty or special sessions, or out of sessions, under the provisions of this Act or of any of the Acts required to be construed as one Act herewith, if any party to such proceedings request that any person be summoned to appear as a witness in such proceedings, it shall be lawful for any justice to summon such person to appear and give evidence upon the matter of such proceedings; and if any person so summoned neglect or refuse to appear to give evidence at the time and place appointed in such summons, and if proof upon oath be given of personal service of the summons upon such person, and that the reasonable expenses of attendance were paid or tendered to such person, it shall be lawful for such justice by warrant under his hand and seal, to require such person to be brought before him, or any justices before whom such proceedings are to be had; and if any person coming or brought before any such justices in any such proceedings refuse to give evidence thereon, it shall be lawful for such justices to commit such person to any house of correction within their jurisdiction, there to remain without bail or mainprize for any time not exceeding fourteen days, or until such person shall sooner submit himself to be examined, and in case of such submission the order of any such justice shall be a sufficient warrant for the discharge of such person.

71. Rules, &c. printed by the printer authorized by her Majesty to be received in evidence.—And whereas it is provided by the said first-recited Act that all rules, orders, and regulations made by the said commissioners under the authority of the said Act shall be as valid and binding, and shall be obeyed and observed, as if the same were specifically made by and embodied in the said Act; but no sufficient provision is made for bringing such orders to the knowledge of courts of justice; be it therefore enacted, That any copy of any such rule, order, or regulation, printed by the printer duly authorized by her Majesty or any of her royal predecessors or successor, shall, after the lapse of fourteen days from the date thereof, be received in evidence, and judicially taken notice of, and shall, until the contrary be shewn, be deemed sufficient proof that such order was duly made, and is in force.

72. Evidence in legal proceedings of the transmission of the commissioners' rules, &c.—And whereas it is provided by the said first recited Act that a written or printed copy of every rule, order, or regulation of the said commissioners shall, before the same shall come into operation in any parish or union, be sent by the said commissioners by the post, or in such manner as the commissioners shall think fit, sealed or stamped with their seal, addressed to the overseers of such parish, the guardians of such union, or their clerk, and to the clerk to the justices of the petty sessions held for the division in which such parish or union shall be situate: and whereas the proof of such sending is often attended with great expense and difficulty; be it enacted, That it shall not in any civil or criminal proceeding be necessary to prove such sending, except to the clerk to the guardians of the union or of the parish, or, where there shall be no guardians, to the overseers of the parish within which such rule, order, or regulation is intended to have effect; and that it shall in no case be necessary to prove such sending, unless reasonable notice in writing be given, by the party requiring such proof, to the party upon whom such proof would lie, that such proof will be required; and whenever it is proved to the satisfaction of the court that the said rule, order, or regulation was sent, and that the party was cognizant thereof, such court shall order the reasonable expenses of the witness or witnesses proving the same to be paid by the party who has given such notice, and such expenses shall be recoverable as penalties and forfeitures under the first-recited Act.

73. Conveyances, &c. for workhouses to be good, although not enrolled. 9 Geo. 2, c. 36.—And be it enacted, That in all cases where any messuages, lands, or hereditaments, or any estates or interest therein, have or hath been conveyed or assured, or purported to be conveyed or assured, either gratuitously or for valuable consideration, to or in trust for the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, or the overseers only, or the guardians of any parish or parishes respectively, or otherwise for the benefit of any parish or parishes respectively, or to or in trust for the guardians of any union, for the purpose of providing a workhouse or asylum, or workhouses or asylums, for the accommodation of the poor of such parish or parishes or union respectively, every such conveyance or assurance shall be deemed good and valid for all purposes whatsoever, notwithstanding that such conveyance or conveyances have not been enrolled pursuant to the statute passed in the ninth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Second, intituled "An Act to restrain the Disposition of Lands whereby the same became inalienable."

74. Construction of Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 57.—And be it enacted, That this Act shall be construed in the same manner as the Act passed in the sixth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to continue until the Thirty-first Day of July, One thousand eight hundred and forty-seven, and to the end of the then next Session of Parliament, the Poor Law Commission; and for the further Amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor in England," and as one Act with the same, and with the acts and provisions thereby required to be construed as one Act; and the word "month" shall be taken to mean calendar month; and the words "clerk of the peace" shall be taken to mean the clerk of the peace or other officer discharging any of the duties of clerk of the peace for any county, division of a county, riding, borough, liberty, division of a liberty, precinct, county of a city, city, county of a town, town, cinque port, or town corporate; and the words "licensed minister" in the said first-recited Act, and "minister" in this Act, shall be construed to mean and include every person in holy orders, and also every person teaching or preaching in any congregation for religious worship whose place of meeting is certified and recorded according to law; and, except where it is otherwise expressly provided, all provisions in any Act now passed or hereafter to be passed, relating to the officers of boards of guardians constituted under the provisions of the said first-recited Act, or to the workhouses under the management of such guardians, shall apply to all officers appointed by any district board, and to all workhouses under the management of any district board.

75. Act limited to England and Wales.—And be it enacted, That this Act shall extend only to England and Wales.

76. When Act to operate.—And be it enacted, That this Act shall come into operation on the day next after that on which her Majesty gives her assent thereto.

77 Act may be amended this session.—And be it enacted, That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

Statistics of Lunacy, &c.—We have extracted the following statistical particulars relative to insanity in this kingdom from the interesting report of the Metropolitan Commissioners in Lunacy to the Lord High Chancellor of England, which was not long since presented to both Houses of Parliament by command of her Majesty the Queen. It appears that every care has been bestowed by the learned commissioners in collecting and arranging materials wherefrom to furnish some definite as well as accurate statistical information on so important a subject, considering that in all probability the attention of the Legislature will be called to these matters at no very distant period. We find, on studying the tabular statements presented in the report now on our desk, that the gross total number of insane persons, of all classes, in England and Wales alone, amounted in the month of January last, to 20,893, of whom 9,862 were men, and 11,031 women; being a proportion to the amount of population (which is estimated by the census for England and Wales at 16,480,082 souls), of about ·125 per cent., or 1 in 800, as nearly as possible. Of the above 20,893 lunatics, 4,072 (of whom 2,161 are men, and 1,911 women) are private patients, and 16,821 (of whom 7,701 are men, and 9,120 women) pauper patients. The proportion of the pauper lunatics to the population in January last was in England ·100 per cent. or 1 in 1,000; whilst in Wales the proportion was ·129 per cent. or 1 in 775, a difference of between 1-34th or 1-35th per cent., shewing that the proportion of pauper lunatics and idiots to the population is greater in Wales than in England; and in both countries it will be found that the number of insane pauper females is greater than that of the insane pauper males; the reverse being the case as regards the "private patients," as we have already shewn. Of the 4,072 private patients, there were 245 confined in county asylums, 168 in military and naval hospitals, 442 in Bethlehem and St. Luke's hospitals, 536 in other public asylums, 973 in metropolitan licensed houses, and 1,426 in provincial licensed houses; whilst there were 282 single patients "under commission." Of the 16,821 paupers, 4,155 are immured in county asylums, 89 in county asylums under local Acts, 121 in Bethlehem and St. Luke's, 343 in other public asylums, 854 and 1,920 in metropolitan and provincial licensed houses, and no less than 9,339 (or more than one-half) in workhouses, &c. The private patients are maintained, either wholly or partially, at their own cost, but the pauper lunatics are, of course, supported at the expense of the public. Independently, however, of these, there is a large number of persons, it appears, who are shut up as single patients, of whom no account is rendered in any public documents. Another table printed in the report shews that the cures, during the last five years, have, in four county asylums, been 30; in four others 40, in four others 50, and in three 60 per cent. At St. Luke's the permanent cures, during the year 1842, are stated to have been 70, and in 1843, 65 per cent.; and it would appear from long experience, that this distressing disorder is curable, in a large proportion of cases, during the first year of the attack; whereas recoveries after that period are comparatively very rare. It may be interesting to those of our readers who are wont to peruse the reports of commissioners de lunatico inquirendo which appear in our columns from time to time, to know that there are (or were a few months since) 535 (wealthy) lunatics under the especial care of the Lord Chancellor; that the value of their property was upwards of 1,000,000*l.*; that the annual income has been reported to Parliament to be 356,711*l.* 17s. 11d.; and the annual sum allowed for their support and maintenance to be 161,151*l.* 12s. There are, however, upwards of 4,000 lunatics confined in England as private patients, who are not under the care of the Court of Chancery, and whose estates and properties are, consequently, left more or less to the control of their relatives.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

It is not yet decided whether there will be a Winter Assize; but the best opinion is, that the plan is to be pursued wherever there is a sufficient number of prisoners to justify the expense and inconvenience. This will, we trust, awaken both the Magistracy and the Profession to a sense of the necessity for measures that shall convert the courts of quarter sessions into efficient local courts.

POOR' LAW CIRCULAR.

BASTARDY.

PROSPECTIVE PAYMENT BY PUTATIVE FATHER.

January 29, 1844.

Churchwarden, Luxborough, Williton Union—Stated, that the parish of Luxborough had just received 50*l.* from the putative father of a bastard child, to defray the cost of its maintenance, and inquired whether the money could be applied to the use of the parish in lieu of collecting a poor-rate for the current quarter.

Ans.—The taking of a sum of money in gross, as a discharge of the future liability of the putative father of a bastard child, has been decided to be altogether an illegal transaction; and the balance of any sum so paid, remaining unexpended in the relief of the child, may at any time be recovered back by the putative father in an action at law. (Cole v. Gower, 6 East, 110; Clarke v. Johnson, 11 Moore, 319.)

CLERK.

PROFESSIONAL REMUNERATION TO CLERKS.

April 16, 1844.

Clerk of Winslow Union—Stated, that he had sent in a bill to one of the parishes in the Winslow Union, for professional services in a case of removal, as attorney to the parish, and for fees as magistrates' clerk; but an objection had been raised to the bill, on the ground that the charges ought to be considered as satisfied by his salary as clerk to the union. Requested the commissi ers' opinion as to whether the charges were such as ought fairly to be placed to the account of the parish.

Ans.—Although the clerk of a union who is a solicitor is bound by the Commissioners' General Order of 21st April, 1842, Art. 17, No. 7, to conduct the legal business of the union, he is under no such obligation to act professionally for the several parishes in the union. The removal of paupers is a matter within the province of the overseers, and not of the guardians, and the commissioners accordingly consider, that if the overseers emplo in such a matter the union clerk, he is entitled to be paid in the same way as any other solicitor would be. In like manner, the commissioners think that the offices of clerk to the guardians and of clerk to the justices being essentially distinct, the accident of their being held at any time by the same person would not affect his right to the distinct emoluments of each, or render the salary attached to the one a remuneration for the duties connected with the other.

GUARDIAN.

COMPATIBILITY OF OFFICES OF EX-OFFICIO GUARDIAN AND CHURCHWARDEN.

May 16, 1844.

Clerk of Leamington Union—Stated, that one of the ex-officio guardians had lately been appointed churchwarden of a parish within the division for which he acted as magistrate. Inquired, whether the office of churchwarden and that of a justice of the peace are compatible; and also, whether he could not act as an ex-officio guardian whilst holding the office of churchwarden.

Ans.—Looking to the fact, that a churchwarden is, by virtue of his office, an overseer of the poor, the commissioners are disposed to think that the offices of justices of the peace and churchwardens are probably incompatible, on the view expressed by Lord Kenyon in Rex v. Pateman (2 T. R. 779), as to the effect of Rex v. Gower (1 Burr. 245, 1 Bott. 14). The commissioners are not aware of any thing to prevent the gentleman, to whom the clerk refers from acting as an ex-officio guardian during his year of office as churchwarden, if he is capable of taking the latter office at all.

LUNATIC.

MAINTENANCE OF A CRIMINAL LUNATIC.

May 20, 1844.

Clerk of Kettering Union—Stated, that the guardians had been informed that the care and expenses incident to the confinement of criminal lunatics usually devolve upon the Government; and inquired what course the guardians should pursue in order to get Thos. Briggs, a criminal lunatic, who had been confined for several years in the asylum near Nottingham, at a considerable expense to the parish of Kettering, placed under the Government charge.

Ans.—The Commissioners are not aware of any general liability attaching to the Government to provide for the maintenance of criminal lunatics. The statutes on the subject (within whose provisions the case mentioned in the clerk's letter appears to fall) cast the burden of the maintenance on the parish of the lunatic's settlement, or, in lack of a settlement, on the county. (Sec 9 Geo. 4, c. 40; 1 Vict. c. 14; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54.)

The Queen has been pleased to appoint William Henry Draper, esq. to be her Majesty's Attorney-General for that part of the province of Canada formerly called Upper Canada.

Her Majesty has also been pleased to appoint William Morris, esq. to be Receiver-General for Canada.

Her Majesty has also been pleased to appoint Denis B. Papineau, esq. to be Commissioner of Crown Lands for Canada.

Her Majesty has also been pleased to appoint James Smith, esq. to be her Majesty's Attorney-General for that part of the province of Canada formerly called Lower Canada.

Her Majesty has also been pleased to appoint Dominick Daly, esq. to be Secretary for Canada.

Her Majesty has also been pleased to appoint John Downie, esq. to be First Puisne Judge for the Colony of British Guiana.

Her Majesty has further been pleased to appoint Francesco Dalmas, esq. to be Cashier to the Government of Malta.

The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignities of Viscount and Earl of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto the Right Hon. Edward, Lord Ellenborough, and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten, by the names, styles, and titles of Viscount Southam, of Southam, in the county of Gloucester, and Earl of Ellenborough, in the county of Cumberland.

New County Magistrates. — The following gentlemen have been appointed magistrates for the county of Middlesex:—William Hurst Ashpitel, John Fisk Pownall, jun. Josh. Arden, Colonel Charles Wood, James Mazer, Hon. Charles Lamb Butler, Henry Penton, John Wheelton, C. H. Cotterell, J. A. Moore, Sir Moses Montefiore, J. H. Longdon, W. P. Crawford, and C. Graham.

Magisterial Jurisdiction.—At the Uxbridge petty sessions, Mr. Gardiner, solicitor, gave notice on behalf of a Mr. Tollett, who, for having used some expressions towards another person while giving evidence, had been convicted in the pena..y of 40s. by the magistrates, that the conviction would be appealed against, there having been no information laid, or summons issued, as a foundation for it. He contended that the room in which the magistrates were sitting was not a public place. The words of the Act of Parliament were, "That every person shall be liable to a penalty of not more than 40s., who, within the limits of the metropolitan police district, shall in any thoroughfare, or public place, use any threatening, abusive, or insulting words or behaviour, with intent to provoke a breach of the peace, or whereby a breach of the peace may be occasioned." He would also contend, that neither the Police Act nor Police Courts Act gave the magistrates power to convict on sight, the justices having power to punish for contempt of Court. Mr. Woodbridge (clerk to the bench) said he doubted if the Police Act gave Mr. Tollett any power to appeal, the penalty not amounting to 3*l.* as required by the Act. Mr. Gardiner would in that case have the conviction removed by writ of certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench; he had only out of courtesy to the bench informed them of his intentions.

The following buildings are certified as places duly registered for solemnizing marriages, pursuant to the Act of 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 85:—Bethesda Chapel, Blackpool, Lancashire. Robert Thompson, superintendent registrar. — St. Francis Xavier's Chapel, Yorkshire. Richard Baillie, superintendent registrar.—Islington-green Chapel, Islington.—Wesleyan Chapel, Liverpool.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

Every day yields gratifying evidence that the Profession is at length fairly awakened to a sense of the necessity for prompt measures to protect and purify itself. It is seeking its own emancipation regardless of cliques and local interests. The union of the Provincial Law Societies and the establishment of the Legal Association are movements whose importance it is impossible to exaggerate, and if they be followed up in the right spirit, great effects must follow. We shall, of course, do all that in us lies to advance the objects proposed by these societies, and to report their proceedings to the Profession.

The recent affair at the Bar continues to attract attention. Besides the letter which appears in the leading article upon the subject, the following has been published in the Times. On the principle of hearing both sides, we insert it, but entirely dissenting from its arguments :—

THE ETIQUETTE OF THE BAR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—May I claim the indulgence of a small space in your publication on behalf of a class of unfortunates who, in a recent controversy at the Central Criminal Court and Middlesex Sessions, seem to have been forgotten? The learned judge at the Old Bailey exhibited considerable warmth, and expressed his opinion with great emphasis, when he was apprized that counsel acted for parties without having received their retainers through the medium of an attorney. Now, Sir, it was my misfortune to be acquainted with a person who had to take his trial for a trifling crime at the Old Bailey, but such was his poverty and those of his friends, that it was with the utmost difficulty that a small sum could be raised to employ counsel. But it is said that it is derogatory to the gentlemen of the Bar to receive instructions otherwise than from an attorney. Is there any occasion for one in the defence of a prisoner in many cases? There are no indictments to frame, nor nicety of pleadings to be attended to. In most instances all that is necessary would be to watch the proceedings, and cross-examine the witnesses, and call evidence as to character. Instructions to this effect might be conveyed to a barrister by a prisoner's friend, through the medium of a letter left at his chambers, accompanied by a fee. If it is the intention of the Bar to act upon the suggestion of the learned judges of the two courts, the Prisoners' Counsel Act will become a dead letter, except in the case of those rogues whom a successful career has made rich enough to fee both attorney and counsel. AUDI ALTERAM PARTEM.

Temple, Sept. 28.

From the same journal we take another letter, which displays in a striking form the influence and importance of the Legal Profession, teaching us what we might do if we would, but put forth our strength, and act cordially together for the common good. It runs thus:

LAW, LAW, LAW.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR,—There are no less than 2,776 solicitors, attorneys, and proctors actually practising in this great metropolis, or within the district of the old twopenny post. There are also 6,560 attorneys practising in the different towns of England and Wales. The former are subject annually (supposing them to have been in practice three years, which most have) to a certificate duty of 12*l.* and the latter (upon the same supposition) to an annual duty of 8*l.* per annum, thus yielding, in the shape of revenue annually, the large sum of 85,792*l.* Supposing these persons to have been articled and admitted since 1815 (the time of the passing of the present Stamp Act), they must have paid a stamp duty on their articles of 120*l.* each, and a further stamp on their admissions of 25*l.* thus making the enormous sum of 1,353,720*l.* which at 3 per cent. would yield an income of 40,521*l.* The lowest branch of the profession may, therefore, be looked upon as taxed to the extent of 126,313*l.* annually, besides the sinking of the sum paid on their articles and admissions.

There are about 130 special pleaders and conveyancers, who take out annual certificates of 12*l.* each, and the number of counsel called to the various inns of Court, now living, is 2,215. Each of these have paid an admission fee of 50*l.* or 110,750*l.* which, at three per cent. is 3,322*l.* So that the present lawyers of England are taxed to the extent of at least 131,195*l.* annually. All these persons may be considered as being replaced every 30 years, so that the revenue may be said to receive in addition the sum of 1,500,000*l.* during these 30 years in the shape of renewed stamps on the articles and admission of fresh blood.

So that the law forms no less a prominent feature in the revenue, than it does in the control it exercises over the wealth and property of this vast empire, or in the influence it has over society by the combined talent and learning of its members. J. W. M.

We have been requested, as a matter of justice, having taken from the daily papers all the rest of the story, to give a place to Mr. PYKE's letter in self-defence. We do so, although its needless length almost forbids it, because we are anxious that the rule of audi alteram partem should on all occasions be cheerfully and liberally observed by the LAW TIMES:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—It is now a well-received axiom, that a barrister of the present day must have a nerve of iron; and although I do not possess more than a common share, yet I feel it will take a great deal to force me to submit to the dictation of any power who may think it the best policy to strike without a reason: in fact, first to knock down a public man, load him with sudden and black accusation, drawn from sources the most tainted, and then coolly to ask him for an answer! (a process I have most certainly undergone). Quietly have I permitted the most unbounded and miserable absurdities to be stated; falsehoods, evidently the result of malice, to be made, to ascertain, if possible, from what quarter they proceed, with their extent and amount of venom, before I, with due humility, put in my plea of "Not Guilty," at the bar of public opinion, to the absurd charge made against me of copying my own brief, and conducting my own case without an attorney! My answer is, I emphatically deny copying my own brief, used by me on the trial, or acting without an attorney. With regard to conducting my own case, I admit I did so, and contend that I have a right to do so upon every principle of English law; but, in the present instance, the right was declined until driven into it by the sudden and unavoidable absence of Mr. Horry, long since satisfactorily explained by him. Now, what are the short facts of my case and conduct throughout? Let the public calmly judge.

Five years since, from ill health, I purchased a cottage and garden at Kentish Town; upwards of twelve months since myself and neighbours are suddenly attacked with severe illness, evidently the result of a poisoned atmosphere. Several deaths occur, the parties complaining to me and stating the cause prior to their death, and one of them my deceased tenant. He is succeeded by another tenant, who is compelled to quit from the same cause, with two servants; and whilst sleeping there I also become seriously ill. We trace the cause to a manufactory for bleaching bristles for brushes; it is then found that arsenic, chlorine gas, and sulphur are the ingredients in the process. The opinions of Dr. Christison, on poisons, Dr. Roots, Dr. Steighill, Dr. Watson, Dr. Sandys, and Professor Brande, are taken, when we find that death and rapid disease are the result, if the poisonous fumes enter our houses. Dreadfully alarmed, we unceasingly for months apply to the Paving and Cleansing Board of the Hamlet of Kentish Town, of which the defendant is a member! In strong terms we complain of the iniquity in carrying on so poisonous a nuisance in the place, and that too by a member of their own Board, and submit we were entitled to protection, from the heavy rates we paid, and call upon the defendant's co-commissioners to appoint an attorney to put it down. The Board meet, and by a majority of twelve to two agree to, and do enter a report upon their minutes, or books, that the defendant is carrying on the bleaching of bristles by sulphur, and also the before-mentioned medical and chemical operations. The defendant is requested to remove it, all to no purpose; it is increased. The medical men advise the neighbours to quit, they cannot safely remain within reach of it, the danger is immediate, the delay is ruin to health. The neighbours try to abate it by a public printed warning of its frightful nature, supported by medical and chemical authority. All is of no service. They indict, and under the direction of the learned Chairman of the Middlesex Sessions, the jury are directed it is a private and not a public nuisance. The result is, a verdict of not guilty is returned, and all this contrary to a similar result on the Welsh circuit the assizes before last, when a Westminster Hall judge gave such a direction to the jury that a verdict of guilty was delivered; and the defendant on that indictment suffered six months' imprisonment for bleaching bristles similar to the present defendant.

The prosecutors in this case appoint their solicitor. The chemical and abstruse parts of the case, with the symptoms caused in and felt by myself, servants, tenant, and neighbours, with the chemical authorities and analysis referred to by me, and my thorough knowledge of my own case, are drawn up by me; these facts are submitted to our solicitor, then handed over to Mr. Horry to master that part of the case. Weeks before the indictment came on for trial a fair copy of the pleadings and brief are made, and I emphatically assert not by me; this copy brief I used in court, and upon such copy brief I made notes whilst conducting the case, the original draft minutes remaining in Mr. Horry's hands, who, I believe, still holds them. This is the head and front of my offence.

Now, let the public in its wisdom judge both myself and co-prosecutors. We shall submit with deference, conscious as we are every act of ours, when properly investigated, will entitle us to sympathy rather than abuse, so liberally bestowed on our stepping forth to put down what we feel and know to be a dreadful public nuisance.

Very faithfully yours,
H. H. PYKE.

THE CORPORATION OF LONDON AND THE WHOLESALE DEALERS.

A good deal of excitement has been occasioned by the order just issued to the City Solicitor relative to the wholesale dealers in the city. The committee appointed by the Common Council on the eve of St. Thomas's day, in the last year, have at length produced their report, which has been confirmed by the Court. It is very voluminous, and contains many curious extracts from the city records, from the Saxon era to the present time. Annexed to the report there are certain conclusions drawn from the previous extracts, and certain suggestions for proceeding, which, it is understood, are from the pen of the learned Serjeant Merewether, the town-clerk. It is recommended in these suggestions, that the corporation shall immediately commence proceedings to compel all wholesale dealers to take up their freedom, and, for the purpose of more effectually accomplishing this object, that the ancient practices and proceedings of the wardmotes should be revived, and their due observance should by degrees be more rigidly enforced. Upon these suggestions the committee have reported as follows:

"The subject-matter is not only of the greatest importance to this city, but also involves weighty considerations, having on the one side deep-rooted prejudices, long practice, and continued neglect to overcome; and on the other, the necessity of extensive and effective correction of existing evils, and the securing the restoration of the ancient, just, and reasonable rights of the city.

"We have weighed and considered the conclusions which are printed, and the proceedings which are suggested, and though we are not at present prepared to give our final report on all the matters referred to us, or to recommend at once all the proceedings which may hereafter be requisite, yet there are some points upon which we are prepared to report our recommendations to this Court, and to press their immediate adoption, as required by the existing evils, and the necessity of a speedy correction.

"The pressure on the retail dealers and the immunity of others who dwell within this city, and partake of all its advantages, have weighed much with your committee, and we have unanimously resolved that the acts of Common Council enforcing penalties on persons residing in the city, and not enrolled, using arts, trades, occupations, and mysteries, within this city, should be recommended for immediate enforcement.

"We have been the more inclined to recommend to this Court the adoption of proceedings for the penalties under the acts of Common Council, as we have the satisfaction of knowing that the Court of Aldermen had likewise had laid before them by the Remembrancer extracts and documents relative to the wholesale dealers, copies of which have been communicated to us by the Court of Aldermen, and from which we find that the same view we have taken of the liability of the wholesale dealers, who are not freemen, to proceedings for penalties, under the laws and customs of this corporation, is adopted by the Remembrancer."

It is stated in the corporation circles that there are some thousands of opulent merchants and wholesale dealers carrying on business in the city without being free. The publicity which the report has received has caused a very extraordinary sensation amongst this class of persons; but it is understood not to be the intention of the corporation to commence an indiscriminate crusade against the whole body, but to select from each ward one or more offenders, with whom the question will be tried. It is stated that all the great wholesale dealers are determined to resist what they consider to be an usurped power, and next term is spoken of as likely to hear the decision.

BANKRUPTCY COURT, OCT. 12.

Re JAMES SAWYER.

ALLEGED FRAUDULENT CONDUCT OF AN ATTORNEY.—This insolvent, who had been an attorney in Bow-lane, Cheapside, was opposed by Mr. Cooke on the part of a widow named Rokes, and supported by Mr. M. Chambers.

The case was before the Court on a former day, when evidence was given on the part of the opposition, and the insolvent on the present occasion was examined to some hours' duration. The complaint was that he had defrauded Mrs. Rokes of nearly 2,000*l.* the loss of which had reduced her to distress, and had obliged her to sell some furniture to bring her case before the Court. The evidence proved that the husband and son of Mrs. Rokes had been undertakers in Union-street, Borough. They were in partnership, and both had died. The son had saved 2,000*l.* in a box, which he gave her shortly before his death, for her own benefit, and when her husband afterwards died she took out letters of administration, omitting all mention of the money given her by her son. In February 1842, her son-in-law, North, was heard in the Insolvent Debtors' Court, on which occasion she was subpœnaed as a witness. She consulted the insolvent, and mentioned the circumstance about the 2,000*l*. He told her she had committed an offence for which she could be transported, as the money should have been returned when she took out letters of administration. The poor woman was alarmed, and it was arranged that she should sell it out, and place it in his hands until after the hearing of the case. They went together to the Bank and she sold out the money, and outside the Bank deposited in his hands 2,400*l*. North was finally heard in April 1842, and, until after that period, no application was made for the return of the money. The insolvent told her that North's creditors were entitled to a portion of the money, and he advised her to sell it out, He had made her advances to about 400*l*. and that was the whole she had obtained of the 2,400*l*.

The insolvent stated that he was to allow Mrs. Rokes interest for the money. He had advanced her 500*l*. He had a bill of law costs (which had not been delivered) to 50*l*., and he admitted he owed her a balance of about 1,400*l*. He had used the money in his business. He kept at the time nine clerks and his carriage, and had a good practice. He, however, only made small deposits at the time with his bankers. He had taken an opinion of counsel and was advised that the money should have been returned when letters of administration were taken out. He had not advised her to amend the return made to the Stamp-office, neither had he advised her to place a portion of it in court for North's creditors. She suggested that the money should be placed in his hands, and he "acceded" to that suggestion. His insolvency arose from the failure of a Mr. Hannan, who owed him 2,000*l*. and he had other debts owing to him.

On the conclusion of the evidence, Sir C. F. Williams ordered an account of the disposition of the money obtained from Mrs. Rokes to be furnished to him before he gave his decision.

Mr. Cooke pressed for an early day, remarking that the insolvent had been long enough out of prison, and the interest of justice required a speedy decision.

Mr. M. Chambers prayed the Court to grant some days' delay.

Sir C. F. Williams adjourned the case to Monday week, ordering the account mentioned to be furnished to him some days before the next occasion.

Notice.—The Master of the Rolls has appointed Saturday, the 2nd of November, at half after three in the afternoon, at the Rolls Court, Chancery-lane, for swearing in solicitors pursuant to the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 45. Every person desirous of being sworn on the above day must leave his common law admission at the secretary's office, Rolls-yard, Chancery-lane, on or before the 1st November, at three o'clock.

Secretary's Office, Rolls, Oct. 7, 1844.

The Palace Court.—It is said that, owing to the increased business of the superior courts of Westminster, it is in contemplation to throw open the practice of the Palace Court, which is at present confined to four counsel, and about eight attorneys, with three presiding judges. The jurisdiction of the Palace Court extends twelve miles around Whitehall, as the crow flies, and it is competent to try causes to any amount; but in all causes above the amount of 20*l*. the defendant may, on giving security, remove the action to the Court of Queen's Bench. The throwing open of the Court will be a great boon to suitors, as its jurisdiction will be extended, in which case causes which have frequently to be made remanets of in the superior courts of Westminster in sittings after term, may then be set down for hearing and disposed of before the judges of the Palace Court, so that both time and expense will be saved.

The Attorney-General.—We are happy to state that accounts have been received mentioning a most favourable and gradual improvement in the health of the highly esteemed representative of Exeter. On the 30th of September, Sir William Follett was at Baveno, on the Lago Maggiore, whence he intended to proceed to Milan. The learned gentleman will remain in Italy for some months.—Sunday paper.

Commitment of Insolvents.—Under the New Insolvent and Bankruptcy Act of Lord Brougham, a sort of indiscriminate discharge of debtors whose debts have not amounted to 20*l*., it appears, has taken place; and the consequence has been that several re-commitments to prison by the Bankruptcy Commissioners have been made. Two instances of this kind have occurred in our District Court of Bankruptcy during the week. A man named Simpson, who had thus been discharged, came before the commissioners for a final order, and relief from his debts, when he was opposed by an attorney for a person named John Jones, a coal dealer, in Vauxhall-road, Liverpool, and the grounds of the opposition were, that the petitioner was also in gaol at the suit of Jones, for an assault, the damages and costs amounting to the sum of 38*l*.—the damages, however, being less than 20*l*. It appears by the fourth section of 5 and 6 Vict. it is enacted, "that if any insolvent has been convicted of any offence, or had contracted debts by reason of any judgment in any proceeding for breach of promise of marriage, revenue laws, or in any action for seduction, criminal conversation, libel, assault, battery, malicious arrest, malicious suing out a fiat in bankruptcy, or malicious trespass, he would be deemed ineligible to take the benefit of the Act." On the above section the commissioner held, that Simpson (who had been released from Lancaster Castle) should be sent back to his old quarters, when a warrant was made out and placed in the hands of Mr. Ayres (Mr. Gaskell the messenger's clerk), who subsequently relodged him with Captain Hansbrow in Lancaster Castle. A very awkward circumstance connected with these commitments is, that there is no fund, nor is there any thing in the Act to provide for the expense of conveying insolvents to gaol when there is no estate. The messenger, it is said, is bound to execute the warrant of the commissioner; and although the cost to him is 3*l*. for conveying a prisoner to Lancaster, it is held that he has no one to look to for redress. This is punishing the innocent for the guilty in earnest. An insolvent named Boyle was also recommitted this week and conveyed to prison by the messenger under similar circumstances, and on the opposition of the same Mr. Jones.—Liverpool Mercury.

Circulation of Country Notes.—To-day, the 10th instant, the portion of the Bank Charter Act which relates to the circulation of bank-notes by country bankers in England and Wales comes into operation. There are several provisions in the statute having reference to the subject. By the 13th section it is provided that every banker claiming to issue bank-notes in England and Wales should, within one month after the passing of the Act, on the 19th of July last, give notice to the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes of his claim, and thereupon the commissioners should ascertain if he was lawfully carrying on business on the 19th of May last, and then the commissioners should ascertain the average amount of bank-notes which were in circulation for a period of twelve weeks preceding the 27th of April last, which amount is to be certified to the banker; "and it shall be lawful for every such banker to continue to issue his own notes after the passing of this Act, provided nevertheless that such banker shall not at any time after the 10th of October, 1844, have in circulation upon the average of a period of four weeks, to be ascertained as hereinafter mentioned, a greater amount of notes than the amount so certified." It is by other sections enacted that the amount so certified to be issued shall be published in the London Gazette, and that in case the amount in circulation shall exceed the certified sum, such banker shall forfeit a sum equal to the amount circulated. After the 19th of October every banker on one day in every week, to be fixed upon by the commissioners, shall render accounts of the amount of bank-notes in circulation on every day in the week, with the average for four weeks, and with the amount authorized, such account to be published in the London Gazette; and, if neglect be made, or a false account rendered, such banker to forfeit 100*l*. for every such offence. In order to ascertain the monthly average amount, the daily circulation for four weeks after the 10th of October is to be taken, such period ending on a Saturday, and such amount is not to exceed the sum certified. The commissioners have power to inspect the books of bankers, &c., to ascertain the circulation of their notes, and a penalty of 100*l*. is provided for disobedience on the part of the bankers.

The New Metropolitan Building Act.—The Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods and Forests have just issued a notice that they have appointed Sir Robert Smirke, James Pennethorne, esq. and Thomas Cubitt, esq. to constitute, with the official referees, a board for the examination of persons who may present themselves for the purpose of obtaining certificates of qualification for the office of district surveyor within the limits of the New Metropolitan Building Act. All communications for the said examiners are to be addressed to the registrar of metropolitan buildings, at his office, No. 3, Trafalgar-square.—The Builder.

Durham Scholarship.—Ralph Lindsay, esq. solicitor, of London, and a native of Durham, is about to found a scholarship in the university of the latter city, of the annual value of 40*l*. It will be tenable for three years by boys who must have been two years at Durham.

Finsbury Registration.—The revision of voters for the borough of Finsbury commenced on Wednesday, before Mr. Moylan, at the Vice-Chancellor's Court, Lincoln's-inn. On the parish of St. Mary, Islington, being called, Mr. Oldershaw, the vestry clerk, said there were no claims, but there were twenty-eight objections, some of which were of a peculiar character. Richard Thane, one of the persons objected to, said that his rates had not been paid in consequence of a highly objectionable form of receipt which was attempted to be palmed off upon the inhabitants of Islington, and which he believed was done entirely with a view of depriving the parishioners of the rights conferred upon them by the Legislature. On the 8th of July he tendered payment to the overseers, and a proper receipt was refused him. The Revising Barrister thought that, under the circumstances, the tender of the money ought to be considered a bonâ fide payment, as far as registration purposes were concerned. Mr. Thane stated that the collector would not insert his name in the receipt, but insisted on substituting that of his landlord. The Revising Barrister, after hearing a lengthened discussion, said he thought it was a matter of angry feeling, and trusted such a difficulty would not occur again. The name was ordered to be inserted in the registry. Several cases of a like nature occurred, and were similarly disposed of.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—My attention has been drawn to an exhibition you have endeavoured to make of me in the Law Times of last week, under the title of "Sham Lawyers," and stating that "another of those suspicious personages has made his public appearance;" and then follows a circular of mine, set out in due form, and any one would infer, from your style, that I had just commenced my business. I beg leave to tell you that I am no "sham lawyer," nor any lawyer at all, nor ever pretended or assumed to be one; and, therefore, your assignation of such a term as applied to me is most improper and unjust. I have been a debt collector for the last eight years, and I can refer to hundreds of respectable persons in the counties of Berks, Bucks, and Surrey, amongst whom I can count some of the most respectable of the Profession, and whose testimonial to that effect I have by me, recommending me to the sheriff as officer, &c.

I have collected some thousands of pounds in my time, and punctually paid over the debts as I received them, and which would be worthy of imitation by some of your real lawyers. I can also prove I am more a friend to the lawyers than otherwise, many of whom have had business through me. If a person to whom I apply will not pay, then a retainer is sent by the tradesman to whom the debt is due to an attorney to commence legal proceedings—the writ is sent through an attorney to serve in the usual way, which brings something into his pocket—then the defendant perhaps employs another attorney to defend, which puts more costs into his pocket; and all I get is my bare two shillings in the pound when the debt is paid. I would ask you, when a party will not pay, who is a tradesman to go to but an attorney? and if he don't go to one he must go to another, and business not being now with attorneys as it used to be, if one won't attend to it there are plenty that will; the only difficulty is to get hold of an honest one. I fear, in your zeal to signalize yourself in the eyes of your patrons, that you forget the proper distinction between debt collectors who do their business fairly and respectably, and those who usurp the duties of the Profession and act as attorneys under the shelter of being a clerk, &c.; but I must beg you to understand this is not my case, nor will the term "sham lawyer" apply to me. I am a county court bailiff and debt collector, and I have given a heavy bond for the performance of my duties. I certainly shall ask a real lawyer how far you are justified in thus injuring and branding at your pleasure any one you may, without proper inquiry, choose to hold up to public execration.

I shall expect you to insert this letter in your next.

I am, Sir, yours very obediently,

Jeremiah Harman.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—In the case of Re Foster, in which I was engaged for the petitioner, and which was heard before Mr. Fonblanque on Saturday last, the solicitor for the opposing creditor attempted to shew some connection between me and a Mr. Hardy, who had put in a plea for Foster in person. I beg to state that Mr. Hardy, of Little East-street, Lewes, Sussex, is not my clerk, and that I have no connection with him, either directly or indirectly.

ATTORNEYS' GOWNS AND SHAM ATTORNEYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—The several able letters on the subject of "Attorneys' Gowns" which have appeared in your columns are, in my opinion, amply sufficient to justify the resumption of our legitimate costume. What objections are there to it? None, that I am aware of, but the cost and carriage; and would not these be more than outweighed by the advantage and comfort to ourselves and clients? As a professional body, we should not be alone or singular; instance the Church, the Bar, the Proctor. Would it not add to the gravity of the Profession, and tend to increase its respectability? What, I repeat, are the objections? Let those who are really unfriendly to the adoption (if any such there be) come forward, not anonymously, and urge their objections, and let the arguments on both sides be put in the balance—I would say submitted to the judgment of the congregated Law Societies—and if their verdict be in favour of the "Gown," let the members of the Profession overcome their modesty, and appear on proper occasions as it is fit they should. I trust, with one of your correspondents, that the Legal Protective Association (upon which we are about to place some of our hopes) will use its influence not only in this particular, but in one also of equal, if not greater, importance I mean Sham Attorneys, for whose detection and punishment it is high time a remedy were applied. Now, I think the above association, coupled with the assistance of the Bar, will be able, to a very great extent, if not wholly, to eradicate the evil, provided the courts will not do it. Let it be ascertained, in every instance, whenever practicable, at the assizes or sessions, that the attorney's name and residence is indorsed on each brief, and if there be any suspicion that all is not right, let the attorney be immediately written to; if he confess the cheat, then let means be adopted to punish the wrong-doer. If the ostensible attorney do not second the exertions of the society, then, Sir, it will be your duty to "shew him up" to his professional [brethren]; and though the duty may not be a pleasant one, you have given proof that you do not, on fit occasions, shrink from it; and if such a man had taken to a gown, I wish you could be authorized to disrobe him. I respectfully submit, then, that these desirable objects are not difficult of attainment; only let us have the hearty co-operation of our different societies, and the honourable portion of both branches of the Profession, sanctioned by judicial authority, which would be cheerfully given to every right movement, and then, and not till then, will the profession of the law be placed in that position in public esteem which it ought to occupy. Gladly embracing this opportunity of thanking you for the valuable services you have rendered the body since the publication of the first number of the LAW TIMES,

I remain yours, &c.

WILL. MELLAND.

Chesterfield, Oct. 15, 1844.

P.S.—I recollect, some time ago, it was the custom of one of our county papers to add the names of the attorneys on both sides in their report of assize and sessions business. If this practice were generally adopted, Sham Attorneys would be at a discount.

PROFESSIONAL COSTUME.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I am glad that the observations which I thought fit to address to you on the subject of obstructions to the admission of Solicitors into Courts of Justice has elicited several very able letters from your correspondents.

I quite agree with them that the gown of the Attorney should be worn as the distinctive badge of our grade of the Profession, were it only to sever us from accountants, agents, and others of that fry, whom Lord Brougham, in his progress of crushing the Profession by infinitismal doses, is seeking to bring into notice.

As the introduction of the gown should be simultaneous, I would suggest that each member of the Profession in the various towns should sign a consent to adopt the gown, and forward it to your journal, or to the Law Institution, by which means the measure would, in all likelihood, speedily become generally adopted.

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

THOMAS LOTT.

LETTER BEFORE ACTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Cooper's letter, I beg to refer him to the case of Kirton v. Braithwaite (5 Law J. N.S. Ex. Pleas, p. 165), which decides that an attorney cannot legally charge for a letter written before action brought, and that a tender made of a debt without the charge for the letter is a good tender. I recently tried a case before the under-sheriff of Oxford, in which the very point was involved. There was a demand in that case for the payment of two letters in addition to the debt. The defendant pleaded a tender of the debt. The under-sheriff ruled that the tender was good, upon which the plaintiff moved for a new trial, on the ground of a misdirection; but a rule was refused, and the plaintiff paid the defendant's costs.

An attorney's letter is, of course, always allowed in costs (if written). So far Mr. Dax is right: but he is quite wrong if he means that the attorney is entitled, as matter of legal right, to demand 3s. 6d. for the letter; and if not paid and tender pleaded, the non-payment of the letter will be an answer to the defendant's plea of tender of the debt. Mr. Dax's expression is, as quoted, a fee of 3s. 6d. "may be claimed by the attorney," which is not very strong. There has been a misapprehension on the point, and which, I think, has arisen from the case cited by Mr. Tidd, in his New Prac. p. 19. He says, "Formerly no charge was allowed for such a letter on taxing costs to the attorney for the plaintiff against the defendant; but the propriety of encouraging this preliminary step has of late induced a contrary practice; and in a recent case (Morrison v. Summers, 1 Bar. & Ad. 559; 1 Dowl. Rep. 325), it was determined that an attorney is entitled to costs for writing a letter demanding a debt from a defendant, and that he may proceed in the action, unless the same be paid, even after payment of the debt before a writ was issued."

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

H. STILES.

LETTER BEFORE ACTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I beg to refer Mr. Cooper to the case of Morrison v. Summers (1 Barn. & Adolph. 559), and to 3 Chitty's Gen. Prac. 3rd edit. p. 105, where he will find that an attorney can legally demand 3s. 6d. for his letter if the debt be paid before a writ is issued, if the same exceed 20*l.*, and 2s. if the debt be 20*l.* or under, and that a tender of the debt without the costs of the letter would not be a sufficient tender.

Yours truly,

J. T. SHAPLAND.

South Molton, Oct. 14, 1844.

LETTER BEFORE ACTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—For the information of your correspondent in last week's number, in reference to this subject, I would refer to a case where it has been decided that a charge for writing a letter cannot be sustained where the amount of the debt is legally tendered before process has been actually issued.

The case referred to is Chillicumbe and Another v. Edgill. I have not met with the case in the regular reports, but obtained my information from the Legal Guide (vol. 6), and I believe the report in that work may be relied upon. The facts were these:—An action was brought upon a bill of exchange, but, in fact, to try the right of the plaintiffs' attorneys to charge 6s. 8d. for writing a letter to the defendant demanding payment before action brought. In April 1840, a bill for 20*l.* accepted by the defendant, became due in the hands of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' attorneys wrote to the defendant demanding payment, with 6s. 8d. costs. Upon the receipt of the letter, 2s., with the amount of the bill, was tendered to the attorneys, which covered noting and interest, but was refused until the 6s. 8d. costs was paid. The party tendering left the money, and went away. Subsequently an application was made by the defendant for the bill, which was refused until the 6s. 8d. was paid for the letter, which request not being complied with, the action was brought.

It was argued for the plaintiffs that the plaintiffs' attorneys only did that which respectable professional gentlemen ought to do; which was, first to write a civil letter of demand before they commenced an action.

Bosanquet, J. left it to the jury to say whether the charge for the letter, when the demand was paid immediately after its receipt, was a fair one or not, and the jury found for the defendant.

In Easter Term, 1841, the plaintiffs obtained a rule nisi, calling upon the defendant to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside and a new trial granted, on the ground that the decision was against evidence, and against the opinion of the judge who tried the cause. The Court, after taking time to consider, discharged the rule, the judgment delivered by Tindal, C.J. being, that the Court was of opinion the verdict ought not to be disturbed.

I may mention, that it is the general opinion among Town practitioners that the charge for a letter, before action brought, cannot be enforced if the debt be properly tendered before a writ has been issued. It would be otherwise if a writ had been issued, although not actually served.

Your obedient servant,

Gray's-inn. J. C. WHITEFIELD.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"A. B." thus writes on the subject of Attorneys' Gowns:—

There can be no doubt, for the reasons contained in the able letter of Mr. Durrant, in your paper of the 5th instant, that the resumption by attorneys of their proper legal costume would not only add to the dignity and respectability of the Profession, but also to convenience in practice in the Courts. This last, however, is the main argument in favour of such resumption; for there are not a few who would say, that the dignity of the Profession should be kept up by other means than that of wearing a gown, though why this should be a reason for not wearing our proper professional costume, one may well be at a loss to conceive—pity it is that the dignity of the Profession, to whose care men trust their dearest interests, should ever have been diminished—however, there is a better day coming, thanks to your valuable Journal and to the feelings existing amongst the younger members of the Profession. After all, when we can point to Roscoe as having been a member of our order, and to not a few of our most eminent judges, there is yet hope.

An attorney-at-law has as full and undeniable a right to wear a gown when in attendance at Court as a barrister-at-law has. This is proved by his being obliged to wear one on his being admitted an attorney of the Court of Common Pleas, at Westminster, on which occasion he pays a fee for the temporary use of a gown, to an official, who attends there in the same way as a similar person is present when degrees are being conferred at Oxford and Cambridge with a supply of the proper academical costume for the use of the embryo B.A.'s and M.A.'s. It would be well, however, for the matter to be taken up by the Incorporated Law Society, or the Legal Protective Association, and it would be highly proper, and indeed necessary, to bring the subject in an official way before the Judges of Common Law and Equity, with the view of having their countenance and approbation, inasmuch as the attorneys and solicitors, being officers of the respective Courts in which they may have been admitted, are under the control of the judges of those Courts with respect to their official dress as well as their other professional privileges. I throw out this suggestion with the hope of its being acted upon by the Law Societies I have named. There cannot be a dissenting voice as to the propriety of attorneys wearing their ancient and proper legal costume when professionally attending the Courts.

A subscriber, under the signature of "ONE, &c." thus treats of the same subject:—

I cannot refrain expressing the gratification I have felt on perusing the admirable correspondence contained in the last and previous numbers of your valuable journal of the Profession, on the subject of attorneys resuming their official costume, being fully persuaded that it will increase the respect due to our body as members of an honourable calling, and do much towards exterminating many of the evils which exist, more especially those flagrant breaches of professional etiquette which have been so ably attacked and successfully defeated by your just and severe criticism. There is no one, I imagine, who can venture to deny the usefulness of a professional habit, in the face of the clear and ample arguments of Mr. Durrant and others. Why attorneys and solicitors should be deprived of their ancient and proper dignity there are no grounds to shew; but before I adopt the wearing of a gown, as it appears many of my professional brethren have signified boldly their intention of doing, I would rather it came from the mouths of the judges to sanction the practice, and I sincerely hope the ensuing Term will not pass away without their lordships' attention having been drawn to the subject in a manner that may induce them to give their opinion upon it.

A correspondent, signing himself "ARGUS," who of course furnishes us with his real name, sends the following particulars of the interference and detection of one of that numerous fry we have had of late so frequently to castigate. It will be seen by this, and another case given in the present number, with what vigilance the Bankruptcy Courts (which have been most infested by these creatures) are now watched:—

In the Court of Bankruptcy, on Tuesday last, in the case of Colchy, Stowell, the common informer, actually appeared to conduct the proceedings on behalf of the insolvent; but a member of the Legal Protective Association being out he "look-out," Sir C. F. Williams soon gave Stowell an intimation to desist. It was then urged, he was acting as clerk to some attorney at Lambeth: but it was "no go;" Sir Charles was inexorable, and the agent was sent to the "right about."

LAW TIMES EDITION OF IMPORTANT STATUTES.

MR. PATERSON'S edition of the very important Acts of the last session relating to Joint-Stock Companies, with elaborate notes and a copious index, will be published in the course of next week, forming the Third of the Law Times Editions of Important Statutes.

THE MOVEMENT.

WHAT share the LAW TIMES has had in stimulating the resolute efforts now being made by the Profession to protect and purify itself, it is not for us to determine. Enough that the work is done; let the credit of having kindled the flame be awarded where it may, the consciousness that the movement we have so long and strenuously urged is now being made will be to us of itself a sufficient reward.

But the value of this movement will mainly depend upon the discretion with which it is directed. Difficulties and dangers beset the path, which it will demand great courage and prudence to avoid or conquer. From time to time we propose to give warning of rocks a-head, and occasionally to proffer recommendations, whose value it will be for others to weigh. At all events it will the honest counsel of a friend who has been tried and proved.

Two organizations are now in progress, the one, the elder of the twain, aiming at a union of the provincial Law Societies; the other, yet in its infancy, proposing to link together the entire body of attorneys, metropolitan and provincial, for the common purposes of self-protection and the purification and exaltation (if the term may be so applied) of the Profession. We trust that these associations will work steadily together, nor jostle each other by the way. There must be between them no rivalries, no jealousies, no looking to mere local interests. Once they should turn their strength the one against the other, their worth will have passed away, and they will be hindrances instead of helps to the Profession. It will be very difficult to guard against collision of opinion, and harder still to avoid charges of self-seeking. It would be well if they could contrive from the first to keep up a close communion, so as always to direct their forces to the same spot at the same moment.

Perhaps it may not be amiss to recal to the memories of our readers a suggestion we threw out some months since for the complete organization of the Profession, and still we believe it to be not only a desirable object, but a practical one.

Our scheme was this. That all the provinces should be organized into Law Associations, each large town and county having its own; that the metropolis should form a similar society; that once in every year in the month of May the chairman and secretary of each of the societies should meet in London to deliberate upon the affairs of the Profession, to receive the proceedings of the local societies, to determine on matters of moment to their constituents, and so forth.

We proposed that there should be a central office in London, with a paid secretary, always in attendance, who should communicate to all the societies whatever it might be necessary that they should know, and that some half-dozen members resident in London should be appointed to meet and advise the secretary on any emergency, when time would not permit the summoning of the entire committee from the country.

We further proposed that one of the duties of the central committee at its annual meeting should be to determine what books should be published by the VERULAM SOCIETY for the year ensuing.

We still think that this plan, or something very like it, would be the most successful and satisfactory in its working, because it would really embrace the whole Profession, and in it all interests would be fairly represented. Such a union, moreover, would necessarily carry a vast influence with the Government and the public. Why should not the Provincial Union be deemed the first step towards this end? Why should not the Legal Association be the Metropolitan Society required by the scheme? We are confident that the more it is reflected upon the more apparent will be the advantages of this one complete organization we have rudely sketched over the partial ones in progress.

PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

MR. CROUCH, who has been the unfortunate cause of the fortunate detection of the unprofessional doings at the Central Criminal Court, has addressed the following letter to the Legal Observer. As we have given currency to the accusation, justice demands that we should as widely circulate the defence:—

SIR,—I am happy to observe, by your last number, that you intend to notice the report of the late trial in the Central Criminal Court, Reg. v. Pond, because I feel convinced that you will do that justice to the subject (which the Morning Chronicle has entirely forgotten), and, without mixing other persons or other matters, altogether unconnected with the case, you will fairly judge it by its own circumstances, and will Nothing extenuate, nor set down aught in malice.

As my name has been much used in this affair, permit me "se defendendo," to give you some information which I think will enable you to investigate the subject with more accuracy. The question is, "How far a barrister, practising at the London Sessions, was justified in acting as counsel for a prosecutor in person?"

But before I enter into that question, allow me to say, that I at once concede that in all cases whatever, either criminal or civil, the agency of an attorney is most advantageous to the client, and ought never, if possible, to be dispensed with by counsel.

In order to look at the case fairly, it is necessary to examine the practice of the London Sessions in general; and, secondly, how far my conduct in this particular case was consistent with that practice.

I have been about two years in practice, and during that time I have attended the London Sessions; and being always most anxious to conform to the etiquette of the bar, my greatest difficulty has been to find out by what rules I ought to be guided. I therefore thought the safest plan was, to follow the example of those "who were older in practice, and abler than myself to make conditions." I found that the business of the Central Criminal Court was divided into three branches: the first and best of which was conducted by a few respectable attorneys, who employed the leading counsel, and from whom there was but little chance of juniors getting a brief; the second class of business was given to counsel by attorneys and agents who usually importuned clients in order to obtain it, and was not thought respectable; and the third sort of business was intrusted to counsel by prosecutor and prisoner in person. This latter business I found was received by gentlemen of the bar without any disguise, without any attempt at concealment, and without censure; and although it is only the second time that I have held a brief for a prosecutor (in person in this court), I should at no time have refused to do so. And the Chronicle itself allows it was the practice, even before Mr. Prendergast went to the bar; and I could, if necessary, give you the names of many cases where the leaders of the session have held similar briefs, were it not rendered unnecessary by the frank admission of the gentlemen themselves, who exonerate me from any blame, as I merely followed the practice of my sessions.

I hope, Sir, I have shewn you that in this matter blame has been unfairly attached to me by the daily press, and I look for mere justice at your hands.

It having been conceded to me by the gentlemen of the bar, that I was justified by their practice in acting as counsel in the case in question, it is now for me to shew how I conducted the case itself.

The prosecutor (whom I had known for many years) called upon me and said he wished me to be his counsel in a prosecution for robbery. I asked him who his attorney was (for counsel can never prefer private clients); he said it was a simple case, and he did not intend to employ one. He then handed me the depositions. I told him to send me any further information he had in writing, which he did in a few days. I took no notes, I took no examination.

The next time I saw him was at the Central Criminal Court, the first day of the sessions; he then paid me the fee (two guineas) before the bill was even found, and four days before the trial. I never examined the witnesses; I never even saw one of them until they got into the box to give their evidence.

I hope, Sir, on an impartial view of the subject, you will be of opinion that in undertaking the case in question I have neither acted unusually nor unprofessionally, and that, however the practice of taking briefs from clients in person may be condemned, yet that severe blame ought not to attach to one who had merely followed the long-established usage of the court he practised in.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,

N. CROUCH.

Temple, October 3rd.

We entirely acquit Mr. CROUCH of any peculiar wrong-doing in this matter. Undoubtedly, deny it who may, the practice of taking briefs from other than attorneys has prevailed both at the Central Criminal Court and at the Middlesex Sessions. Mr. CROUCH but followed in the footsteps of greater men, and it is very hard upon him that he should be visited with the blame that attaches to the practice, but which it is not fair to saddle upon one who has only pursued a well-trodden path.

His letter, however, if he be accurately informed, throws a new light upon the side scenes of the Central Criminal Court, and opens to us new mischiefs.

At the bar of this court, he tells us, there are no rules of etiquette, at least in two years he has been unable to find them out. This confirms the necessity we asserted last week of some rules being framed by those who practise there; such an excuse must no longer prevail, or no respectable man will take his wig into the court.

Then he tells us that the business is of three kinds: old and respectable practitioners take one slice, which they give to the leading counsel; a second is grasped "by attorneys and agents, who usually importune clients in order to obtain it, and was not thought respectable;" the third is business "intrusted to counsel by prosecutor and prisoner in person," and this, Mr. CROUCH adds, "was received by the Bar without any disguise, without any attempt at concealment, and without censure!"

Now, we must protest against the conclusions which Mr. CROUCH would deduce from the fact that the first class of respectable business, conducted by respectable men, is given by them only to the leading counsel. That such is the fact we do not doubt; but does it follow that the juniors are thereby justified in procuring briefs by unprofessional practices? Why should not the juniors at the Central Criminal Court and at the Middlesex Sessions be content to bide their time equally with the juniors on the Circuits and at the other County Sessions? If they exclaim, "We must live," we should be inclined to reply, as did Dr. Johnson to a poor maker of bad verses, "I cannot see the necessity." They might have known that business at the Bar comes slowly; and they should not have gone thither wanting the means to enable them to wait the inevitable period of probation. Because a Counsel does not obtain briefs from a respectable attorney, he is not, therefore, justified in taking them from an agent.

As for class the third, the business brought by the parties in person, it may be as Mr. CROUCH asserts of the courts in question, that it is accepted by all without censure. But we can affirm that such is not the practice in any other court; the only case in which it is permitted to counsel to take a brief from the party being when it is handed to him over the bar by a prisoner for his defence. In prosecutions it is never allowed, and the reasons both for the rule and for the exception are too obvious to need being set forth.

Mr. CROUCH has in his second division mingled two distinct classes of business; viz. that importuned for by attorneys and by agents. These stand in a very different position as respects the conduct of counsel, for if the brief be brought by an attorney, counsel is bound to take it, however great the importunity by which it was procured; whereas, if presented by an agent, he is bound to refuse it, however readily obtained. A counsel cannot try degrees of respectability. He has one simple duty to perform,—to see that his brief is properly authenticated by the indorsement of an attorney. Having this, he can inquire no further, the question of the right to use that name is between the attorney who owns it, the party who uses it, and the Profession at large, whose duty it is to see that it is not used improperly.

With these comments on Mr. CROUCH'S letter, we quit the subject for the present. But we shall return to it again and again until something be done to prevent a recurrence of the practices that will assuredly revive when attention is diverted and the talk about them over.

SHAM LAWYERS.

THE following is a rich specimen of its kind. It is, as we are informed, the copy of a bill delivered by Mr. ROBERT SEVILLE, by trade a tailor, in Yorkshire, to one Mr. CHAS. SCAULAN, who had employed him professionally, in his second calling of quasi-lawyer. We hope Mr. CHAS. SCAULAN is satisfied with HIS lawyer's bill. May all employers of such men be so served:—

SHAM LAWYERS.

OUR correspondence last week contained a suggestion for the suppression of these nuisances which appears to us so thoroughly effective for its object, that again we bring it thus prominently under the notice of the Profession.

The plan proposed by our correspondent is very simple. It is, that in all the courts, both superior and inferior, the attorney shall enter his case, whatever it be, with the officer of the Court, as he now does his causes; at quarter sessions with the clerk of the peace; at the assizes with the clerk of the arraigns; and that no attorney shall be permitted to prosecute or defend without such previous entry.

This appears to us to be a certain cure for the mischief that has so long tainted our courts and inflicted such great injury upon the Profession. It would be attended with no inconvenience of any kind, and it would sweep away at once the entire brood of vermin by whom the courts are now infested.

Nor are we without hope that it would do something towards the removal of another evil of almost equal magnitude, and which has hitherto eluded every scheme devised for its destruction; we allude to the malpractice, but too prevalent, of an attorney lending his name to some fellow who pretends to be his clerk, although in truth there is no relationship between them of master and servant, nor is the attorney whose name is used in any manner cognizant of the doings of the fellow who borrows it. An entry of the attorney's name in each case will compel either his own appearance or that of a clerk expressly and directly empowered to appear for him by an authority which should be filed by the officer of the Court. Thus would a ready means be afforded for the discovery of such infamous associations where they exist, for it might easily be ascertained whether the producer of the authority was a bonâ fide clerk or a sham lawyer, and on proof of the latter the Law Societies might bring the party who had lent his name before the judges and procure his expulsion from the Profession he has disgraced.

Earnestly do we commend the suggestion of our correspondent to the serious and immediate consideration of the Profession. Let the Legal Association take it up, for upon them must now devolve those duties which others have neglected; and let it be a subject for consideration at the great coming meeting of the Union of the Provincial Law Societies, from whose co-operation so many advantages may be anticipated.

A NEW TRAP.

THE following advertisement has appeared in a Greenwich newspaper:

16, GREENWICH ROAD,
GREENWICH,
(Opposite the Tabernacle.)

From the difficulty experienced by Tradesmen in general in getting in their outstanding Debts, and the fear of enforcing the same, on account of the late alteration of the law of Imprisonment for Debt under 20*l*. and the dread of incurring heavy law expenses, G. N. WILLCOCK undertakes to collect the same, and indemnify the party employing him from all law costs and charges whatever, on being allowed a fourth part of the debt recovered.

N. B. Weekly and Quarterly Rents collected at 5 per cent. including serving Notices to Quit, Execution of Warrants, Estimates of Dilapidations, and Ejectments, under the new Act, and all legal proceedings attached to the agency.

Valuations for the Probate Duty, &c.

We direct special attention to it, not so much because it is the production of one of the countless brood of SHAM LAWYERS, but because we have no doubt that there is a real lawyer in the back-ground in connection with the advertiser, and who sets this trap to catch clients under cover of the convenient Mr. G. N. WILLCOCK.

Observe the terms of the announcement. Mr. WILLCOCK, himself no lawyer, undertakes to collect debts, and indemnify his employer against all law costs and charges whatever, on being allowed a fourth part of the debts recovered. (A moderate demand truly!) Now it is evident that some lawyer must be employed by Mr. WILLCOCK to do this; upon what terms is known only to themselves; but this much is certain, that there is a lawyer acting so unprofessionally as to deal with Mr. WILLCOCK instead of the real plaintiffs in the legal proceedings required for the recovery of those debts, and therefore giving his sanction to, nay, becoming in fact a participator in, the above advertisement. Let him endeavour to disguise it as he may, the truth is, that he is seeking business through the medium of the nominal advertiser.

Let us plainly tell this attorney that he is known to us; many eyes are upon him; we wait only for documental proof to publish him to the Profession, and consign him to the Legal Association. The moment he is caught making applications or suing for Mr. Willcock, we shall be obliged by the proofs being forwarded to us, and without hesitation we will add him to the disreputable band which have been already put upon record in the pages of the Law Times.

Let him beware in time, and at once withdraw from the connection.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The recent large accessions of members have brought almost within reach of calculation the period when the publication of practical Text-Books may be commenced with safety. The intermediate time may be profitably occupied in making preparation, and especially in deliberating and deciding what shall be done when the Society is in a position to act.

It seems to be generally agreed that the first Text-Book shall be a work, the want of which is daily felt by every member of the Profession, and the design of which was submitted to the members some weeks ago. It was that of a complete book of practice, to contain all the information upon PRACTICE which an attorney requires in the daily duties of his office,—for his LAW he can always find in his library if he wants it in a hurry; or he can procure it from counsel if time permits.

This Book of Practice we proposed to arrange under distinct branches, and to add to each the ordinary forms which the attorney is required to draw, and for which he cannot resort to advice.

The plan was universally approved, but when we came to arrange the details a doubt suggested itself as to the best shape for such a work. At first we proposed to divide it under the half-dozen principal branches of Practice; such as Common Law, Equity, Conveyancing, Magistrates, Bankruptcy and Insolvency, Elections, Local Courts, and Miscellaneous Business; but we found these so often running one into another, that frequently the quality that gives the greatest value to a Law-Book—readiness for reference—was lost in the bulk. The further we advanced in mapping out the scheme, the more apparent were the difficulties, and the more forcibly did we feel the advantages of adopting a different form for a work so multitudinous in its subjects.

The alphabetical arrangement is that which we think will be found the most convenient for the purposes of ready reference. On this point we have inquired of the experience of some legal practitioners in Belgium, where many of the most useful practical law-books are in that form, and they agreed in giving the preference for a book so miscellaneous as a book of practice to the cyclopædic or dictionary method.

Before final decision, we are desirous of taking the opinion of the Profession upon the question which of the two suggested shapes their Book of Practice shall assume. We are decidedly in favour of the alphabetical arrangement; and the manner in which we should propose to carry it out would be this:—

To procure the advantages of division of labour, both in perfectness and speed, each subject should be committed to some legal writer whose studies and practice have peculiarly fitted him for the task, so that a great number of pens may be employed at once.

That no subject might be omitted, we would away, ther propose to publish in the Law Times, helps t work proceeds, a list of the subjects in cult to gu in their alphabetical order, that they harder still ll scrutinized by the Profession, and It would be d heading supplied, or any useless the first to ged. By such means a work may always to c be produced, which will as nearly at the same the ideal of a useful Law-Book as Perhaps labour can accomplish.

memories of advantage of such a form is this, out some mc appear in parts as fast as each por- shed, without waiting for the completion of the entire work before publication, and each part will be in itself perfect and useful so far as it goes.

We shall be obliged by opinions as to the most desirable of these suggested forms of publication.

The First Part of Bittleston and Symons's Magistrates' Cases is now ready. Members will be pleased to learn that the Reports of the Society have been extensively used during the Quarter Sessions now in progress, and everywhere cited and accepted as authorities, and that in various quarters warm expressions of approval have been bestowed upon them.

The 3rd and 4th numbers and first part of the Real Property and Conveyancing Cases will be ready early next week, and will be followed by the second and third numbers of the Criminal Law Cases.

The following members have joined the Society during the last week:—

Mason, Henry Barber B. Wercham, near Stokesferry.
Richardson, Joshua Thos. Rochdale.
Ashton, J. Y. Liverpool.
Webster, Jno. 33, Norfolk-st. Sheffield.

LECTURES ON MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.

By Alfred S. Taylor.

Delivered at Guy's Hospital, 1844.

Lecture IV.

Perforation from disease may occur in two ways: firstly, by ulceration; and, secondly, by solution of the parietes, which is supposed to occur after death. Perforation from cancer or malignant ulcer is a condition to which I shall not here call your attention, because the very diseased state of the stomach will at once announce the real nature of the case. The stomach appears to be one scirrhous mass, and this is not a case to lead to any medical ambiguity; because the individual suffers long, and bears the marks of organic disease. In some cases of perforation as the result of disease, the parietes of the stomach may be eaten away, and the aperture very small indeed. On examining these cases, we find the mucous membrane is the most extensively removed; the muscular coat next, and the peritoneal coat the least ulcerated. The aperture communicating with the abdomen is very small indeed, and not much bigger than a large pin's head. We find patches of redness scattered about the stomach. In scirrhous perforation the stomach is considerably thickened around the aperture, which is commonly of an oval form, about half an inch in diameter, situated in or near the lesser curvature of the stomach.

We have now to speak of perforations of the stomach by poisoning, which may be classed as follows:—

1. By corrosion (mineral acid).
2. By ulceration (irritants).

And those resulting from disease:—

1. By ulceration.
2. Spontaneous.

Another kind of perforation produced by poisoning, and the result of ulceration, takes place from the action of arsenic; but there are only three instances on record of the stomach having been perforated by arsenic as the result of ulceration. The reason of this is, that persons die from arsenic long before the ulcerated process goes on to the extent of producing perforation.

Now how do we distinguish cases of perforation from simple ulceration from cases of poisoning? It is to be remarked that perforation from disease resembles poisoning in its symptoms. The patient is suddenly seized while in a state of apparent health, soon after a meal, with a violent pain in the stomach, and dies in five or six hours. In many of these cases there is a strong resemblance to the action of arsenic, and the diagnosis is founded principally on the following facts: The symptoms of perforation from disease occur very suddenly, and in the most excruciating form, but in arsenical poisoning they come on gradually, and go on increasing in intensity. Then there is very slight vomiting in a case of perforation as the result of disease; there is no diarrhœa, and the patient dies with all the characteristics of peritonitis. It is owing to peritonitis, indeed, that life is destroyed, and in this form of disease it is not likely that a well-informed practitioner would ever make a mistake. An inspection of the body must remove all doubt, if accompanied by a chemical analysis. Now the second form, as the result of morbid causes, is known as spontaneous perforation. It is generally seen at the large end of the stomach. The aperture is large, and the edges are ragged and softened, and present an appearance exactly as if they had been scraped. Whenever we see this spontaneous perforation, we see these appearances. Although the contents of the stomach are effused, there is no sign of peritonitis, a circumstance that leads to the supposition that it is a post mortem change, otherwise we are unable to explain it. It has been supposed to depend on a chemical solution of the stomach by the gastric juice at or about the time of death. It is said to have been observed in certain cases where persons have died from accident or disease; but during the last twenty-three years we have only the report of one instance of this kind occurring in Guy's Hospital, and that was a case where the individual was labouring under disease. He died apparently from other causes, and there was a state of general disease of the system found after death. In persons who have died of apoplexy soon after a meal, nothing of the kind has been met with, and yet these are cases in which we should expect to find it, according to the theory I have noticed. In one instance it was seen where the person died from long-continued disease. The presence of food in the stomach does not appear to be necessary to it; the individual may be labouring under a lingering disease, and hence health and activity are not necessary to its production. We are unable to say what is the direct cause of this condition. It would appear to take place after death; but it is quite possible that it may take place an hour or two before death, and yet no marks of peritonitis be found. Those who take up the chemical views of the present day have contended, that muriatic acid combined with the gastric juice, will act with a solvent power on the mucous membranes; but it must be recollected, that this solution has no power on any substance possessing life, and therefore, this theory presents the almost inadmissible doctrine that the gastric juice preserves to itself a power of acting on the stomach, and retains a vitality longer than the stomach itself, unless we can imagine that the parietes of the stomach and the gastric juice retain their vital properties—the one as long as the other. On this theory it is assumed, that there is a kind of power preserved in the gastric juice which the stomach loses long before. Without going into that subject, we may say that the quantity of muriatic acid naturally present is quite inadequate to the explanation of any thing of that kind. By a most careful analysis, Dr. Prout found that the quantity of muriatic acid in the gastric juice was not more than five grains in sixteen ounces, hardly more than one thousandth part of the solution. I mention these facts to shew that we have yet to find out the cause of spontaneous perforation of the stomach. Perforation from corrosion is known from that produced by other causes by the presence of acute symptoms during life; by the vascularity, or cauterization of the mucous membrane, and the traces of corrosive poisoning in the substance of the stomach or abdomen generally; so that though here there is some difficulty in explaining how spontaneous perforation of the stomach occurs, yet medico-legally speaking, it is distinguished very easily from those cases which it most resembles.

We now proceed to the evidence derivable from a chemical analysis of the poison, or the contents of the viscera, and this is directed, first, to the nature of the poison; and, secondly, to the proportion or quantity that may exist. Both the nature of the poison and the probable quantity administered are required to be stated in the indictment on a criminal charge of poisoning; but it is not absolutely necessary for conviction that the substance thus stated should be proved to have been that actually administered, because the purposes of the law are considered to be fulfilled if the kind of death is substantially proved. A man may be indicted for administering corrosive sublimate; but it may be proved that the poison was in reality arsenic; still it has been held that the prisoner may be convicted of poisoning, because the kind of death is, in substance, considered to be the same, and the means resorted to are perfectly immaterial. All the medical witness has to prove is that the person was poisoned. This is in many respects fortunate, because convictions may take place in spite of the defects in the original analysis. The quantity of poison present is generally stated conjecturally, but the witness may assist the law by giving a determinate idea of the quantity taken. Any organic substance given for analysis should, if liquid, be measured; or, if solid, be weighed, in order that you may at any future time determine the quantity. The contents of the stomach should be examined to know how much poison was present at the time of death. A question commonly put is—what quantity of poison is sufficient to destroy life or to produce any serious effects in the person to whom the poison is administered? This requires closer attention when it is considered that the malicious intent of a prisoner is very often inferred from the quantity of poison given. At the Kingston assizes a case occurred, about ten years since, in which a man was capitally indicted for administering oxalic acid with intent to murder. The poison was introduced in a cup of coffee, served for the prosecutor's breakfast. There could be no doubt of its presence, but an estimation of the quantity led Mr. Barry to discover that oxalic acid existed in the proportion of ten grains to one pint, a quantity which he considered quite insufficient to produce any deleterious effects. The man was acquitted, but it is probable that had a larger portion been found, he would have been convicted. That made all the difference as to the malice of the prisoner. This case shews that a medical witness, while he must not be content with determining the presence of the poison, must also, if he wish to render the law merciful, determine the quantity. The law presumes upon innocence rather than guilt, when the weight of the evidence does not strongly shew the maliciousness of the prisoner's act. If a man administered to another a few drops of oil of vitriol in a large quantity of water, we should not infer that his intention was to commit murder; but if he administered a large quantity of th acid in the undiluted state, the malice of such an act would be at once apparent. Presumptions of this kind must of course be affected as well by the nature of the poison as by the moral circumstances brought forward in the evidence. The quantity of the poison present, therefore, is important to be noticed. It is from the result of experiments upon the poisoned articles of food that the malice of the prisoner's conduct may be inferred. The quantity of poison that may exist in the deceased's stomach at the time of death cannot determine the quantity actually administered, in consequence of the loss by vomiting and purging, and by absorption from the length of time the deceased survived after taking it. If the deceased died from poison, it is clear that the quantity administered must have been sufficient to kill, whatever may be the quantity found in the stomach after death. This may or may not be more than sufficient to destroy life. But, notwithstanding this very general rule, lawyers very often put a question as to how much was found in the stomach, and whether that was sufficient to destroy life? Whether any was found, or whether there was sufficient left in the organ to kill, it is not very material to prove, if other facts shew that the person died from the effects of poisoning. There have been cases frequently in the hospitals of persons who have died from the effects of arsenic in twenty-four hours, and yet no trace of the poison has been discovered in the stomach, in consequence of the excessive vomiting and purging that have taken place. It is the custom of prisoners charged with administering poison to allege, with regard to some bodies, that they did not know them to be poisonous, and that they did not administer them with intent to kill; but the law infers that corrosive sublimate, or arsenic, or oxalic acid, must have been given with intent to kill, and it lies with the prisoner to prove the contrary.

I will just here call your attention to a few remarks on the identity of the articles that may be given for the purposes of analysis in a case of suspected poisoning. It is necessary that the vessels used should be perfectly clean, and that all the apparatus used in testing should be clean. This is very important to be attended to—in fact, it is incumbent on the medical practitioner to observe this caution, and unless he does so, in a doubtful case the prisoner will certainly be acquitted. In one instance the evidence from a good chemical analysis was rejected, because the contents of the stomach had been placed in a vessel borrowed from a neighbouring grocer's shop, and it was proved that the grocer dealt in poisons. The law assumed, for the sake of humanity, that there might have been something left in the vessel, the witness not having satisfied himself that it was perfectly clean. Then the suspected substance, when once placed in your hands, should be preserved in your custody, and should never be let out of your sight or keeping. It is not necessary always to carry it about you, but you should lock it up away from any person who might meddle with it. Suppose you leave it about in a room to which many other persons have access, your evidence respecting it will be set aside, because it would be necessary to bring forward every person who might have gone into the room, or any person who might have handled the substance, in order to know what became of it while it was in their possession. This, therefore, very much complicates the case. A case was tried on the Midland Circuit a few years ago, when it was proved that the liquid given to the medical practitioner for analysis went through the hands of five persons before it came to the medical witness. This case turned entirely upon the chemical analysis. The gentleman who examined the substance gave his evidence otherwise very satisfactorily, but when he came to the question as to the identity of the substance, he failed: and though the man was found guilty, it was not in consequence of the medical evidence. Another case was tried at Norwich, a few years ago, which ought to furnish a little caution to us. The contents of the stomach were left in a room where two nurses were, and to which many other persons had access. The medical practitioner left the vessel to be forwarded to him, and it was found that it contained arsenic; but, from the circumstance of it being left in the care of these two women, who had allowed the vessel containing the suspected liquid to be exposed in the room to which other persons were admitted, the medical evidence was not received. Now it is sometimes difficult to know what to do exactly when you are at a long distance from town in the country, and some corroboration of your opinion is required. If you receive any suspected liquid from the country for analysis, and observe that the substance is sealed up and forwarded by any mode of conveyance, in such a case, the seal being unbroken, there will be no objection to the evidence. But this cannot be said of any article sent in a vessel open or loosely tied, by a carrier, or in any other way. A case was tried at the Old Bailey, in 1835, in which a gentleman in the country had sent up a poisonous liquid to London by a carrier, not sealed, but open; this being proved, the evidence was rejected. In analyzing the substance supposed to have been taken, the smallest possible quantity of the substance, liquid or solid, should be used, as some should be reserved for corroborative experiments which may be required by others. Very often when an individual feels himself called upon to examine for the first time a suspected liquid, he employs an unnecessarily large quantity: but the tests are in general more conclusive when employed upon small quantities. In testing arsenic or corrosive sublimate, if you use a large quantity, you obtain none of the metal, as the sublimate is very often obscured. It is not merely a matter of policy, for the corroboration of evidence, but for security in the result, that you should operate upon the smallest quantities of the poison. With regard t the tests that should be used, the following is a list of those most proper to be employed:—

Acids.	Alkalies.	Salts.
Sulphuric	Potash	Nitrate of barytes
Nitric	Soda	Chloride of barium
Muriatic	Ammonia (and their carbonates	Chloride of lime
Oxalic	Calcined carbonate of soda	Nitrate of silver
Tartaric	Lime	Sulphate of iron
Acetic		Ferrocyanate of Potash
		Phosphate of soda
		Sulphate of copper
		Iodide of potassium
		Acetate of lead
		Bichloride of mercury
		Iodide of manganese
		Carbonate of barytes

Oxalate of ammonia; hydrosulphuret of ammonia; sulphuretted hydrogen; sulphuret of iron; sulphate of strontia; protochloride of tin; chloride of gold; bichloride of platina: iodic acid; permuriate (sesquichloride) of iron; black flux, and soda flux.

Then, again, in analyzing a suspected substance you may find yourself pressed to answer the question, What is the nature of the poison on which you are operating? There is a rule which, in such cases, should be closely followed; that is, to make no communication whatever as to the nature of the poison until you have completed your analysis. The reason for this precaution is, that the first steps of an analysis often lead to an inference not confirmed by the subsequent steps. The truth is, it is not by one character, but by many, that the nature of the poison is determined, and therefore you should never give an answer till the whole of the analysis is complete. Suppose you do not attend to this rule, and a person should be brought forward to say that the witness told him at such and such a time the matter contained arsenic, when, in point of fact, it was corrosive sublimate, or some other irritant. You would put it into the power of the prisoner's counsel to say that the witness was incompetent, for he thought at one time it was one poison, and at another time another. This kind of mistake not only throws doubt upon the case, but it seriously affects the reputation of the witness. It is advisable to take notes or make memoranda of the results of your observations, not only in the application of the chemical tests, but the symptoms and post mortem appearances. With regard to notes, you will find them most useful in many cases on which you may be called to give evidence. Many trials do not take place for five or seven months after the death of the party supposed to be killed, and very few memories can extend over the length of time that is often insisted on in the evidence. At coroners' inquests notes are used; a man may read his notes there, and no particular inquiry is made. In courts of law and criminal courts there is a difference with regard to notes; a medical witness is not allowed to use them except under particular circumstances; first of all they must be original; he is not allowed to refer to notes that have been made by another; they should be made by the witness himself, though that is not absolutely necessary if they are made under his superintendence; he may dictate them to another, or make them himself. Even a copy of your own notes is not allowed to be received in a court of law, unless that copy be made immediately, or as soon as possible after the occurrence. Suppose you delay a week or a month, because you know the trial will not come on for five or six months; at the end of this time a copy of your notes will not be received. Then, in what way will you be permitted to use your notes? If a witness is asked a question, and he refers to his notes, the prisoner's counsel will put this question—For what purpose are you looking at them? is it to refresh your memory, or to recal your mind entirely to the subject written on that paper? Many medical witnesses are unaware of the object of a question of this kind; and if a witness happened to say that he had forgotten the subject, and was referring to his notes in order to recal to his mind the subject, he would not be allowed to make use of his notes. If his answer be, that he has a general recollection of the main points, and only wants to refresh his memory, then the Court will allow him to refer to them. Notes are only allowed to be used in evidence to assist recollection, not to convey information. If the witness find any thing in his notes, which is lost to his memory until he sees it there, it is not receivable in evidence; he is not allowed to refer to it. Such is the law, and so must it be observed. It is easy for a man, before going up as a witness, to read over his notes; so that it must be pure carelessness where notes are used to correct a culpable forgetfulness. There was a case tried at Norwich some years ago, in which the gentleman who had analyzed the substance suspected detected arsenic. He was not used to analysis, and he made very copious notes, and on the trial he referred to his notes; when the counsel asked him whether he used the notes to refresh his memory, or whether he had forgotten the subject, and was about to speak only from what was written on the paper? He was not aware of the effect of the answer he was about to give, and he said that his memory was bad, that some time had elapsed, and he had entirely forgotten the subject. The judge ruled that the evidence of this witness could not be received, so far as it depended on the notes. This, then, is a point well worthy of your attention.

In the next lecture I shall pass on to the consideration of the poisons individually, first taking the class of irritants.

New Books.

Insolvency Practice under the Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and the amended Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, &c. By W. H. Sadgrove, Solicitor. London, 1844. Hodson.

This is another of the many editions of the new statute. It contains, first, the statute of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 16; then the statute of the last session. This is followed by some very sensible and practical remarks upon its provisions, with directions for proceedings under it. An appendix gives a list of the officers, &c. of the Bankruptcy Courts; the orders and tables of fees, and the Debtors and Creditors Act. An index completes the work, which appears to have been got up with considerable care, and with evident knowledge of the subject.

The Safety of Railway Travelling.—At a recent inquest, Mr. Wakley took occasion to observe, that he had held the office of coroner for five years and a half, and had the two great termini, and upwards of thirty miles of the most extensive railways in the kingdom in his district, and yet, notwithstanding the millions of persons that must have travelled up and down those lines during the period he had mentioned, he had never held a single inquest on a railway passenger.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

The following scale of charges, reduced more than one-third, has been adopted for Advertisements of Estates for Sale, &c., exceeding 10 lines in length:

For the first 70 words . . . . . 5s.
For every succeeding 30 words . 1s.

THE MONEY MARKET.

Friday.—This is the pay-day in the Consol market. The losses have been liquidated without any apparent difficulty. Consols for money have receded from 100⅜ to 100¼, and for the Account to 100⅜. We hear that capital is becoming more and more in request for mercantile purposes. It could not be better employed, as speculation in produce of all kinds is at present carried on to a very small amount. The great bulk of the public and private sales for some time past have been for bonâ fide consumption. The rate of interest has advanced a shade. The New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents. have been firm at 102⅛. Exchequer Bills are quoted at 73 to 75 premium. Bank Stock at 206, and India Stock at 95 premium. The commissioners took 10,000*l*. Consols at 100⅜ to-day.

Spanish Bonds have been pretty steady to-day at 35¼ ⅜ for the Three per Cents. and 24⅛ ¼ for the Consols. The decree for funding the floating debt of Spain ought to have had a contrary effect, for most unquestionably the Spanish Minister of Finance, whoever he may be, will meet the demands of the home creditors ere the demands of foreigners will be thought of. Dutch Stock has advanced; Portuguese, Austrian, and Russian Bonds have been in request; Mexican Five per Cents. are at 34½; Brazilian Five per Cents. remain at 85½.

A slight improvement is noticed in some of the Railway Shares this morning. The Great Western Fifths have realized 14¼ to ½ prem.; the Manchester and Leeds, 81 to 83 prem.; the Manchester and Birmingham, 12 prem.; the Boulogne and Amiens, 3 prem.; and the Paris and Orleans, 20 prem. The Australasian Bank Shares are at 8 prem.

The Journal des Debats warns the public that the speculations entered into in consequence of the late adjudications of railroads are illegal, the companies not having the faculty to issue shares, or promises of shares, until the usual formalities of their contracts were concluded, which would require a delay of several weeks. Until then all negotiation is by law null.

Mr. H. G. Surtees has become the purchaser of the estates and manor of Dinsdale, with the Hotel and Spa, from the trustees of the Earl of Durham, for the sum of 40,000*l*. Mr. Surtees is a relative of the Earl of Eldon, and grandson of the late Mr. W. Surtees, receiver-general for this county. We find in Twiss's Life of Lord Chancellor Eldon, that it was from this estate on the banks of the Tees that this ancient family derived their name, sur Tees, in the time of the Norman conquest.—Durham Advertiser.

NECROLOGY.

DEATH OF THE VICE-CHANCELLOR OF LANCASTER.

On Sunday, the 29th ult. at his house, in Earl's-terrace, Kensington, Francis Ludlow Holt, esq. Q.C. and Vice-Chancellor of Lancashire. He was in every respect one of the most amiable men of his age. In private life he lived by one rule, that of the Christian gospel. He was warmly and sincerely pious, and most carefully obedient to the revealed laws of God, in the uniform and daily practice of exact truth, scrupulous justice, and abounding charity. In all the relations of domestic life his conduct was governed by the same unerring rule—an affectionate relative, a steady friend, and most liberal contributor to all who were in need, sickness, or any other adversity. In society he was eminently distinguished by his sound judgment, his finished taste, and his overflowing courtesy and good humour, abounding himself in the milk of human kindness, and diffusing his own benevolence and cheerfulness over all around him. He died in the calm serenity of a Christian.

The Marquis of Donegal died on Saturday, at Ormeau, in Ireland. George Augustus Chichester was born in August, 1769; and succeeded, in 1799, to the titles of Marquis of Donegal, Earl of Donegal and of Belfast, Viscount Chichester, Baron Belfast, in the peerage of Ireland, and Baron Fisherwick in the peerage of England. In 1795 he married Anna, daughter of Sir Edward May; by whom he had issue seven sons. The late marquis was a Conservative in politics, and was esteemed as a resident landlord and a kind-hearted man. The titles descend to his eldest son, George Hamilton Chichester, Earl of Belfast, a Whig, who married, in December, 1822, Lady Harriet Anne Butler, eldest daughter of the Earl of Glengall, by whom he has issue.

COCKRAN v. COCKRAN.

Will—Specific bequest.

A testator by his will gave all the property he then possessed in the public funds. Held, that this bequest was specific, and only included such property as the testator was possessed of at the date of his will.

The testator, W. Cockran, by his will bequeathed in behalf of his wife as follows: "The yearly interest of all the property that I now possess in the public funds for her use during her natural life." Upon these words a question arose whether they constituted a specific bequest so as to include such funds only as were standing in the testator's name, or belonged to him at the date of the will, or whether the bequest was general, and embraced all that he was possessed of at the time of his decease.

Stuart and Hardy appeared for the next of kin, and contended that the legacy was specific, including only the funds which belonged to the testator at the date of his will. (Hayes v. Hayes, 1 K. 97.)

Bethel and Lonsdale, on behalf of the widow, argued that the clause "all the property that I possess in the public funds" was intended to include all the property in the public funds that the testator might be possessed of at the time of his decease.

Cases cited: Wilde v. Holtzmeyer (5 Ves. 811); Oakes v. Strachey (7 Jur. 433).

Stuart, in reply.

His Honour the Vice-Chancellor thought that the words "all the property that I possess in the public funds" meant "all I now possess," and that therefore the widow was only entitled as tenant for life to all the property in the funds of which the testator was possessed or entitled to at the date of his will.

Saturday, July 27.

NORCOTT v. GORDON.

Customary heir—Dower—Devise—Election.

A testator bequeathed to his wife an annuity, which he directed should be accepted by her "in lieu and satisfaction of all dower and thirds, or other claims and demands which she could or might otherwise have or be entitled to, out of, upon, or against my estate." The testator at the time of executing his will and of his decease, was seized of certain freehold estates in fee and divers copyhold estates, held of the manor of Taunton Deane, and considerable personal property. According to the custom of this manor, a tenant's widow is his next heir. Held, that the widow was not bound to elect between her annuity and the copyhold estates, but that she took the latter as the customary heir of her husband.

The testator, H. Gordon, by his will, executed in 1829, amongst other bequests, gave and bequeathed to his wife the sum of 1,000*l.* sterling, to be paid to her within one month after his decease; and he further bequeathed to her during her natural life a clear annuity, or yearly sum, of 1,000*l.* to be paid quarterly, and made his personal estate liable to the payment of the said annuity. The testator then declared that the provision thereby made for his said wife was to be accepted by her "in lieu and satisfaction of all dower and thirds, or other claims and demands, which she could or might otherwise have, or be entitled to, out of, upon, or against his, the said testator's estate." And the testator directed that his said wife, when thereunto required by the acting executors of that his will, should, at the costs and charges of his estate, execute a good and sufficient release of such her rights, claims, and demands, or else the provisions thereby made for his said wife should be null and void. The testator appointed his wife, now Sarah Norcott, the plaintiff in this suit, and William Gordon and John Rich, two defendants hereto, and Charles Winter and Henry Winter, executrix and executors of his will. The testator died in the month of September 1839, without leaving any issue, but leaving the plaintiff, his widow, him surviving, and leaving also his brother, the defendant, W. Gordon, and the other defendants, the children of a brother deceased, his next of kin, him surviving. The testator was, at the time of his decease, seized in fee simple of several freehold estates not devised by his will, out of which, but for the provisions in his will, his widow, the plaintiff, would have been entitled to dower. The testator was also seized for an estate to him and his heirs, of and in several copyhold estates, parcel of the manor of Taunton Deane, in the county of Somerset. The testator died also intestate as to these estates. The question to be decided, therefore, was, whether his widow was bound to elect whether she would take these copyhold estates or the annuity given to her by the will, and so release her right to these copyhold premises. Upon the original hearing, it was, among other things, referred to the Master to inquire and state whether the testator died seized of any, and what, freehold, copyhold, or customary estates, out of which the plaintiff Sarah, then the wife of James Norcott, the widow of the testator, would be entitled to dower, freebench, or any, and what, beneficial interest, but for the provision made for her by the said testator's will, with liberty to state special circumstances. The Master, by his report, stated that he found the testator died seized of certain lands, tenements, and hereditaments, parcel of the manor of Taunton Deane, and he found amongst the customs of the said manor the following: "If any tenant die seized of any customary lands or tenements of inheritance within the said manor, and having a wife at the time of his death, then his wife ought, and hath used, time out of mind, to inherit the same lands, as next heir unto her husband, by the custom of the said manor, and be admitted tenant thereto, to hold the same to her and her heirs for ever, according to the custom of the said manor, and in as ample a manner as any other customary tenant there holds his lands, under the rents, fines, heriots, customs, duties, suits, and services, for the same due and accustomed." The cause was now set down upon further directions, and the principal question now was whether, such a custom having been found to exist, a case of election had been raised.

Bethel and Bagshaw appeared for the plaintiffs, and contended that the restrictive part of the will did not relate to the widow in her character of customary heir, but only as to heir claim of dower and thirds; and that, therefore, where she claims as heir, and not as widow, the words of the will had no relation thereto.

Stuart and Montagu, on the other side, urged the fallacy of calling the widow of the testator his heir-at-law; for whatever interest she was entitled to out of the copyhold estates, she took it as freebench. The testator's words are—"In lieu and satisfaction of all dower and thirds, or other claims and demands, which she could or might otherwise have or be entitled to, out of, upon, or against my estate." Let the Court compare this clause of the will with the claim the custom of the manor. Supposing, therefore, the claim which the plaintiff now makes be not regarded as dower or freebench, it must be considered as falling under the general expression, "or all other claims and demands which she could or might otherwise have or be entitled to out of my estate"—words of themselves sufficiently valid to exclude her fictitious claim as customary heir.

Bethel, in reply.—There can be no case of election here, as the testator has made no devise of his estate. There is but one heir, and the custom with sufficient clearness declares the wife of a deceased copyholder to be his next heir. If, therefore, the plaintiff, as widow of the testator, does not take, what other description of person can? The widow, in this case, stands precisely in the same position to her deceased husband as, in ordinary cases, the eldest son stands to his father, and the inheritance must go according to the custom. If I give my heir-at-law a sum of money in lieu of the inheritance, and make no devise of the inheritance, it descends, according to the rule of law, as appears in the case of Pickering v. Lord Stamford (3 Ves. 332 and 492).

The Vice-Chancellor.—I am of opinion that there is here no case raised for election; but that the widow takes the copyhold estates as the customary heir of her husband the testator. As to the annuity given by the will to the widow in lieu of dower and thirds, she is in that respect entitled to priority over the other pecuniary legacies.

REGISTRATION COURTS.

BOROUGH OF FINSBURY.*

(Before C. J. Moylan, Esq. R. B.)

The Overseers of St. Luke.

Under what circumstances overseers will be fined for improperly omitting the names of claimants from the list.

In this case the following judgment was delivered. It recites the facts:—In this case I am required to impose a fine upon the overseers for a wilful neglect of their duty. It appears that James Buckle has been for many years a resident in the parish, occupying a 10*l.* house; and that he has been, ever since the passing of the Reform Act, upon the register of voters for the borough of Finsbury; and that he has been duly assessed; that all his rates and taxes have been duly paid; but that notwithstanding this strict compliance with all the requirements of the Act of Parliament, his name was omitted from the list of voters published by them on or before the 1st day of August in this year, in accordance with the 13th section of the Registration Act. The course which Buckle himself should have pursued, when he perceived this omission, was to have given, before the 25th of August, a notice of claim to the overseers, according to the direction of the 15th section of the same Act. Having neglected to do this, I regret that it is not in my power to remedy the evil. If he had given such a claim, there is no doubt but that his name would now be inserted in the register, for it is admitted by the overseers that his qualification is, in every respect, perfect. I have asked the overseers for an explanation or excuse for their conduct, and I am told that as the collectors did not inform them that Mr. Buckle had paid all his rates and taxes, they presumed that they still remained unpaid, and therefore designedly omitted his name. Any person who could for one moment imagine that there was any reason in such an excuse, either must have never read the Act which defines his duties, or have grossly misunderstood the 12th section of the Act. That section directs the collectors to make out a list of defaulters, and deliver it before the 22nd of July in each year, to the overseers, and the overseers are, moreover, bound by the same clause to keep this list for public inspection during the 14 days after the publication of their list of voters. The overseers and collectors, therefore, seem to have neglected their duty in this particular. The 51st section of the Registration Act vests in the Court the power of imposing a fine on the overseers in any case in which they shall wilfully and without reasonable cause, omit the name of any person duly qualified to be inserted in the list. The overseers might, under this clause, be held liable to a fine of 5*l.* for every single offence, but not less than 20*s.* However, I feel myself at liberty to consider these several omissions (for Buckle's case is not a solitary one) as a general breach of duty by the overseers in the execution of this Act. The word wilful does not all imply any corrupt motive, or any thing like an intention to do an individual wrong. Ignorance, or indifference, or inattention may cause people as much trouble as if the design were malicious, and may as effectually deprive people, as unfortunately happens in this case, of their right to the franchise. I shall impose a fine of 60s. upon the overseers of the parish of St. Luke's.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

OCTOBER SESSION.

Monday, Oct. 21.

REG. v. GEO. HENRY and GEO. WARD.

Indictment for obtaining money under false pretences, with counts for a conspiracy—Variance between the pretences as laid in the indictment and those proved—Sufficiency of the pretences.—In a count for a conspiracy, the overt act set out must be averred to be within the object of the conspiracy as stated in the indictment.

The prisoners were indicted for that they, on, &c. at, &c. unlawfully did falsely pretend to Will. Angerstein, that two horses and one mare, which they, the defendants, offered for sale to the said Will. Angerstein, had belonged to a family named Lloyd. That Mr. Lloyd was deceased, and that the said G. H. Ward had the said horses and mare intrusted to him to sell on commission. That the said family lived at Stratford-on Avon. That the name of the said G. Ward was Glass, and that he had been a servant in the said family; and that the said horses and mare were each of them sound, quiet to ride, and quiet in double or in single harness; and that if the said horses and mare were not approved of at the end of seven days from the said time, the money to be paid for them should be refunded. By means of which said false pretences they did obtain of and from the said W. Angerstein a certain valuable security, to wit, an order for the payment of 115*l.* 10s. and a piece of paper value one farthing, of the said W. Angerstein, with intent to cheat and defraud him of the same.

The second count was the same, except that the pretence as to the name of one of the prisoners being Glass, and that the horses, &c. were warranted quiet to ride, and quiet in double or in single harness, were omitted.

Thirdly. That defendants having in their custody and possession divers, to wit, two horses and one mare, did unlawfully and fraudulently conspire by divers false pretences and artful means and devices to obtain and acquire to themselves divers large sums of money from such person as might be desirous of purchasing the said last-mentioned horses and mare, and to cheat and defraud such persons of said sums of money. And that defendants, in pursuance of said conspiracy, did falsely pretend that the said last mentioned horses and mare had belonged, &c.—laying the pretences as in the first count. And that the defendants, in pursuance of the said conspiracy, did obtain of and from the said W. Angerstein a certain order for the payment of 115*l.* 10s.

There were two other counts charging a conspiracy generally to defraud.

The prosecutor, in consequence of an advertisement appearing in the public papers, had visited the stables where the horses were kept, and there saw the prisoners, who represented to him that they had been sent up from the country to be sold on commission; that they had belonged to a highly respectable family, residing two miles from Stratford-on-Avon, and that, in consequence of the death of the elder member of the family, they had given up keeping horses, and had ponies in their stead. The horses were warranted sound, quiet to ride or drive in single or double harness, and if not approved of within seven days, the money was to be returned. The prisoner represented his name to be Glass, but not before the price for the horses was paid.

Evidence was given negativing the truth of the various pretences, and that the horses were nearly valueless.

Bodkin and Wilkins, for the defence, contended that the evidence did not support the indictment. First, with regard to the counts for obtaining money under false pretences, of course no pretence was of any avail except it was made before the thing obtained was parted with, and although all those alleged need not be proved, still those relied on must have been such that the prosecutor parted with his money on their representation. Now, as to the pretence that Mr. Lloyd was deceased, it was not supported by proof that the elder member of the family was so. The utmost strictness is necessary in proving the statements alleged in the indictment to have been made; but here was a clear and palpable variance. The same remark would apply to the pretence that the family lived at Stratford on-Avon. The evidence was, that the prisoners had represented them to live two miles from that place. That the name of one of the prisoners was Glass, did not appear to have been stated until after the transaction was closed, and that allegation must, therefore, be dismissed. There was then the representation that the horses were sound, quiet, &c.; but it had been held, in numberless parallel cases, that an assertion of this kind, although known by the party making it to be false, did not render him amenable to the criminal law. He might be sued for a breach of warranty, it was admitted; but if a party were liable to be tried for declaring to a customer that goods were better than he in fact knew them to be, there were few tradesmen who might not be called upon to take their station in the dock. Lastly, there was the stipulation that if the horses were not approved, the money would be refunded on their being returned. This, however, was a pretence that something was to be done in future, and therefore clearly insufficient, even although the prisoners at the time had no intention of adhering to their contract.

Clarkson and Ballantine, for the prosecution, contended, that as to the first part of the argument, the variances were immaterial; that at all events the pretence of soundness was fully proved as laid, and there was no ground for saying that, if made with a full knowledge of its falsity, it was not sufficient to support the indictment. It was not a mere exaggeration, having some foundation in truth. It was a wilful statement of that which had no existence. It was like the case (not reported) where a chain was represented to be gold when the party knew it to be merely plated, and the charge of obtaining money under false pretences was supported. The case of R. v. Pywell (1 Star. 102) might be in favour of the prisoner, but it can no longer be considered law, since R. v. Kenrick (12 L. J. Rep. New Series, Mag. Cas. p. 135).

The RECORDER.—I am clearly of opinion that the alleged variance are material. The utmost precision is required in proving the pretences as laid; and I think, therefore, this objection must prevail. As to the pretence of soundness, I am by no means prepared to say, that if a person warrants a horse to have all the excellences that these were alleged to possess, and he knew at the time that it was as utterly worthless as these have turned out to be, that he would not be indictable; but I am not called upon to decide this question; since, if you relied on this representation, you were bound to shew that the prosecutor would have parted with his money on it alone: but no question of the kind has been put to him, and I must, therefore, take it that he was actuated by the pretences generally, and not by any individual portion of them. I think, therefore, that the first two counts must fail.

Bodkin.—Then, my, lord, I contend that the third count is also defective. It is alleged in the first part of the count that the prisoners conspired to defraud such persons as might be desirous of purchasing the horses, &c.; but when the overt act is set out, it is not alleged that the prosecutor was one of such persons. It is not, therefore, shewn that he was within the object for which the conspiracy was entered into. There is no connection shewn between the different portions of the count.

The RECORDER.—It states that the prisoners agreed together to angle for all whom they could catch.

Bodkin. Yes; but it does not go on to aver that the prosecutor was entitled to bite.

The RECORDER.—I see the force of your objection, and shall direct the jury to place the third count also out of their consideration, and merely consider the evidence with reference to the two last.

The case went to the jury on the 4th and 5th counts for conspiracy generally, and the prisoners were convicted.

REG. v. ROSS TUCHET.

To prove a plea of insanity, evidence that the grandfather of the person had been insane may be adduced, after it has been proved by medical testimony that such a disease is often hereditary in a family.

The prisoner was indicted for shooting, with intent to kill.

The defence relied on was the prisoner's insanity at the time he committed the act in question.

Charnock was for the prosecution.

Clarkson and Bodkin, for the defence.

A question was put on behalf of the prisoner to his brother, Lord Audley, as to whether their maternal grandfather, Sir Ross Donelly, had not been confined in a lunatic asylum.

Charnock objected to the question. It could have no relation to the issue which the jury had to try, whether, perhaps fifty years ago, another person had or had not been insane. If this were admitted, it would be impossible to say where the practice should stop. If the insanity of the grandfather can be shewn as evidence, that of a much more remote ancestor would be equally admissible.

Bodkin.—I have never known a case in which this objection has been raised. Such evidence was recived in Oxford's case, and in many others within my experience. We are not only prepared to shew the hereditary taint in the family, but that this is a mode in which it usually exhibits itself.

MAULE, J.—I know that these questions are generally admitted. It is a matter of fact, and not a matter of law, that insanity is often hereditary in a family; but I think you should prove that, in the first instance, by the testimony of medical men, and then your question will be legitimate.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

WE have nothing to report in the matter of Legislation, save a very general opinion that the Settlement Bill will not become law, at least without very material alterations.

NEW STATUTES.

Of the Session 8 Victoria.

[In this record of actual Legislation, we adopt the plan of giving the titles alone of the statutes of no general or professional interest; and analyses of the more important changes in the law, printing at length such statutes or parts of statutes only as are of particular interest to our readers.]

CAP. CII.

An Act to repeal certain Penal Enactments made against her Majesty's Roman Catholic Subjects. (August 9, 1844.)

It is unnecessary to reprint it here, as all have been long obsolete.

CAP. CIII.

An Act to amend the Law for the Trial of controverted Elections of Members to serve in Parliament. (August 9, 1844.)

After reciting that it is expedient to amend the law for the trial of controverted elections of members to serve in Parliament, the first sections repeals 9 Geo. 4, c. 22, and part of 42 Geo. 3, c. 106, and 47 Geo. 3, c. 11. We give the remainder of the statute verbatim:—

2. What shall be deemed election petitions.—And be it enacted, That every petition which shall be presented to the House of Commons within such time as shall be from time to time limited by the House, complaining of an undue election or return of a member or members to serve in Parliament, or complaining that no return has been made to any writ issued or the election of any member or members to serve in Parliament on or before the day on which such writ is made returnable, or if such writ be issued during any session or prorogation of Parliament, that no return has been made to the same within fifty-two days after the day on which such writ bears date, or that any return is not according to the requisition of the writ, or complaining of the special matters contained in any such return, shall be deemed an election petition; but no election petition shall be received by the House unless at the time it is presented it shall be subscribed by some person claiming therein to have had a right to vote at the election to which the same shall relate, or to have had a right to be returned or elected thereat, or alleging himself to have been a candidate at the election.

3. Recognizances to be entered into by petitioners.—And be it enacted, That before any election petition shall be presented to the House the person or persons subscribing the same, or some one or more of them, shall personally enter into a recognizance to our sovereign lady the Queen, according to the form given in the schedule (A) to this Act annexed, for the sum of one thousand pounds, with one, two, three, or four sufficient sureties, either in the same recognizance or in separate recognizances, for the additional sum of one thousand pounds, in a sum or sums of not less than two hundred and fifty pounds each, for the payment of all costs and expenses which any committee of the House selected to try such petition in the manner hereinafter provided shall adjudge to be payable by the person or persons subscribing the said petition, and also for the payment of all costs and expenses which shall become due from the person or persons subscribing such petition to any witness summoned in his or their behalf, or to any party who shall appear in opposition to such petition, in case such petition shall be withdrawn, as hereinafter allowed.

4. Sureties to make affidavits of sufficiency, and to be described.—And be it enacted, That every person who shall enter into any such recognizance as surety for any other person shall testify upon oath in writing, to be sworn at the time of entering into the said recognizance, and before the same person by whom his recognizance shall be taken, that he is seised or possessed of real or personal estate (or both), above what will satisfy his debts, of the clear value of the sum for which he shall be bound by his said recognizance, and every such affidavit shall be annexed to the recognizance; and that in every such recognizance shall be mentioned the name and usual place of residence of the persons proposed to become sureties as aforesaid, with such other description of the proposed sureties as may be sufficient to identify them easily.

5. Examiner of recognizances to be appointed.—And be it enacted, That the Speaker of the House of Commons shall appoint a fit person to be examiner of recognizances; and every person so appointed shall hold his office during the pleasure of the Speaker, and shall execute the duties of his office conformably to such directions as he may from time to time receive from the Speaker.

6. Provision for temporary disability of examiner.—And be it enacted, That in case of the illness, temporary disability, or unavoidable absence of the examiner of recognizances, the Speaker may appoint a fit person to perform the duties of examiner of recognizances during such illness, disability, or absence; and throughout this Act the expression "Examiner of Recognizances" shall be deemed to include and apply to the person so appointed and for the time being performing such duties.

7. How recognizances are to be entered into.—And be it enacted, That every recognizance hereinbefore required shall be entered into, and every affidavit hereinbefore required shall be sworn, before the examiner of recognizances or one of her Majesty's justices of the peace; and the said examiner, and also every justice of the peace, is hereby empowered to take the same; and every such recognizance and affidavit which shall be taken before a justice, being duly certified under the hand of the justice before whom they shall have been taken, shall be delivered to the examiner of recognizances.

8. Option of paying money into the bank instead of finding security. Declaration of trust.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for any person by whom the said petition shall be signed, instead of entering into a recognizance for the full amount of the sums hereinbefore required, to pay into the Bank of England, on the account of the examiner of recognizances as trustee for the like purposes for which the recognizance is hereinbefore required, any amount of money which he shall think fit, in a sum or sums not less than two hundred and fifty pounds each; and in such case the person by whom the petition shall be signed shall still be required to enter into his personal recognizance for the sum of one thousand pounds, but shall be required to find a surety or sureties as aforesaid for so much only of the additional sum of one thousand pounds as the sum paid into the bank shall fall short of the sum of one thousand pounds; and no money shall be deemed for the purposes of this Act to be paid into the Bank of England until a bank receipt for the same shall be procured and delivered to the examiner of recognizances.

9. Where money has been paid into the Bank, the examiner of recognizances to order payment of expenses and transfer the residue to the account of the party.—And be it enacted, That in every case in which payment of any money as aforesaid shall have been made into the Bank of England the examiner of recognizances shall be bound, in the first place, and in such order of payment as he in his discretion shall think fit, to satisfy out of the said money all the costs and expenses for securing payment of which such investment was made, or so much thereof as can be thereby satisfied, and thereafter to transfer the residue (if any), wholly discharged of the said trust, to the account of the party by whom the same shall have been paid in.

10. No petition to be received unless indorsed by the examiner of recognizances.—And be it enacted, That no election petition shall be received unless, at the time it is presented to the House, it shall be indorsed by a certificate under the hand of the examiner of recognizances, that the recognizance hereinbefore required has been entered into and received by him, with the affidavits thereunto annexed; and, if the recognizance shall not have been taken for the whole amount, that the necessary amount of money has been paid into the Bank of England as hereinbefore required.

11. Names of sureties to be kept in the office of the examiner of recognizances, and to be open to inspection.—And be it enacted, That on or before the day when any such petition shall be presented to the House the names and usual places of residence of the sureties, when there are sureties, shall be entered in a book to be kept by the examiner of recognizances in his office; and the said book, and also the recognizance and affidavits and bank receipt for any money paid into the Bank of England, if any, shall be open to the inspection of all parties concerned.

12. Sureties may be objected to.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for any sitting member petitioned against, or for any electors petitioning and admitted parties to defend the election or return, to object to the sureties, or any of them, who shall have entered into such recognizance, on the ground of insufficiency, or that a surety is dead, or that he cannot be found or ascertained from the want of a sufficient description in the recognizance, or that a person named in the recognizance has not acknowledged the same; provided that the ground of objection shall be stated in writing under the hand of the objecting party, or his or their agent, and shall be delivered to the examiner of recognizances within ten days, or not later than twelve of the clock at noon of the eleventh day, after the presentation of the petition, if the surety objected to reside in England, or within fourteen days, or not later than twelve of the clock at noon of the fifteenth day, after the presentation of the petition, if the surety objected to reside in Scotland or Ireland: provided also, that if either such eleventh or such fifteenth day shall happen to be a Sunday, Good Friday, or Christmas Day, it shall be sufficient if such notice of objection be delivered to the examiner of recognizances not later than twelve of the clock at noon of the following day.

13. Notice of objections to be published in the office of the examiner, and copies may be taken.—And be it enacted, That as soon as any such statement of objection shall be received by the examiner of recognizances he shall put up an acknowledgment thereof in some conspicuous part of his office, and shall appoint a day for hearing such objections not less than three and not more than five days from the day on which he shall have received such statement; and the petitioner or petitioners, and his or their agent, shall be allowed to examine and take copies of every such objection.

14. Examiner of recognizances to decide on the objections.—And be it enacted, That at the time appointed the examiner of recognizances shall inquire into the alleged insufficiency of the surety or sureties objected to on the grounds stated in the notice of objection, but not on any other ground; and for the purpose of such inquiry the examiner of recognizances is hereby authorized to examine upon oath any persons who may be tendered by either party for examination by him, and also to receive in evidence any affidavit relating to the matter in dispute before him, which shall be sworn before him, or before any Master of the High Court of Chancery, or justice of the peace, each of whom is hereby authorized to take and certify such affidavit; and the examiner of recognizances shall have power, if he shall think fit, to adjourn the said inquiry from time to time until he shall decide on the validity of such objection, and, if he shall think fit, to award costs to be paid by either party to the other, which costs shall be taxed and recovered as hereinafter provided for the costs and expenses of prosecuting or opposing election petitions; and the decision of the examiner of recognizances shall be final and conclusive against all parties.

15. In case of death of a surety, the money may be paid into the bank.—And be it enacted, That if any surety shall die, and his death shall be stated as a ground of objection before the end of the time allowed for objecting to the sureties, it shall be lawful for the petitioner to pay into the Bank of England, on the account of the examiner of recognizances, the sum for which the deceased surety was bound; and upon the delivery of a Bank receipt for such sum to the examiner of recognizances, within three days after the day on which the statement of such objection shall have been delivered to the examiner of recognizances, the sureties shall be deemed unobjectionable if no ground of objection shall be stated to any other of the sureties within the time before mentioned for stating objections to sureties.

16. Examiner of recognizances to report whether or not sureties are objectionable.—And be it enacted, That in case the examiner of recognizances shall have received any statement of objection to the sureties or any of them to any such election petition, and shall have decided that such sureties or any of them are objectionable, he shall forthwith report to the Speaker that such sureties are objectionable; but if he shall have decided that such sureties are unobjectionable, or in case he shall not have received any such statement of objection, then as soon as the time hereinbefore allowed for stating any such objection shall have elapsed after the presentation of the petition (or as soon thereafter as he shall have decided upon the statement of objection), the examiner of recognizances shall report to the Speaker that the sureties to such petition are unobjectionable; and he shall make out a list of all election petitions on which he shall have reported to the Speaker that the sureties are unobjectionable, in which list the petitions shall be arranged in the order in which they shall be so reported upon; and a copy of such list shall be kept in the office of the examiner of recognizances, and shall be open to the inspection of all parties concerned.

17. How petitions may be withdrawn.—And be it enacted, That it shall be competent to the petitioner or petitioners at any time after the presentation of the petition to withdraw the same, upon giving notice in writing under his hand or their hands, or under the hand of his or their agent, to the Speaker, and also to the sitting member or his agent, and also to any party who may have been admitted to oppose the prayer of such petition, that it is not intended to proceed with the petition; and in such case the petitioner or petitioners shall be liable to the payment of such costs and expenses as may have been incurred by the sitting member, and also by any party who may have been admitted to oppose the prayer of such petition, to be taxed as hereinafter provided.

18. Proceedings when the seat becomes vacant, or the sitting member declines to defend his return.—And be it enacted, That if at any time before the appointment of a select committee to try any such petition as hereinafter provided the Speaker of the House of Commons shall be informed, by a certificate in writing subscribed by two of the members of the said House, of the death of any sitting member whose election or return is complained of in such petition, or of the death of any member returned upon a double return, whose election or return is complained of in such petition, or that a writ of summons has been issued under the great seal of Great Britain to summon any such member to Parliament as a peer of Great Britain, or if the House of Commons shall have resolved that the seat of any such member is by law become vacant, or if the House of Commons shall be informed, by a declaration in writing subscribed by any such member, and delivered to the Speaker within fourteen days after the day on which any such petition shall have been presented, that it is not the intention of such member to defend his election or return, in every such case notice thereof shall immediately be sent by the Speaker to the General Committee of Elections, and to the members of the chairmen's panel hereinafter mentioned, and also to the sheriff or other returning officer for the county, city, borough, district, or burghs, port or place, to which such petition shall relate; and such sheriff or other returning officer shall cause a true copy of such notice to be affixed on or near the door of the county hall or town hall, or of the parish church nearest to the place where such election has usually been held; and such notice shall also be inserted, by order of the Speaker, in one of the next two London Gazettes, and shall be communicated by him to the House.

19. Voters may become a party to oppose the petition.—And be it enacted, That at any time within fourteen days after the day on which any election petition shall have been presented, or within twenty-one days after the day on which any notice shall have been inserted in the Gazette, to the effect that the seat is vacant, or that the member returned will not defend his election or return, or if either of the said periods shall expire during a prorogation of Parliament, or during an adjournment of the House of Commons for the Easter or Christmas holidays, then on or before the second day on which the House shall meet after such prorogation or adjournment it shall be lawful for any person or persons claiming to have had a right to vote at the election to which the petition shall relate to petition the House of Commons, praying to be admitted as a party or parties to defend such return, or to oppose the prayer of such election petition; and such person or persons shall thereupon be admitted as a party or parties, together with the sitting member, if he be then a party against such petition, or in the room of such member, if he be not then a party against the petition, and shall be considered as such to all intents and purposes whatever, and every such petition shall be referred by the House to the General Committee of Elections hereinafter mentioned.

20. Members having given notice of their intention not to defend shall not be admitted as parties.—And be it enacted, That whenever the member whose election or return is so complained of in such petition shall have given notice as aforesaid of his intention not to defend the same, he shall not be afterwards allowed to appear or act as a party against such petition in any proceedings thereupon, and he shall also be restrained from sitting in the House of Commons, or voting on any question until such petition shall have been decided upon.

21. At the beginning of every session the Speaker to appoint a general committee.—And be it enacted, That in the first session of every Parliament, on the day after the last day allowed by any order or resolution of the House of Commons then in force for questioning the returns of members to serve in Parliament, and in every subsequent session, as soon as conveniently may be after the commencement of the session, the Speaker of the House of Commons shall, by warrant under his hand, appoint six members of the House, who shall be willing to serve, and against whose return no petition shall be then depending, and none of whom shall be a petitioner complaining of any election or return, to be members of a committee, which shall be called "The General Committee of Elections;" and every such warrant shall be laid on the table of the House, and, if not disapproved by the House in the course of the three next days on which the House shall meet for the despatch of business, shall take effect as an appointment of such general committee.

22. If the House disapprove the first appointment, a new appointment to be made.—And be it enacted, That in case the House shall disapprove any such warrant the Speaker shall, on or before the third day on which the House shall meet after such disapproval, lay upon the table of the House a new warrant for the appointment of six members, qualified as aforesaid, and so from time to time until six members shall have been appointed by a warrant which shall not be disapproved by the House as aforesaid.

23. Disapproval may be general or special.—And be it enacted, That the disapproval of the warrant may be either general in respect of the constitution of the whole committee, or special in respect of any member or members named in the warrant.

24. Members not disapproved by the House may be again named in the warrant.—And be it enacted, That the Speaker may, if he shall think fit, but shall not be bound to name in the second or any subsequent warrant all or any of the members named in any former warrant, whose appointment shall not have been specially disapproved by the House as aforesaid.

25. For what time the appointment shall be.—And be it enacted, That after the appointment of the general committee every member appointed shall continue to be a member of the committee until the end of that session of Parliament, or until he shall cease to be a member of the House of Commons, or until he shall resign his appointment, or until the general committee shall report that he is disabled by continued illness from attending the committee, or until the committee shall be dissolved as hereinafter provided.

26. Cases of vacancy to be made known to the House, and proceedings suspended.—And be it enacted, That in every case of vacancy in the General Committee of Elections, the Speaker, on the first day on which the House shall meet after such vacancy shall be known by him, shall make known the vacancy to the House, and thereupon all proceedings of the general committee shall be suspended until the vacancy shall be supplied as hereinafter provided.

27. Cases in which the general committee shall be dissolved.—And be it enacted, That in case the General Committee of Elections shall at any time report to the House of Commons that, by reason of the continued absence of more than two of its members, or by reason of irreconcilable disagreement of opinion, the said committee is unable to proceed in the discharge of its duties, or in case the House of Commons shall resolve that the General Committee of Elections be dissolved, the general committee shall be thereby forthwith dissolved.

28. How vacancies shall be supplied, and re-appointments made.—And be it enacted, That every appointment to supply a vacancy in the general committee, and every re-appointment of the general committee after the dissolution thereof, shall be made by the Speaker, by warrant under his hand, and laid upon the table of the House, on or before the third day on which the House shall meet after the dissolution of the committee, or notification of the vacancy (as the case may be); and the warrant shall be subject to the disapproval of the House, in the like manner as is hereinbefore provided in the case of the first warrant for the appointment of the general committee, and upon any re-appointment of the general committee, the Speaker may re-appoint as many members of the former committee as he shall think fit, who shall then be willing and not disqualified to serve on it, but shall not be bound to re-appoint any of them.

29. Speaker to fix the time and place of first meeting of committee. General committee to be sworn.—And be it enacted, That the Speaker shall appoint the time and place of the first meeting of the General Committee of Elections, and the committee shall meet at the time and place so appointed; but no member appointed or re-appointed to serve on the General Committee of Elections shall act upon such committee until he shall have been sworn at the table of the House, by the clerk, truly and faithfully to perform the duties belonging to a member of the said committee, without fear or favour, to the best of his judgment and ability.

30. Members necessary to enable the committee to act.—And be it enacted, That no business shall be transacted by or before the General Committee of Elections unless at the least four members of the general committee shall be then present together, and no appointment of a select committee by the general committee, to be made as hereinafter provided, shall be of force unless at least four members then present of the said general committee shall agree in the appointment.

31. Committee to regulate their own procedures.—And be it enacted, That, subject to the provisions of this Act, the said committee shall make regulations for the order and manner of conducting business to be transacted by and before them.

32. Clerk to keep minutes of proceedings to be laid before the House.—And be it enacted, That the general committee shall be attended by one of the committee clerks of the House, who shall be selected by the clerk of the House of Commons for the time being, and shall make a minute of all the proceedings of the committee, in such form and manner as shall be from time to time directed by the committee; and a copy of the minutes so kept shall be laid from time to time before the House of Commons.

33. During any suspension, the Speaker may adjourn any business before the general committee.—And be it enacted, That if, at the time of the dissolution or suspension of all the proceedings of the General Committee of Elections, there shall be any business appointed to be transacted by or before such general committee on any certain day, it shall be lawful for the Speaker to adjourn the transaction of such business to such other day as to the Speaker shall seem convenient, and so as often as the case may happen.

34. Members wholly excused from serving.—And be it enacted, That every member who shall be more than sixty years old shall be wholly excused from serving on election committees; provided that on or before the reading over of the names of such excused members as hereinafter mentioned, or upon his afterwards becoming entitled to make such claim, he shall claim to be excused by declaring in his place, or in writing under his hand, to be delivered to the clerk at the table, that he is more than sixty years old; but no member shall be so excused who shall not claim to be excused before he shall be chosen to serve as hereinafter provided.

35. Names of members claiming to be excused to be called over.—And be it enacted, That in the first session of every Parliament, on the next meeting of the House after the last day allowed for questioning returns of members to serve in Parliament, and in every subsequent session on the next meeting of the House after the Speaker shall have laid on the table of the House his warrant for the appointment of the General Committee of Elections, the clerk of the House of Commons shall read over the names of all the members who shall so have claimed to be excused.

36. Members temporarily excused from serving.—And be it enacted, That every member who shall have leave of absence from the House shall be excused from serving on election committees during such leave; and if any member in his place shall offer any other excuse, either at the reading over the said names or at any other time, the substance of the allegations shall be taken down by the clerk, in order that the same may be afterwards entered on the journals, and the opinion of the House shall then be taken thereon; and if the House shall resolve that the said member ought to be excused, he shall be excused from serving on election committees for such time as to the House shall seem fit, but no member shall be so excused who shall not claim to be excused before he shall be chosen to serve as hereinafter provided; and every member who shall have served on one select committee for trying an election petition, and who, within seven days after such committee shall have made its final report to the House, shall notify to the clerk of the general committee his claim to be excused from so serving again, shall be excused during the remainder of the Session, unless the House shall at any time resolve, upon the report of the general committee, that the number of members who have not so served is insufficient; but no member shall be deemed to have served on an election committee who, on account of inability or accident, shall have been excused from attending the same throughout.

37. Members temporarily disqualified from serving.—And be it enacted, That every member whose return shall not have been brought in for a time exceeding that allowed for questioning the returns of members, or who shall be a petitioner complaining of an undue election or return, or against whose return a petition shall be then depending, shall be disqualified to serve on election committees during the continuance of such ground of disqualification; and every member of any select committee appointed to try an election petition shall be disqualified to serve again on an election committee during seven days after the final report of the committee on which he so served.

38. A corrected list, distinguishing the excused or disqualified members, to be printed and distributed with the votes.—And be it enacted, That the clerk of the House of Commons shall make out an alphabetical list of all the members, omitting the names of such members as shall have claimed to be wholly excused from serving on election committees as aforesaid; and the clerk shall also distinguish in such list the name of every member who shall be for a time excused or disqualified, and shall also note in the list every cause of such temporary excuse or disqualification, and the duration thereof; and such list shall be printed and distributed with the votes of the House, and the names of all the members so omitted shall be also printed and distributed with the votes.

39. List may be further corrected during three days.—And be it enacted, That during three days next after the day of the distribution of such corrected list further corrections may be made in such list by leave of the Speaker, if it shall appear that any name has been improperly left in or struck out of such list, or that there is any other error in such list.

40. Selection of members to serve as chairmen of election committees.—And be it enacted, That the list so finally corrected shall be referred to the General Committee of Elections, and the general committee shall thereupon select, in their discretion, six, eight, ten, or twelve members whom they shall think duly qualified, to serve as chairmen of election committees; and the members so selected shall be formed into a separate panel, to be called the Chairmen's Panel, which shall be reported to the House; and while the name of any member shall be upon the chairmen's panel he shall not be liable or qualified to serve on an election committee, otherwise than as chairman; and every member who shall have been placed on the chairmen's panel shall be bound to continue upon it until the end of the session, or until he shall sooner cease to be a member of the House, or until, by leave of the House, he shall be discharged from continuing upon the chairmen's panel; provided always, that every member of the chairmen's panel who shall have served on one or more election committees, and who shall notify to the clerk of the General Committee of Elections his claim to be discharged from continuing on the chairmen's panel, shall be so discharged accordingly; and every such member shall be excused from serving upon any election committee, either as chairman or otherwise, during the remainder of the session; but no member of the chairmen's panel shall be deemed to have served on an election committee who, on account of inability or accident, shall have been excused from attending the same throughout.

41. List to be divided into five panels.—And be it enacted, That after the chairmen's panel shall have been so as aforesaid selected, the general committee shall divide the members then remaining on such list into five panels, in such manner as to them shall seem most convenient, but so nevertheless that each panel may contain as nearly as may be the same number of members, and shall report to the House the division so made by them; and the clerk shall decide by lot at the table the order of the panels as settled by the general committee, and shall distinguish each of them by a number denoting the order in which they shall have been drawn; and the panels shall then be returned to the General Committee of Elections, and shall be the panels from which all members shall be chosen to serve on election committees.

42. General committee to correct the panels from time to time.—And be it enacted, That the general committee of elections shall correct the said panels from time to time by striking out of them the name of every member who shall cease to be a member of the House, or who from time to time shall become entitled and shall claim as aforesaid to be wholly excused from serving on election committees, and by inserting in one of the panels to be chosen by the general committee, at their discretion, the name of every new member of the House who shall not be entitled and claim as aforesaid to be wholly excused, and shall also from time to time distinguish, in the manner aforesaid, in the said panels, the names of those members who shall be for a time excused or disqualified for any of the reasons aforesaid; and the general committee shall, as often as they shall think fit, report to the House the panels as they shall then stand corrected; and as often as the General Committee of Elections shall report the said panels to the House they shall be printed and distributed with the votes of the House.

43. Power to transfer to another panel the names of members obtaining leave of absence.—And be it enacted, That when leave of absence for a limited time shall have been granted by the House to any member, it shall be lawful for the General Committee of Elections to transfer the name of such member from the panel in which it shall have been placed to some other panel subsequent in rotation, if they shall think fit so to do, having regard to the length of time for which such leave of absence shall have been granted, and to the number of select committees then about to be appointed.

44. For supplying vacancies, and increasing the chairmen's panel.—And be it enacted, That whenever any member of the chairmen's panel shall cease to be a member of the House, or shall be, by leave of the House, discharged from continuing upon the chairmen's panel, or shall be so discharged by reason of service, under the provisions hereinbefore contained, the general committee shall forthwith select another member to be placed upon the chairmen's panel in his room; and in case it shall at any time appear to the general committee that the chairmen's panel is too small, it shall be lawful for the general committee to select two, four, or six additional members to place upon it, so nevertheless, that the chairmen's panel shall not at any time consist of more than eighteen members, without the leave of the House first obtained.

45. Members upon chairmen's panel to make regulations.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the members who are upon the chairmen's panel from time to time to make such regulations as they may find convenient for securing the appointment or selection of chairmen of election committees, and for distributing the duties of chairman among all of them.

46. Election petitions to be referred to the general committee. List of petitions to be made.—And be it enacted, That all election petitions which shall be received by the House shall be referred by the House to the General Committee of Elections, for the purpose of choosing select committees, as hereinafter provided, to try such petitions; and the Speaker shall communicate to the House and the general committee every report by the examiner of recognizances to him concerning the sureties to any election petition; and in every case in which any election petition shall be withdrawn, or the examiner of recognizances shall have reported to the Speaker that the sureties are objectionable, the order for referring such petition to the General Committee of Elections shall be discharged, and no further proceeding shall be had upon such petition; and the general committee shall make out a list of all election petitions in which the examiner of recognizances shall have reported to the Speaker that the sureties are unobjectionable, and in which the proceedings are not suspended, in which list the petitions shall be arranged in the order in which they shall have been so reported upon; and in every case in which the proceedings in any petition inserted in such list shall be afterwards suspended, the petition shall be struck out of the list, and shall be again inserted at the bottom of the list at the end of such suspension of proceedings.

47. Where notice of vacancy, or that the sitting member declines to defend, is received by the general committee, proceedings to be suspended.—And be it enacted, That when notice of the death or vacancy of the seat of any member petitioned against, or that it is not the intention of such member to defend his election or return, shall be given to the General Committee of Elections by the Speaker as hereinbefore provided, the general committee shall suspend their proceedings in the matter of the petition referred to in such notice until twenty-one days after the day on which notice of such death or vacancy, or intention not to defend, shall have been inserted in the Gazette under the provisions hereinbefore contained, unless the petition of some person or persons claiming to be admitted as a party or parties in the room of such member shall be sooner referred to them.

48. Provision for cases where more than one petition.—And be it enacted, That when more than one election petition relating to the same election or return shall be referred to the General Committee of Elections they shall suspend their proceedings in the matter of all such petitions until the report of the examiner of recognizances upon each of such petitions, or such of them as shall not have been withdrawn, shall be received by them; and upon receipt of the last of such reports they shall place such petitions at the bottom of the then list of election petitions, bracketed together, and such petitions shall afterwards be dealt with as one petition.

49. Committees to be chosen for petitions according to their order in the list.—And be it enacted, That the General Committee of Elections shall choose the committees to try the election petitions standing in the said list of petitions in the order in which such petitions stand in the said list, and they shall from time to time determine how many committees shall be chosen in each week for trying such petitions, and the day or days on which they will meet for choosing such committees, having regard to the number of select committees which may then be sitting for the trial of election petitions, and to the whole number of such committees then to be appointed; and they shall report to the House from time to time the days appointed by them for choosing such committees.

50. Notice to be given when any committee will be chosen. Notice of suspension to be given.—And be it enacted, That notice of the time and place at which the committee will be chosen to try an election petition shall be published with the votes, not less than fourteen days before the day on which such committee shall be appointed to be chosen; and in case the conduct of the returning officer is complained of, such notice shall be sent to him through the post, not less than fourteen days before the day on which such committee shall be appointed to be chosen, and every such notice shall direct all parties interested to attend the General Committee of Elections, by themselves, their counsel or agents, at the time and place appointed for choosing the select committee; and if (after any such notice shall have been published with the votes, or sent to the returning officer as aforesaid) the proceedings in the matter of such petition shall become suspended, notice of such suspension shall be immediately published with the votes; and in case the conduct of the returning officer is complained of, such notice shall be sent to him through the post.

51. Provision for cases where the sitting member does not defend, and no party has been admitted to defend, &c.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That in case notice of the death or vacancy of the seat of any member petitioned against, or that it is not the intention of such member to defend his election or return, shall have been inserted in the Gazette, by order of the Speaker as hereinbefore provided, and no party shall have been admitted to defend such election or return, then, if the conduct of the returning officer is not complained of in such petition, it shall not be necessary to insert such petition at the bottom of the then list of petitions, but the General Committee of Elections shall meet for choosing the select committee to try such petition as soon as conveniently may be after the expiration of the time allowed for parties to come in to defend such election or return, as hereinbefore provided; and not less than one day's notice of the time and place appointed for choosing such committee shall be given in the votes.

52. General committee empowered to change the day for choosing select committee.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the General Committee of Elections to change the day and hour appointed by them for choosing a select committee to try any election petition, and to appoint some subsequent day and hour for the same, if it shall in their judgment be expedient so to do, giving notice in the votes of the day and hour so subsequently appointed; and in every case in which any such change shall be made by them they shall forthwith report the same to the House, with their reasons for making such change.

53. Notice of petitions and panels.—And be it enacted, That notice shall be published with the votes of the petitions appointed for each week, and of the panel from which committees will be chosen to try such petitions.

54. Lists of voters intended to be objected to shall be delivered to the clerk of the general committee.—And be it enacted, That in all cases of controverted elections or returns of members to serve in Parliament all the parties complaining of or defending such elections or returns shall, by themselves or their agents, deliver in to the clerk of the general committee lists of the voters intended to be objected to, giving in the said lists the several heads of objections, and distinguishing the same against the names of the voters excepted to, not later than six of the clock in the afternoon on the sixth day next before the day appointed for choosing the committee to try the petition complaining of such election or return; and the said clerk shall keep the lists so delivered to him in his office, open to the inspection of all parties concerned.

55. Select committee to be chosen.—And be it enacted, That the general committee shall meet at the time appointed for choosing the committee to try any election petition, and shall choose from the panel then standing next in order of service, exclusive of the chairmen's panel, four members, not being then excused or disqualified for any of the causes aforesaid, and who shall not be specially disqualified for being appointed on the committee to try such petition for any of the following causes; that is to say, by reason of having voted at the election, or by reason of being the party on whose behalf the seat is claimed, or related to the sitting member or party on whose behalf the seat is claimed by kindred or affinity in the first or second degree, according to the canon law; and each panel shall serve for a week, beginning with the panel first drawn and continuing by rotation in the order in which they were drawn, and not reckoning those weeks in which no select committee shall be appointed to be chosen.

56. In case of disagreement, the general committee to adjourn.—And be it enacted, That in case at the least four members then present of the general committee of elections shall not agree in choosing a committee to try any petition appointed for that day, the general committee shall adjourn the choosing of that committee and of the remaining committees appointed to be chosen on that day to the following day, and the parties shall be directed to attend on the following day, or if such following day shall happen during an adjournment of the House, then on the day to which the House shall stand adjourned, and so from day to day until all such committees shall be chosen, or until the general committee of elections shall be dissolved, as hereinbefore provided; and the general committee shall not in any case proceed to choose a committee to try an election petition until they shall have chosen a committee to try every other election petition standing higher in the list aforesaid, the order for referring which shall not be then discharged, except in the case where the day originally appointed for choosing a committee shall have been changed under the provision hereinbefore contained.

57. Chairman to be chosen by the members on the chairmen's Panel, and his name communicated to the general committee.—And be it enacted, That on the day appointed by the general committee to choose a committee to try an election petition the members who are upon the chairmen's panel shall select one of such members to act as the chairman of such election committee, and when they shall have been informed by the general committee that four members of such election committee shall have been chosen, they shall communicate the name of the member so selected by them to the general committee, but no member shall be so selected who would be disqualified from serving on such committee if not upon the chairmen's panel: provided always, that if, with reference to any petition for trying which they are about to appoint a chairman, the members of the chairmen's panel shall receive notice from the Speaker under the provision hereinbefore contained, of the death or vacancy of the seat of the sitting member petitioned against in such petition, or that it is not his intention to defend his seat, the members of the chairmen's panel shall suspend their proceedings with regard to the appointment of a chairman to try such petition until the day appointed by the general committee of elections for selecting a committee to try such petition.

58. When committee chosen the parties to be called in.—And be it enacted, That as soon as the general committee of elections shall have chosen four members of a committee to try any such petition, and shall have received from the members of the chairmen's panel the name of a chairman to serve on such committee, the parties in attendance shall be called in, and the names of the members so chosen and of the chairman shall be read over to them.

59. General committee to proceed in order with all the petitions appointed for that day.—And be it enacted, That after hearing the said names the parties present shall be directed to withdraw, and the general committee may proceed to choose another committee to try the next petition appointed for that day, and so on until all the committees appointed to be chosen on that day shall be chosen, or until the choosing of any committee shall be adjourned as aforesaid, and after any such adjournment the general committee shall not transact any more business on that day, except with regard to those petitions for trying which committees shall have been previously chosen.

60. Parties may object to disqualified members.—And be it enacted, That within one half hour at furthest from the time when the parties to any election petition shall have withdrawn, or if the parties to any other election petition shall then be before the general committee of elections, then after such other parties shall have withdrawn, the parties in attendance shall be again called before the general committee, in the same order in which they were directed to withdraw; and the petitioners and sitting member or members, or such party as may have been admitted as aforesaid to defend the return or right of election, their counsel or agents, beginning on the part of the petitioners, may object to all or any of the members chosen, or to such chairman, as being then disqualified or excused, for any of the reasons aforesaid, from serving on the committee for the trial of that election petition, but not for any other reason.

61. If general committee allow the disqualification, a new committee to be chosen.—And be it enacted, That if at the least four members then present of the general committee shall be satisfied that any member so objected to is then disqualified or excused for any of the reasons aforesaid, the parties present shall be again directed to withdraw, and the general committee shall proceed to choose another committee from the same panel to try that petition, or if the member to whom any such objection shall be substantiated be the chairman, they shall send back his name to the members on the chairmen's panel, and the members on the chairmen's panel shall proceed to choose another chairman to try that petition, and shall communicate his name to the general committee, and so as often as the case may happen.

62. In the new committee members not before objected to may be included.—And be it enacted, That in the second or any following committee the general committee may, if they shall think fit, include all or any of the members previously chosen by them to whom no objection shall have been substantiated; and no party shall be allowed to object to any member who may be included in the second or any following committee who was not objected to when included in the committee first chosen to try that petition.

63. Notice to be sent to every member chosen.—And be it enacted, That when four members and a chairman shall have been chosen, to none of whom any objection shall have been substantiated, the clerk of the general committee of elections shall give notice thereof in writing to each of the members so chosen by the general committee; and with every such notice shall be sent a notice of the general and special grounds of disqualification and excuse from serving which are hereinbefore mentioned, and of the time and place when and where the general committee will meet on the following day; and notice of the time and place of such meeting shall be published with the votes.

64. If any member chosen proves a disqualification another committee to be chosen.—And be it enacted, That the general committee shall meet on the following day at the time and place mentioned in such notice as last aforesaid; and if any such member shall then and there prove, to the satisfaction of at least four members then present of the general committee, that for any of the reasons aforesaid he is disqualified or excused from serving on the committee for which he shall have been so chosen, or if any such member shall prove, to the satisfaction of at least four members then present of the general committee, that there are any circumstances in his case which render him ineligible to serve on such select committee, such circumstances having regard not to his own convenience but solely to the impartial character of the tribunal, the general committee shall proceed to choose a new committee to try that petition, in like manner as if that member had been objected to by any party to the petition; and if within the space of one quarter of an hour after the time mentioned in the notice no member shall so appear, or if any member so appearing shall not prove his disqualification or excuse, to the satisfaction of at least four members then present of the general committee, the select committee shall be taken to be appointed.

65. Select committee to be reported to the House.—And be it enacted, That at the meeting of the House of Commons for the despatch of business next after any such select committee shall be appointed, the members chosen, including the chairman, shall attend in their places, and the general committee of elections shall report to the House the names of the select committee appointed, and shall annex to such report all petitions referred to them by the House which shall relate to the return or election of which such select committee is appointed to try the merits, and all lists of voters which shall have been delivered to them by either party; and the members chosen to be of the said select committee shall not depart the house till the time for the meeting of such select committee shall be fixed.

66. Members of select committee to be sworn.—And be it enacted, That the five members appointed as hereinbefore is mentioned shall, before departing the House, be sworn at the table, by the clerk, well and truly to try the matter of the petitions referred to them, and a true judgment to give according to the evidence, and shall be taken to be a select committee legally appointed to try and determine the merits of the return or election so referred by the House to them; and the member so appointed from the chairmen's panel shall be the chairman of such committee.

67. Members of said committee not present within one hour after the meeting of the House to be taken into custody by the Serjeant-at-Arms.—And be it enacted, That if any member of the said select committee shall not attend in his place within one hour after the meeting of the House on the day appointed for swearing the said committee, or if after attending any member shall depart the House before the said committee shall be sworn, unless the committee shall be discharged, or the swearing of the said committee shall be adjourned as hereinafter provided, he shall be ordered to be taken into the custody of the serjeant-at-arms attending the House for such neglect his duty, and shall be otherwise punished or censured, at the discretion of the House, unless it shall appear to the House by facts specially stated, and verified upon oath, that such member was by a sudden accident or by necessity prevented from attending the House.

68. If any such member is not present within three hours after the meeting of the House the proceedings to be adjourned.—And be it enacted, That if any such absent member shall not be brought into the House within three hours after the meeting of the House on the day first appointed for swearing the said committee, and if no sufficient cause shall be shewn to the House before its rising whereon the House shall dispense with the attendance of such absent member, the swearing of the committee shall be adjourned to the next meeting of the House; and all the members of the said committee shall be bound to attend in their places for the purpose of being sworn at the next meeting of the House, in like manner as on the day first appointed for that purpose.

69. All the members not attending after adjournment, the committee to be discharged.—And be it enacted, That if on the day to which the swearing of the said committee shall be so adjourned all the members of the committee shall not attend and be sworn, within one hour after the meeting of the House, or if on the day first appointed for swearing the said committee, sufficient cause shall be shewn to the House before its rising why the attendance of any member of the committee should be dispensed with, the said committee shall be taken to be discharged, and the general committee shall meet on the following day, or if such following day shall happen during an adjournment of the House, then on the day to which the House shall stand adjourned, and shall proceed to choose a new committee from the panel on service for the time being in the manner hereinbefore provided, and notice of such meeting shall be published with the votes.

70. Petitions and lists to be referred to the committee, and time and place of meeting appointed by the House.—And be it enacted, That the House shall refer the petitions and lists annexed to the report of the general committee of elections to the select committee so appointed and sworn, and shall order the said select committee to meet at a certain time, to be fixed by the House, which shall be within twenty-four hours of their being sworn at the table of the House, unless a Sunday, Christmas Day, or Good Friday shall intervene; and the place of their meeting shall be some convenient room or place adjacent to the House of Commons properly prepared for that purpose.

71. Committees not to adjourn for more than twenty-four hours, without leave, &c. And be it enacted, That every such select committee shall sit from day to day, Sunday, Christmas Day, and Good Friday only excepted, and shall . . er adjourn for a longer time than twenty-four hours, unless a Sunday, Christmas Day, or Good Friday intervene, and in such case not for more than twenty-four hours, exclusive of such Sunday, Christmas Day, or Good Friday, without leave first obtained from the House, upon motion, and special cause assigned for a longer adjournment; and in case the House shall be sitting at the time to which such select committee is adjourned, then the business of the House shall be stayed, and a motion shall be made for a further adjournment for any time to be fixed by the House: provided always, that if such select committee shall have occasion to apply or report to the House, and the House shall be then adjourned for more than twenty-four hours, such select committee may also adjourn to the day appointed for the meeting of the House.

72. Committee-man not to absent himself. Committee not to sit until all be met; on failure of all meeting within one hour, to adjourn.—And be it enacted, That no member appointed as aforesaid to be of any such select committee shall absent himself from the same without leave obtained from the House, or an excuse allowed by the House at the next sitting thereof, for the cause of sickness, verified upon the oath of his medical attendant, or for other special cause shewn, and verified upon oath; and in every such case the member to whom such leave shall be granted or excuse allowed shall be discharged from attending, and shall not be entitled to again to sit or vote on the said committee; and such select committee shall never sit until all the members to whom such leave has not been granted, nor excuse allowed, are met; and in case all such members shall not meet within one hour after the time appointed for the first meeting of such select committee, or within one hour after the time to which such select committee shall have been adjourned, a further adjournment shall be made, and reported by their chairman, with the cause thereof to the House.

73. Absentees to be directed to attend the House.—And be it enacted, That every member whose absence without leave or excuse shall be so reported shall be directed to attend the House at its next sitting, and shall then be ordered to be taken into the custody of the serjeant-at-arms attending the House for such neglect of his duty, and shall be otherwise punished or censured, at the discretion of the House, unless it shall appear to the House, by facts specially stated, and verified upon oath, that such member was by a sudden accident or by necessity prevented from attending the said select committee.

74. Committee not to be dissolved by the death or absence of not more than two members.—And be it enacted, That the committee shall not be dissolved by reason of the death or necessary absence of one member or two members thereof only, but the remaining members shall thenceforward constitute the committee; and in case there shall ever be occasion for electing a new chairman on the death or necessary absence of the chairman first appointed, the remaining members of the committee shall elect one of them selves to be chairman, and if in that election there shall be an equal number of voices, the member whose name stands foremost in the list of the committee, as reported to the House, shall have a second or casting vote.

75. If any committee is reduced to less than three by the non-attendance of its members, it shall be dissolved, unless by consent.—And be it enacted, That in case the number of members able to attend any such select committee shall be, by death or otherwise, unavoidably reduced to less than three and shall so continue for the space of three sitting days, such select committee shall be dissolved (except in the case hereinafter provided), and another shall be appointed to try such petition in manner aforesaid; and the general committee and members of the chairmen's panel shall meet for that purpose as soon as conveniently may be after the occasion shall have arisen, at a day and hour to be appointed by the general committee, and notice of such meeting shall be published with the votes; and all the proceedings of such former committee shall be void and of no effect: provided always, that if all the parties before the committee shall consent thereto, the two remaining members of the committee, or the sole remaining member, if only one, shall continue to act, and shall thenceforward constitute the committee.

76. Committees to be attended by a short-hand writer.—And be it enacted, That every such committee shall be attended by a person skilled in the art of writing short-hand, who shall be specially appointed by the clerk of the House of Commons for the time being, and sworn by the chairman faithfully and truly to take down the evidence given before such committee, and from day to day, as occasion may require, to write or cause the same to be written in words at length for the use of the committee.

77. Committee empowered to send for and examine persons, papers, and records. Witness's misbehaving may be reported to the House, and committed to the custody of the serjeant-at-arms.—And be it enacted, That every such select committee shall have power to send for persons, papers, and records, and to examine any person who may have subscribed the petition which such select committee shall have been appointed to try, unless it shall otherwise appear to such committee that such person is an interested witness, and shall examine all the witnesses who come before them upon oath, which oath the clerk attending such select committee is hereby empowered to administer; and if any person summoned by such select committee, or by the warrant of the Speaker of the House of Commons (which warrants the Speaker is hereby authorized to issue from time to time as he shall think fit), shall disobey such summons, or if any witness before such select committee shall give false evidence, or prevaricate, or shall otherwise misbehave in giving or refusing to give evidence, the chairman of such select committee, by their direction, may at any time during the course of their proceedings report the same to the House for the interposition of the authority or censure of the House, as the case may require, and may by a warrant under his hand directed to the serjeant-at-arms attending the House of Commons, or to his deputy or deputies, commit such person (not being a peer of the realm or lord of Parliament) to the custody of the said serjeant, without bail or mainprize, for any time not exceeding twenty-four hours, if the House shall then be sitting, and if not, then for a time not exceeding twenty-four hours after the hour to which the House shall then be adjourned.

78. How oaths to be administered.—And be it enacted, That where in this Act any thing is required to be verified on oath to the House of Commons, it shall be lawful for the Clerk of the House of Commons to administer an oath for that purpose, or an affidavit for such person may lawfully be sworn before any justice of the peace or Master of the High Court of Chancery.

79. Giving false evidence to be perjury.—And be it enacted, That every person who shall wilfully give any false evidence before the House of Commons, or any committee or examiner of recognizances, under the provisions of this Act, or who shall wilfully swear falsely in any affidavit authorized by this Act to be taken, shall, on conviction thereof, be liable to the penalties of wilful and corrupt perjury.

80. Evidence to be confined to objections specified in the lists.—And be it enacted, That no evidence shall be given before the select committee, or before any commission issued by the said committee, against the validity of any one not included in one of the lists of voters delivered to the general committee as aforesaid, or upon any head of objection to any voter included in any such list other than one of the heads specified against him in such list.

81. Committee to decide, and to report their decision to the House.—And be it enacted, that every such select committee shall try the merits of the return or election, or both, and shall determine by a majority of voices, if for the time being consisting of more than one member, whether the petitioners or the sitting members, or either of them, be duly returned or elected, or whether the election be void, or whether a new writ ought to issue, which determination shall be final between the parties to all intents and purposes; and the House, on being informed thereof by the committee, shall order such report to be entered in their journals, and shall give the necessary directions for confirming or altering the return, or for ordering a return to be made, or for issuing a new writ for a new election, or for carrying the said determination into execution, as the case may require.

82. Committees may report their determination on other matters to the House.—And be it enacted, That if any such select committee shall come to any resolution other than the determination above mentioned, they shall, if they think proper, report the same to the House for their opinion at the same time that they shall inform the House of such determination, and the House may confirm or disagree with such resolution, and make such orders thereon as to them shall seem proper.

83. When committee is deliberating, the room to be cleared, &c.—And be it enacted, That whenever any such select committee shall think it necessary to deliberate among themselves upon any question which shall arise in the course of the trial, or upon the determination thereof, or upon any resolution concerning the matter of the petition referred to them as aforesaid, as soon as they shall have heard the evidence and counsel on both sides relative thereto, the room or place in which they shall sit shall be cleared, if they shall think proper, whilst the members of the committee consider thereof.

84. Questions to be decided by a majority.—And be it enacted, That all questions before the committee, if for the time being consisting of more than one member, shall be decided by a majority of voices, and whenever the voices shall be equal the chairman shall have a second or casting voice.

85. Names of members voting for or against any resolution to be reported to the House.—And be it enacted, That whenever the select committee shall be divided upon any question the names of the members voting in the affirmative and in the negative shall be entered in the minutes of the said committee, and shall be reported to the House, with the questions on which such divisions arose, at the same time with the final report of the committee; and no member of the committee shall be allowed to refrain from voting on any question on which the committee shall be divided.

86. Committees to be appointed for petitions standing over on a prorogation of Parliament.—And be it enacted, That whenever it shall happen that Parliament shall be prorogued after any petition complaining of an undue election or return, or of the omission to return, shall have been presented, but before the appointment of a select committee to try such petition, the general committee of elections shall, within two days after their first meeting, in case the sureties shall have been then reported unobjectionable, appoint a day and hour for selecting a committee or committees to try the petition or petitions so standing over as aforesaid: provided always, that if the number of petitions so standing over as aforesaid shall be so great that the times for selecting committee of elections be conveniently appointed within two days after their first meeting, the said general committee shall, within two days after their first meeting, appoint the times for selecting committees to try such number of the said petitions as the said general committee shall deem convenient, and shall afterwards from time to time, as soon as conveniently may be, appoint the times for selecting the committees to try the remainder of such petitions.

87. Committees not dissolved by the prorogation of Parliament.—And be it enacted, That if the Parliament shall be prorogued after the appointment of any select committee for the trial of any such petition as aforesaid, and before they shall have reported to the House their determination thereon, such committee shall not be dissolved by such prorogation, but shall be thereby adjourned to twelve of the clock on the day immediately following that on which Parliament shall meet again for the despatch of business (Sunday, Good Friday, and Christmas-day always excepted); and all proceedings of such committee, and of any commission to take evidence issued under the authority of such committee, shall remain and continue to be of the same force and effect as if Parliament had not been so prorogued; and such committee shall meet on the day and hour to which it shall be so adjourned, and shall thenceforward continue to sit from day to day in the manner herein-before provided, until they shall have reported to the House their determination on the merits of such petition.

88. Costs when incurred by petitioners, &c.—And be it enacted, That whenever any committee appointed to try an election petition shall report to the House with respect to any such petition that the same appeared to them frivolous or vexatious, the party or parties, if any, who shall have appeared before the committee in opposition to such petition shall be entitled to recover from the person or persons, or any of them, who shall have signed such petition, the full costs and expenses which such party or parties shall have incurred in opposing the same, such costs and expenses to be ascertained in the manner hereinafter directed.

89. Costs when incurred by parties opposing petitions.—And be it enacted, That whenever such committee shall report to the House, with respect to the opposition made to such petition by any party or parties who shall have appeared before them, that such opposition appeared to be frivolous or vexatious, the person or persons who shall have signed such petition shall be entitled to recover from such party or parties, or any of them, with respect to whom such report shall be made, the full costs and expenses which such petitioner or petitioners shall respectively have incurred in prosecuting their petition, such costs and expenses to be ascertained in the manner hereinafter directed.

90. Costs when incurred where no party appears to oppose a petition.—And be it enacted, That whenever no party shall have appeared before any such committee in opposition to such petition, and such committee shall report to the House, with respect to the election or return, or to the alleged omission of a return, or to the alleged insufficiency of a return, complained of in any such petition, that the same appeared to them to be vexatious or corrupt, the person or persons who shall have signed such petition shall be entitled to recover from the sitting member or sitting members (if any) whose election or return shall be complained of in such petition (such sitting member or sitting members not having given notice as aforesaid of his or their intention not to defend the same), or from any other person or persons whom the House shall have admitted or directed to be made a party or parties to oppose such petition, the full costs and expenses which such petitioner or petitioners shall have incurred in prosecuting their petition, such costs and expenses to be ascertained in the manner hereinafter directed.

91. Costs upon frivolous objections.—And be it enacted, That if any ground of objection shall be stated against any voter in any list of votes intended to be objected to as hereinbefore provided, and if such select committee shall be of opinion that such objection was frivolous or vexatious, the said committee shall report the same to the House of Commons, together with their opinion on the other matter relating to the said petition, and the opposite party shall in such case be entitled to recover, from the party or parties by whom or on whose behalf any such objections were made, the full costs and expenses incurred by reason of such frivolous or vexatious objections, which costs and expenses shall be ascertained and recovered in the same manner and form as is hereinafter provided for the recovery of costs and expenses in cases of frivolous or vexatious petitions.

92. Costs upon unfounded objections.—And be it enacted, That if either party shall make before the said select committee any specific allegation with regard to the conduct of the other party or his agents, and shall either bring no evidence in support thereof, or such evidence that the committee shall be of opinion that such allegation was made without any reasonable or probable ground, it shall be lawful for the committee to make such orders as to them shall seem fit for the payment, by the party making such unfounded allegation to the other party, of all costs and expenses which shall have been incurred by reason of such unfounded allegation, which costs and expenses shall be ascertained and recovered in the same manner and form as is hereinafter provided for the recovery of costs and expenses in cases of frivolous and vexatious petitions.

93. Costs how to be ascertained.—And be it enacted, That the costs and expenses of prosecuting or opposing or preparing to oppose any petition presented under the provisions of this Act, and the costs and expenses which shall be due and payable to any witness summoned to attend before the Examiner of Recognizances, or before any committee, under the provisions of this Act, shall be ascertained in manner following; (that is to say,) on application made to the Speaker of the House of Commons by any such petitioner, party, or witness, for ascertaining such costs and expenses, not later than three calendar months after the determination of the merits of such petition, or after any order of the House for discharging the order of reference of such petition to the General Committee of Elections, or after the withdrawal of any petition, as hereinbefore provided, the Speaker shall direct the same to be taxed by the examiner of recognizances; and the said examiner shall examine and tax such costs and expenses, and shall report the amount thereof, together with the name of the party or parties liable to pay the same, and the name or names of the party or parties entitled to receive the same, to the Speaker, who shall, upon application made to him, deliver to the party or parties a certificate, signed by himself, expressing the amount of the costs and expenses allowed in such report, with the name of the party liable to pay the same, and the name of the party entitled to receive the same; and such certificate so signed by the Speaker shall be conclusive evidence, as well of the amount of such demands as of the title of the several parties to recover the same, in all cases and for all purposes whatsoever; and the party claiming under the same shall, upon payment thereof, give a receipt at the foot of such certificate, which shall be a sufficient discharge for the same.

94. Persons appointed to tax costs empowered to take affidavits.—And be it enacted, That the examiner of recognizances is empowered to examine upon oath any party claiming any such costs or expenses, and any witnesses tendered to him for examination, and to receive affidavits sworn before him, or before any Master of the High Court of Chancery, or any of her Majesty's justices of the peace, who are severally empowered to take the same, relative to such costs or expenses, or the taxation or nonpayment thereof.

95. Recovery of costs.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the party or parties entitled to such taxed costs and expenses, or for his, her, or their executors or administrators, to demand the whole amount thereof, so certified as above, from any one or more of the persons herein made liable to the payment thereof in the several cases hereinbefore mentioned, and in case of nonpayment thereof to recover the same by action of debt in any of her Majesty's Courts of Record at Westminster or Dublin, or in the Court of Session in Scotland, in which action it shall be sufficient for the plaintiff or plaintiffs to declare that the defendant or defendants is or are indebted to him or them in the sum mentioned in the said certificate; and the said plaintiff or plaintiffs shall, upon filing the said declaration, together with the said certificate and affidavit of such demand as aforesaid, be at liberty to sign judgment as for want of plea by nil dicit, and take out execution for the said sum so mentioned in the said certificate, together with the costs of the said action, according to due course of law: provided always, that the validity of such certificate (the handwriting of the Speaker thereunto being duly verified) shall not be called in question in any court upon the allegation of any matter or thing anterior to the date thereof.

96. Persons paying costs may recover a proportion from other persons liable thereto.—And be it enacted, That in every case it shall be lawful for any person or persons from whom the amount of such costs and expenses shall have been so recovered to recover in like manner from the other persons, or any of them (if such there shall be), who are liable to the payment of the same costs and expenses, a proportionate share thereof, according to the number of persons so liable, and according to the extent of the liability of each person.

97. Recognizances, when to be estreated, &c.—And be it enacted, That if any person or persons who shall have subscribed an election petition shall neglect or refuse, for the space of seven days after demand, to pay to any witness who shall have been summoned on his or their behalf before the examiner of recognizances, or any committee, under the provisions of this Act, the sums so certified as aforesaid by the speaker to be due to such witness, or if such petitioner or petitioners shall neglect or refuse, for the space of six months after demand, to pay to any party who shall appear in opposition to the said petition the sum so certified by the Speaker as aforesaid to be due to such party for their costs or expenses, and if such neglect or refusal shall, within one year after the granting of such certificate, be proved to the Speaker's satisfaction, by affidavit sworn before any master of the High Court of Chancery (and such master is hereby authorized to administer such oath, and is authorized and required to certify such affidavit under his hand), in every such case every person who shall have entered into a recognizance relating to such petition under the provisions hereinbefore contained shall be held to have made default in his said recognizance; and the Speaker of the House of Commons shall thereupon certify such recognizance into the Court of Exchequer, and shall also certify that such person or persons have made default therein, and such certificate shall be conclusive evidence of such default; and the recognizance, being so certified, shall be delivered by the clerk or one of the clerks assistant of the House of Commons into the hands of the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, or one of the Barons of the Exchequer, or of such officer as shall be appointed by the Court to receive the same, and shall have the same effect as if the same were estreated from a court of law; and the validity thereof (the handwriting of the Speaker to such certificate being duly verified) shall not be called in question upon the allegation of any matter anterior to the date of such certificate.

98. Returning officer may be sued for neglecting to return any person duly elected.—And be it enacted, That if any sheriff or other returning officer or officers shall wilfully delay, neglect, or refuse duly to return any person who ought to be returned to serve in Parliament for any county, city, borough, district of burghs, port, or place within Great Britain or Ireland, such person may, in case it shall have been determined by a select committee appointed in the manner hereinbefore directed that such person was entitled to have been returned, sue the sheriff or other officer or officers having so wilfully delayed, neglected, or refused duly to make such return at his election, in any of her Majesty's Courts of Record at Westminster or Dublin, or in the Court of Session in Scotland, and shall recover double the damages he shall sustain by reason thereof, together with full costs of suit, provided such action is commenced within one year after the commission of the act on which it is grounded, or within six months after the conclusion of any proceedings in the House of Commons relating to such election.

99. Commencement of the Act.—And be it enacted, That this Act shall commence and take effect from the end of this present session of Parliament.

100. Provision for election petitions remaining at the close of the present session. 4 & 5 Vict. c. 58.—And be it enacted, That if at the close of the present session of Parliament there shall be any election petition or petitions before the House, the order for taking which into consideration shall not have been discharged, and for trying which no committee or committees shall have been appointed, such election petition or petitions shall, in case the sureties relating thereto shall have been reported unobjectionable, be tried by a committee or committees to be chosen under the provisions of this Act, and shall be referred to the General Committee of Elections before any petition presented in the next session, and the general committee shall, within two days after their first meeting, appoint a day and hour for selecting a committee to try every such petition; and the recognizances entered into in respect of such petitions shall be taken to remain in force for securing payment of all costs and expenses which the petitioners shall be liable to pay under the provisions of this Act: provided always, that if the Parliament shall be prorogued after the appointment of a select committee for the trial of any such petition as aforesaid, and before they shall have reported to the House their determination thereon, such committee shall not be dissolved by such prorogation, but shall be thereby adjourned to twelve of the clock on the day immediately following that on which Parliament shall meet again for the despatch of business (Sunday, Good Friday, and Christmas Day always excepted); and all proceedings of such committee, and of any commission to take evidence issued under the authority of such committee, shall remain and continue to be of the same force and effect as if Parliament had not been so prorogued, and as if the Act passed in the fifth year of her Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend the Law for the Trial of controverted Elections," had continued in force; and such committee shall meet on the day and hour to which it shall be so adjourned, and shall thenceforward continue to sit from day to day in the manner provided in the last-mentioned Act, until they shall have reported to the House their determination on the merits of such petition; and all further proceedings shall be had, with reference to such petition, as if the said last-mentioned Act had continued in force.

101. Act may be amended this session.—And be it enacted, That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

SCHEDULE to which the foregoing Act refers.

SCHEDULE A.

Form of Recognizance.

Be it remembered, that on the day of in the year of our Lord before me A B (examiner of recognizances for the House of Commons) [or one of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the county of], came C D of &c. E F of &c. G H of &c. I K of &c. and L M of &c. and severally acknowledged themselves to owe to our Sovereign Lady the Queen the following sums; (that is to say), the said C D the sum of one thousand pounds, and the said E F the sum of pounds [the said G H the sum of pounds, the said I K the sum of pounds, and the said L M the sum of pounds], to be levied on their respective goods and chattels, lands and tenements to the use of our said Sovereign Lady the Queen, her heirs and successors.

The condition of this recognizance is, that if the said C D and X Y (the other petitioner, if any), or either of them, shall well and truly pay all costs and expenses which any committee of the House of Commons selected to try the matter of the petition signed by the said C D and X Y (complaining of an undue election or return for the [here state the place]), [or (complaining that no return has been made for the said within the time limited by Act of Parliament), or (complaining that the return made for the said is not a return of a member or members according to the requisition of the writ), or (complaining of the special matters contained in any such return)] shall adjudge to be payable by the said C D and X Y (the other petitioner, if any), or either of them, and shall also well and truly pay the costs and expenses due and payable by the said C D and X Y (the other petitioner, if any), and each of them, to any witness summoned in his or their behalf, or to the party who shall appear in opposition to the said petition, in case the said C D and X Y (the other petitioner, if any), shall be allowed to withdraw his or their said petition, then this recognizance to be void, otherwise to be of full force and effect.

PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS.

The Army.—A paper has just been delivered by the printers of the House of Commons, that contains an account of the finally audited receipts and expenditure for army and militia services, compared with the sums estimated for the year ending the 31st of March, 1843, &c. This account was laid on the table of the House by the newly-appointed Secretary-at-War, Sir T. F. Fremantle, bart. M.P. We find that the gross total expenditure for effective and non-effective services during the period in question amounted to 6,259,515*l.* whilst the grants made by Parliament, including appropriations actually received, appear to have amounted to 6,632,575*l.* Of the amount expended, the sum of 3,484,818*l.* was appropriated to the land forces, 170,875*l.* to staff officers, 87,502*l.* to public departments, 18,717*l.* to the Royal Military College, 101,704*l.* to the Volunteer Corps, 14,701*l.* to rewards for distinguished services, 465,402*l.* to half-pay and allowances, 46,677*l.* to foreign half-pay and pensions, 138,687*l.* to widows' pensions, 1,225,709*l.* to Chelsea Hospital, for in and out pensioners, and altogethe the sum of 150,986*l.* to the militia. Of the amount of 3,484,818*l.* expended on the land forces, the sum of 2,630,966*l.* was appropriated to "pay," 283,918*l.* to clothing, 113,525*l.* to provisions, 38,518*l.* to forage, 17,815*l.* to fuel and light, 12,883*l.* to lodging, 2,407*l.* to hospital expenses, medicines, and medical aid, 12,003*l.* to divine service, 61,242*l.* to the movement of troops, 6,668*l.* to the administration of martial law, 4,669*l.* to libraries and schools, 134,191*l.* to recruiting, and 20,645*l.* to miscellaneous expenses; besides a few other items not particularly worthy of notice. The expenditure of the land forces was less than the estimates by the sum of 331,271*l.*

The Constabulary Force.—Mr. Pakington, M.P. has put the public in possession of a printed abstract of returns shewing the number of the constabulary force in each county in England and Wales under the Act of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, together with an account of the several items of expenditure, &c. for the year 1843. We find, from this return, that the total force in England and Wales, including both officers and men, amounts to 2,216 individuals; the cost of clothing and accoutrements, to 10,826*l.*; the expenses of horses, harness, forage, &c. to 6,011*l.*; and the payments to county treasurers, clerks of the peace, &c. to 20,698*l.*; that the gross total expenditure amounts to the sum of 158,767*l.* and the net expenditure to 145,803*l.* caused by the deduction of 12,964*l.* credits, &c. The gross total amount at which the counties included in the return are assessed is 18,668,526*l.*; the total population, 4,985,844; the average number of inhabitants (within the jurisdiction of the police) to each constable, 2,250; the total area of the said counties, 14,392,292 statute acres; the average number of acres to each constable, 6,494; the area of the said counties in square miles, 22,683; and the average number of square miles to each constable, 10¼. The counties included in this return are, Bedford (for which no statement is made), Cambridge, Cumberland, Durham, Essex, Gloucester, Hereford, Herts, Lancaster, Leicester, Norfolk, Northampton, Notts, Salop, Southampton, Stafford, Suffolk, Sussex, Warwick, Wilts, and Worcester, in England; and Cardigan, Carmarthen, Denbigh, Glamorgan, and Montgomery, in Wales; but in some cases only small portions of them are concerned.

Malt and Hops.—It appears that the total quantity of malt made in one year to the 10th of October last, in the United Kingdom, was 4,459,673 quarters, of which 3,566,298 quarters were used in that period. In England the quantity used was 3,336,140; in Scotland, 103,902; and in Ireland only 126,256 quarters in the year. In the same year there were nearly 43,157 acres of land under cultivation of hops in England and Wales, and the hop duty paid in the year amounted to 243,796*l.* 7s. 2d.

Legacy Duty.—The total legacy duty received since 1797 amounts to 37,144,752*l.* 18s. 4d. and on probates, administrations, and testamentary papers from the same period to 29,691,206*l.* 5s. 4¾d. making nearly sixty-seven millions of money as duty in 47 years. In the year ending the 5th of January last, the legacy duty in England and Wales was 1,114,871*l.* 6s. 6d.; in Scotland, 86,897*l.* 18s. 6d.; and in Ireland, 39,634*l.* 17s. 3½d. Other large sums were received as probate duty, &c.

French Statistics.—The Reforme states that during the last census taken by order of government, it has been ascertained that there exist throughout France 6,642,416 dwelling-houses, 82,575 mills, 4,412 furnaces and forges, and 38,030 manufactories. Total, 6,767,433 properties, belonging to 10,282,916 individuals. "There remain, consequently," observes the Reforme," "24,717,050 non-proprietors or passive citizens."

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

It is said that a Winter Assize is positively resolved upon for those counties which have a sufficient number of prisoners for trial to justify the expenses. We presume that, as last year, the days and places will not be announced until the close of the ensuing Term.

The daily papers have been lately indulging in some very severe strictures on the magistrates in some of the midland counties for various proceedings taken by them under the Game Laws. But such attacks are extremely unjust. The magistrates do not make the law, they do but administer it; and when a charge is brought before them they are bound to pronounce the judgment which the law has awarded to the offence. If the law be bad it is a fair subject for censure, and it should be amended in the manner prescribed by our constitution; but to visit upon the administrators of the law the faults of the law is unjust and ungenerous.

As for the Game Laws, it seems to be admitted on all hands that they need alteration. Undoubtedly they are productive of discontent and crime, and none will, we believe, be more anxious to place them upon a more rational foundation than the landlords. The Earl of Euston speaks the growing opinion upon this topic in a remarkable publication, in which he forcibly points out the mischiefs resulting from the present law, and not a few of the landed proprietors in Sussex have announced their intention of abandoning their exclusive privileges, and giving the game to their tenants.

But we suspect that those who are loudest in their outcries against the Game Laws have no desire for a change that shall make game more strictly private property; they want only that it shall be made public property, and that they may take it wherever they can find it. Such, however, is not the change which reason recommends. It is simply to make game the property of the person on whose land it is found, just as his sheep or his fowls, and to punish the taking of his game from his land in the like manner as the taking of his poultry. If, then, the landlord would give the game to the farmer who feeds it, we believe it would be much better protected than now, because the farmer would sell it like any other produce; and as the landlord shoots and hunts for the sake of the sport, and not for the produce, he would always find the tenants willing enough to permit him to kill it for them; and he ought to ask no more of them; for it is hard that the farmer should feed for another to take, and it is not surprising that he should often prefer to save his crops, by walking over a nest, or tacitly encourage the poacher who rids him of a destructive foe. The alteration we suggest would, we think, effect the double object of taking away a fertile source of crime, and protecting the game without keepers; every farmer would then become a keeper of his own hares and partridges, as now he keeps his fowls and sheep.

THE RENTAL OF THE COUNTY OF MIDDLESEX.

The returns of the annual rental of the various parishes throughout the county of Middlesex have now been made, and present a larger amount than has hitherto been handed in. This result may fairly be said to have arisen from the course which the bench of magistrates felt it necessary some time since to adopt. The proceeding in question appears to have had its origin in the "returns of rental" which are made under the Property Tax Act. The vast difference between the two returns excited great surprise, and therefore, with a view of arriving at the cause of the discrepancy—for both documents are made up under the influence of an oath—the magistrates of Middlesex issued a paper, directing the attention of the several parochial officers to the immense difference in their respective amounts. Indeed, the variance in some cases was so immense as to demand that an explanation should be publicly made. As a proof of the fact, it is merely necessary to quote three or four cases, accompanied with this remark, that there were but few parishes whose returns without that explanation did not display a most unsatisfactory result in this respect.

In the return to the bench of magistrates of the rental of the parish of St. George, Hanover-square, for 1843, the amount was set forth at 600,796*l.*, whilst in the return under the Property Tax Act it was set out at 909,568*l.*, a difference of 308,772*l.* In the parish of St. Pancras the return to the bench was 566,320*l.*, and to the property tax 1,251,737*l.*, a difference of 685,417*l.* Then in the case of Marylebone, whilst to the bench the rental was returned at 816,572*l.*, that to the property tax commissioners was 1,132,324*l.* a difference of 315,752*l.* In Paddington, too, there was a variance of 392,955*l.*; in Clerkenwell, of 127,736*l.*; St. Mary, Islington, of 92,037*l.*; in St. Luke, of 61,983*l.*; in St. Leonard, Shoreditch, of 147,151*l.*; in St. Andrew, Holborn, of 81,007*l.*; in St. Giles and St. George's, Bloomsbury, of 69,496*l.*; in the Liberty of the Rolls, of 53,897*l.*; in St. John's, Hackney, of 32,907*l.*; in St. Margaret and St. John's, Westminster, of 108,550*l.*; in St. James's, of 177,783*l.*; and many others of smaller amounts.

Incorporation of Brighton.—On Monday, pursuant to a requisition to the High Constable of Brighton, a public meeting was held in the Town-hall in order to consider the propriety of petitioning the Queen in Council for a charter of incorporation for the borough. The High Constable having been called to the chair, Mr. Hallet, the landlord of the Bristol Hotel, moved that a committee of nine be appointed to take into consideration whether it will be beneficial for the inhabitants that the town should be incorporated, and also the propriety of presenting a petition to her Majesty under the provisions of the Municipal Amendment Act, and to report thereon to an adjourned meeting, to be held at the Town-hall in a month's time, which was carried unanimously, and a committee was accordingly appointed. These proceedings do not meet the unanimous approval of the town. The opinion as to the effects of a corporation are greatly divided. But the county is about to spend a large sum, at least it is in contemplation, to build or make additions to the Lewes gaol, at an enormous cost, and this has aroused the town of Brighton, and induced them to consider whether, as they contribute so much to the county rate, it will not be better for them to have a gaol of their own, and save the expense of transit. The requisition to the high-constable was signed by upwards of 400 inhabitants.

Escaped Convicts.—The metropolitan police have just received information from Hobart Town, New South Wales, of the escape of fourteen convicts, all of whom were sentenced to be transported for life, namely:—Walter Archbald, who was tried at Dublin in October 1816, he being then 25 years of age; William Hapsall, tried at Nottingham in March 1810 (conditionally emancipated in August 1828), again tried at Hobart Town in April 1830, a sawyer, a native of Yorkshire; James Nuth, tried at Somerset in March 1822, then 22 years of age, a sweep, and a native of Bath; John Spong, tried in Kent in August 1822, then 22 years of age, a carpenter, and native of Deptford; Freeman Aitken, and Ralph Tate tried at London in June 1824, then 19 years of age, cabinet-makers, and natives of the parish of St. Ann's; Cartney William Bligh, tried at Bristol in October 1823, a grocer, and a native of Barnstaple, being then thirty-eight years of age; Joseph Baker, tried at Warwick in July 1826, being then 25 years of age, a wood turner, and a native of Birmingham; William Crowhurst, tried at Kent in July 1823, being then 40 years of age, a farm-labourer, and a native of Hauling, near Chatham; Thomas Curply, tried at the Isle of Man in April 1819, being then 45 years of age, a labourer, and native of the Isle of Man; William Danver, tried at the Isle of Man in 1821, then 36 years of age, a fisherman, and a native of the county of Wicklow; Richard Grater, tried at Bristol in July 1828, then 15 years of age, a mariner, and native of Plymouth; William Ironmonger, tried at Warwick in July 1823, a native of Staffordshire, carpenter; Joseph Reeves, tried at Berks in July 1826, carpenter, native of Berkshire; and Alexander Stirling, tried at Aberdeen in April 1828, then 25 years of age, a mariner, and a native of Deal. The information does not state how they effected their escape.

The High Sheriff and magistrates for the county of Hertford have conferred the appointment of governor to the gaol and House of Correction of that county on Mr. Samuel Hatchard, deputy governor of the Penitentiary, Millbank.

Costliness of Caermarthenshire Justice.—The punitive part of our administrative system of law here, it will be thought, is rather costly, when it is stated that the amount of property for the stealing of which the prisoners at the Caermarthenshire Quarter Sessions, held yesterday and to-day, is only about 40s. while the cost of prosecution falls but little short of 300*l*.—Welshman.

Last week, at Ormskirk, upwards of forty women appeared, at the same time and place, to have their children affiliated under the bastardy clause. The magistrates ordered the putative fathers to pay sums varying from 1s. 6d. to 3s. per week.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

The business of the Term being about to commence, we have endeavoured to bring up all the arrears of material which had been accumulating during the reporting period of the legal year. Some very interesting points are to be decided during the ensuing Term. We learn that a great number of Registration Appeals are expected to come on for hearing, some of them involving important questions, affecting large classes of claimants, such as the lodger's case reported some two or three weeks since.

A letter in the Times has exhibited the ill effects of hasty legislation in the instance of the Insolvent Debtors Act. As it contains some useful hints we extract it. After some severe remarks on Lord Brougham's legislation, the writer says:—

It will be sufficient for my present purpose to confine my remarks to the recent Act passed for amending what is termed "the Insolvent Debtors' Protection Act." The original Act, it will be recollected, passed in 1842, and contained 15 sections. The amended Act contains 75 sections, and of these 15 relate exclusively to the amendments of the former Act; so that two years after the passing of the original measure it is found necessary to add 45 new sections for the purpose of carrying out the intentions of its promoters. That it is difficult by any legislative Act to provide for every contingency will readily be conceded; but that an Act of Parliament should be so loosely framed as to require another three times its length to amend and render it effectual, argues a want of skill, judgment, and forethought, that even the most unlearned must pronounce to be wholly incompatible with the ordinary qualifications of a legislator. Nor is the absence of proper care and reflection less apparent in the new than in the old measure, as will be seen from the few observations I am about to submit. The preamble of an Act of Parliament is usually so framed as to be explanatory of the whole scope of the Act, and so important is this deemed to the several enactments, that it is frequently referred to as the key for construing any clauses that may appear to be obscurely or ambiguously worded. Now, the preamble in Lord Brougham's amended Act simply recites, that it is expedient to amend an Act passed in the 6th year of the reign, &c.; and, reading this, it would be assumed that the enactments are altogether confined to the amendment of the former Act, whereas there is not only a most important section for enabling traders to obtain fiats in bankruptcy on their own petition, after filing a declaration of insolvency, besides several other sections relating to matters of bankruptcy, but the Act also contains several sections for preventing persons being charged or detained in execution for sums less than 20*l*. and for discharging those already in custody for debts not exceeding that amount. With reference also to these latter sections, it is difficult to understand why they should have been introduced at all into this amending Act, with which they have no sort of connection; and lookin[illegible] the class or persons for whose relief the 20*l*. clauses are intended, it seems most unfair and oppressive to compel them to wade through an Act of Parliament containing upwards of 70 sections, for the purpose of finding out some 10 or 12 sections relating exclusively to them. From the great pains taken by Lord Brougham to explain the effect of these enactments, it is perfectly unaccountable why he should have allowed them to be almost smothered in a mass of other matter, when he might have embodied the whole of them in a short independent Bill, and thus have rendered their effect clear and intelligible to the commonest understanding. Again, as to the amending sections, it will be found that many of them are mere repetitions of enactments contained in the old Bankrupt Act of 6th of Geo. 4, c. 16; and we are surely sufficiently advanced in the science of legislation to render unnecessary the repetition of a whole string of existing enactments, when a slight reference to them would answer the purpose.

Not the least important defect in the original measure was the singular omission of all power to divide amongst the creditors any funds that might be realized, so that before the amended Act was passed, the commissioners found themselves in the dilemma of having realized considerable assets belonging to persons who had petitioned, without the means of disposing of them. This defect has been cured by the 31st section of the amended Act, and will afford considerable relief; but, upon the whole, the Act is so loosely framed, and bears within and about it such evident marks of haste, that many who are not disposed to take the same favourable view of his lordship's exertions as myself may find ample grounds for attributing its sudden concoction to some other urgent call than that of pure patriotism.

For obvious reasons I do not think it prudent to send you my name, nor is it necessary, as the Acts speak for themselves, and there is nothing, therefore, in the above statement requiring authentication. Suffice it, then, to say that I am

October 15. A Barrister.

It must, however, be observed, that this Act is scarcely a fair specimen of legislation. It was framed under very peculiar circumstances. It was concocted by a committee of the Lords out of the bodies of three bills—a sort of Frankenstein of Parliament. It was impossible that, so framed, it could have unity of design or regularity of feature. It has perplexed its author as much as the judges and the lawyers.

We subjoin a letter which has been addressed to the Editor of the Morning Herald, on the subject of Chancery Prisoners in County Gaols:—

Sir,—As Michaelmas Term is approaching, which is the principal period for commitments to the Queen's Prison for contempt in not answering, I am sure you will readily give place to a few hints for the guidance of persons in the above situation, and of which experience shows they generally stand much in need.

In the first place, with regard to the period for commitments, this matter is provided for by Sir Edward Sugden's Act, the 1st Wm. 4, c. 36, s. 15, rule 5; the words of which are applicable to the above cases, and which, I think, are too plain to require explanation, but are, unfortunately, not sufficiently made known, are that, "the plaintiff shall bring the defendant by an habeas corpus to the bar of the court within thirty days from the time of his being actually in custody or detained (being already in custody) upon process of contempt, and if the last of such thirty days shall happen out of Term, then within the four first days of the ensuing Term." The rule then provides for the cases of persons in the custody of the serjeant-at-arms, or messenger, and therefore, not in gaol, and then proceeds, "and in case any such defendant shall not be brought to the bar of the court within the respective times aforesaid, the sheriff, gaoler, or keeper, serjeant-at-arms, or messenger, in whose custody he shall be, shall thereupon discharge him out of custody without payment by him of the costs of contempt."

When the party is brought to the bar of the court, he is "turned over," or committed, to the Queen's Prison; but on the making of the order for the purpose he has, under the 6th rule of the same Act, an important right, of which few, if any, are ever aware, though it is the sole object of the foregoing rule—viz. to make oath that he is unable through poverty to employ a solicitor to put in his answer, upon the making of which oath it becomes the duty of the plaintiff to take the proper step for facilitating the putting in of the answer in formâ pauperis, according to the 6th and 7th rules. If the defendant does not allege poverty and take this oath, the time for putting in the answer is, under rules 2 and 13, never less than twenty-eight clear days from the commitment, and never less than two calendar months from the first lodgement or attachment in gaol; after which two periods (of two months and twenty-eight days, whether running together or successively) are complete, the plaintiff may bring the defendant to the bar of the court again, when the bill will be taken pro confesso, which, in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, is all the plaintiff requires, and is in nature and effect precisely the same as signing judgment by default in an action at law; also, if the defendant, who has not been sworn in court, put his answer in, it may be taken off the file, unless the costs are paid; but if the defendant do take the oath, he must be brought to the bar of the court again, and be remanded before he can be brought up finally to take the bill pro confesso (see Viscountess Barnewell v. Cook, 7 Simons, 320), and even then the rules are not acted on imperatively against the prisoner, and when the answer is put in the costs are paid out of the suitors' fund. Therefore, poor persons, if they only attend to the precaution of alleging their poverty, are in a much better situation, or have a better chance of their right than persons who are not poor, and who run the very great danger of [illegible] made under the influence of sophistry and all kinds of deceit, for the employing of which there is a strong incentive when the object is to take the bill pro confesso, which is, of course, the only object when the bill is [illegible], which is generally is in cases of imprisonment.

In offering you these few hints, as to the points most material to poor persons, I [illegible] observe that there is no reason whatever for imprisonment, or the technicalities and expenses [illegible] it, and the risk of those robberies which are frequently suffered by judgment being [illegible], in proceedings which it is impossible should be [illegible] understood, although they are only for a purpose [illegible] equivalent to the mere signing judgment at law by default, which everybody understands, and in proof that such proceedings are not necessary, they have been [illegible] in the Court of Chancery in Ireland, where the attorney could [illegible] a defendant, [illegible] be obtained by taking the bill pro confesso [illegible] done without any imprisonment.

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

William Cobbett.

Memoranda for Lawyers.

Evidence in Pedigree.

The case of Johnson v. Todd, reported in 5 Beavan, 597, deserves notice for some useful comments on evidence on pedigree made by the Master of the Rolls. The judgment briefly recapitulates the facts, and then proceeds to a review of the character of the testimony given at the trial, which led to the remarks upon evidence of this class generally, which may be studied with advantage by the common lawyer equally as by the equity lawyer.

The testator (says the Master of the Rolls) was about eighty years of age when he died, in Jamaica, in the year 1820. His father, William Marshall, married Elizabeth Jeffrey, of Stitchell Mill, in 1734, and he was baptized in 1740, and went to Jamaica when a boy. So far the facts are not subject to controversy. The testator was the son of William Marshall, who married Elizabeth Jeffrey, of Stitchell Mill, and he went to Jamaica early in life. On the other hand, John Marshall, of Longformacus, died in November, 17[illegible], a very old man. He was married to Margaret Marshall, at Longformacus, in June, 1750, and by that marriage had two sons, Peter and Robert, and three daughters, Ann Giles and Jean and Margaret Marshall. The widow of John died in August, 1792. As to these facts there does not appear to be any reason to doubt. But the plaintiff in the issue alleges that John Marshall, of Longformacus, long prior to his marriage in 1750, had married another Margaret Marshall, by whom he had a son, William, who was the father of the testator. The plaintiff's allegation is, that William Marshall, the testator's father, was the son of John Marshall, of Longformacus, and the half-brother of the children of that John, who were the issue of the marriage which took place in 1750. Whether William Marshall was so connected with John and his family is the question to be determined. If he was, it is not disputed that Peter, the son of John, was next of kin of the testator at the time of his death. When, in cases of this kind, we speak of evidence and proof, we must be understood to mean such evidence and proof as the law allows, and as the nature of the case admits of. In cases where the whole evidence is traditionary, when it consists entirely of family reputation or of statements of declarations made by persons who died long ago, it must be taken with such allowances and also with such suspicions, as ought reasonably to be attached to it. When family reputation, or declarations of kindred made in a former age, are the subject of evidence, and the reputation is of long standing, or the declarations are of old date, the memory as to the source of the reputation, or as to the persons who made the declarations, can rarely be characterized by perfect accuracy. What is true may become blended with, and scarcely distinguishable from, something that is erroneous; the detection of error in any part of the statement necessarily throws doubt upon the whole statement, and yet all that is material to the case may be perfectly true; and if the whole be rejected as false because error in some part is proved, the greatest injustice may be done. All testimony is subject to such errors, and testimony of this kind is more particularly so; and however difficult it may be to discover the truth, in cases where there can be no demonstration, and where every conclusion which may be drawn is subject to some doubt or uncertainty, or to some opposing probabilities, the Courts are bound to adopt the conclusion which appears to rest on the most solid foundation. On the late trial, the plaintiff examined five witnesses to prove the kindred. Four of them were children of Robert Marshall, the son of John. The fifth was William Jeffrey. They had all of them made affidavits in the Master's office, and all of them had been examined on the former trial, so that the defendants were fully prepared to cross-examine them, and to bring, with full effect, before the judge and the jury, any inconsistent statement in the evidence given by them on different occasions. It appears that in the evidence of the children of Robert Marshall there are very considerable discrepancies, discrepancies as to the members of the family from whom the information is alleged to have been received, discrepancies also as to some facts which are distinctly stated to be within the knowledge of the witnesses. I do not think that the veracity or even the accuracy of an ignorant and illiterate person is to be conclusively tested by comparing an affidavit, which he has made, with his testimony given upon an oral examination in open Court. We have too much experience of the great infirmity of affidavit evidence. When the witness is illiterate and ignorant, the language presented to the Court is not his: it is, and must be, the language of the person who prepares the affidavit; and it may be, and too often is, the expression of that person's erroneous inference as to the meaning of the language used by the witness himself; and however carefully the affidavit may be read over to the witness, he may not understand what is said in language so different from that which he is accustomed to use. Having expressed his meaning in his own language, and finding it translated by a person on whom he relies, into language not his own, and which he does not perfectly understand, he is too apt to acquiesce; and testimony not intended by him is brought before the Court as his. Again, evidence taken on affidavit, being taken ex parte, is almost always incomplete and often inaccurate, sometimes from partial suggestions, and sometimes from the want of suggestions and inquiries, without the aid of which, the witness may be unable to recal the connected collateral circumstances, necessary for the correction of the first suggestions of his memory, and for his accurate recollection of all that belongs to the subject. For these and other reasons, I do not think that discrepancies between the affidavit and the oral testimony of a witness are conclusive against the testimony of the witness. It is further to be observed, that witnesses, and particularly ignorant and illiterate witnesses, must always be liable to give imperfect or erroneous evidence, even when orally examined in open Court. The novelty of the situation, the agitation and hurry which accompanies it, the cajolery or intimidation to which the witness may be subjected, the want of questions calculated to excite those recollections which might clear up every difficulty, and the confusion occasioned by cross-examination, as it is too often conducted, may give rise to important errors and omissions; and the truth is to be elicited not by giving equal weight to every word the witness may have uttered, but by considering all the words with reference to the particular occasion of saying them, and to the personal demeanour and deportment of the witness during the examination. All the discrepancies which occur, and all that the witness says in respect of them, are to be carefully attended to, and the result, according to the special circumstances of each case, may be, either that the testimony must be altogether rejected, on the ground that the witness has said that which is untrue, either wilfully or under self-delusion, so strong as to invalidate all that he has said, or else the result must be, that the testimony must, as to the main purpose, be admitted, notwithstanding discrepancies which may have arisen from innocent mistake, extending to collateral matters, but perhaps not affecting the main question in any important degree. One of the reasons which induced me to grant a new trial on the former occasion was, that the discrepancies between the affidavits and the oral testimony on the first trial might, if possible, be explained, or, at all events, that the discrepancies might be distinctly brought under the consideration of the judge and of the jury. This has now been done; the evidence given by affidavit, the evidence orally given on the first trial, and the evidence orally given on the last trial, have been compared and contrasted. Looking at the statement of what passed, as it appears on paper, I own that I find nothing which I consider to be satisfactory as an explanation of the differences; but having regard to the nature of the testimony, seeing that the demeanour of the witnesses during the examination and cross-examination to which they were subjected was under the observation of the jury and of the judge, and that the judge is satisfied with the verdict, I do not think that the discrepancies in the evidence of the Marshalls afford a sufficient reason for granting a new trial in this case.

THE PROPERTY LAWYER.

AN ACT TO SIMPLIFY THE TRANSFER OF PROPERTY (7 & 8 Vict. c. 26).

No. II.

Having some time since made a few hasty introductory observations on this statute, we now proceed to remark on its various clauses.

Passing over for the present the first clause in the Act, the "Interpretation Clause" as it is called, which we shall have occasion from time to time to advert to, we come to this clause:

That every person may convey by any deed, without livery of seizin or enrolment, or a prior lease, all such freehold land as he might, before the passing of this Act, have conveyed by lease and release, and every such conveyance shall take effect as if it had been made by lease and release.

This important clause creates a new method of conveying freehold estates; it does not supersede or render inoperative, or at all interfere with, the assurances now in use; it simply makes an addition to the number; and under its authority, a deed expressing in plain intelligible language the intention of the parties, without technical phrases or peculiarities, will, after the 31st December next, be sufficient to "convey freehold lands," and will be as effectual for that purpose as a feoffment with livery of seizin, a bargain and sale enrolled, a lease and release, a release referring to the statute dispensing with a lease for a year, or any other method of assurance; for the clause before us declares that such a deed shall have all the effect of a lease and release; and a subsequent clause (the seventh) deprives every other assurance of any greater effect.

Two main questions then arise; who can convey, and what can be conveyed by the deed thus introduced?

The words of the clause are, "Every person" may convey, &c. By the interpretation clause, the word "person" is made to include a corporation as well as an individual. Hitherto, from the incompetency of a corporation to be seised to an use, the common plan in conveying to a corporate body has been, instead of a lease for a year, to make a demise at common law. After the 31st of December, however, a corporation, whether sole or aggregate, may convey by a deed under this Act. From the generality of the language, "every person," it has been suggested that a married woman may convey her interest in freehold by a statutory deed, without acknowledgment, and that an infant may likewise pass his interest by a similar deed. This is obviously not the case, for (setting aside for the present the question whether the Act intended in any degree to do away with personal disqualifications, a question which we may have to consider hereafter) a party will be empowered to do by a deed under this clause only what he can now do by a lease and release. A lease and release, without acknowledgment, will not now pass a married woman's interest in freeholds; neither, therefore, will a deed under this clause without acknowledgment; but the converse is equally true. As a lease and release with acknowledgment will now pass her interest, so after the 31st of December will a deed with a similar acknowledgment, for the deed takes the place of the lease and release.

For the like reason an infant will be unable to convey by a deed under the clause, as before, for he cannot now make a valid conveyance by lease and release. In like manner a deed by a tenant in tail to bar or enlarge the entail must be enrolled pursuant to the provisions in the Fines and Recoveries Act, and when so enrolled will be effectual. A question, indeed, has arisen, whether a tenant in tail can resort to the Act before us for such a purpose, in consequence of the following words towards the end of the 5th section:—"No deed shall, by force of this Act, bar or enlarge any estate tail." These words, it has been considered, take the case of a tenant in tail out of the Act, and any assurance by him under its provisions, for the purpose of "barring or enlarging" his estate tail, will therefore be inoperative. We are disposed to think otherwise. The clause to which the words in question are appended enables "any person to convey by any deed" a variety of contingent and executory interests. It was probably feared that the language used would be extensive enough to include estates tail, and to guard against such a construction, and that only, the restrictive words in question were inserted. But waiving that, and attributing to the words their full literal import, our notion is simply this—we do not contend that a deed by a tenant in tail will, "by virtue of this Act," have a disentailing effect; but we say that such a deed will (as declared by the 2nd section) operate as a lease and release; and as a lease and release, when perfected according to the provisions of the Fines and Recoveries Act, will bar or enlarge an estate tail, a deed under this Act, perfected in like manner, will have the like effect.

In construing this clause, it must be borne in mind that the new form of conveyance is only a substitute for a lease and release—that whatever can be done by the latter assurance may, after the 31st December, be done by the former, but nothing further; and wherever an additional ceremony is requisite to complete a transfer by lease and release, that ceremony must equally attend any deed taking effect under the provisions of the Act before us. We press this consideration, because we conceive that, keeping it in view, the clause is freed from obscurity; and the points of difficulty which we have seen started have arisen from attributing some fancied peculiarity in the new conveyance. The only alteration in the common form of deeds necessary to bring them within the operation of this clause will be the omission of the awkward and absurd reference now required to the Act dispensing with a lease for a year.

We proceed to consider what may be conveyed by the new form of deed. The words of the clause are "All such freehold land as he might have conveyed by lease and release." Land, by the interpretation clause, extends to "manors, advowsons, messuages, lands, tithes, hereditaments, whether corporeal or incorporeal, to any undivided share thereof, and to any estate or interest therein, and to money subject to be invested in the purchase of land or any interest therein." Consequently, every kind of freehold hereditaments and every kind of freehold interest therein, or in any money which, according to the rules of equity, is to be considered as land, may be the subject of conveyance under this Act; but it must be freehold. Now, by the interpretation clause, that word is made to extend to "customary freehold, or such customary lands as will pass by deed or deed and surrender, and not by surrender only." There is considerable ambiguity in this definition. Lands of this nature are conveyed in different ways, according to the customs of different manors; in some by deed, sometimes with, sometimes without, admittance; in others, by surrender with admittance; in others, again, it is optional to use either a deed or a surrender with admittance; and we gather from the definition in question, that in others they pass by deed and surrender, of course with admittance, as the effect of a surrender is to vest the estate in the lord. In the definition in question nothing is said about admittance, and it will be a question, in consequence, what customary lands are included; and for that purpose it will probably be necessary to determine the meaning of the word "pass," whether it means a complete transfer, or such a conveyance only as takes the estate out of the prior owner, without reference to the party IN whom it vests it, whether the lord or the party intended to be benefited; because if it mean the former only, such lands only as may be transferred without admittance would be within the Act; the conseqence of which would be that by far the greater part of the customary lands in the country would be excluded. For the purpose, however, of the clause before us, the question is not material, for unless the method of conveying customary lands according to the custom of the manor of which they are held, be on lease and release (and we doubt whether in any manor this is the case), such lands are not within the purview of this clause, and cannot be conveyed by the deed which it authorizes. And if in any case the custom of the manor sanctions a conveyance by lease and release, the customary lands in that manor will be within the clause, and may be conveyed by deed accordingly.

Appended to the clause which we have been considering is the following proviso: "Provided always, that every such deed shall be chargeable with the same stamp duty as would have been chargeable if such conveyance had been made by lease and release;" i. e. the same stamp duty must be paid as at present. An idea has got abroad that, under this proviso, the lease for a year stamp will be chargeable upon every conveyance of freeholds. Not so, however; if the conveyance be made under this Act, that stamp must be affixed, but in no other case. The language of the proviso is, "every SUCH deed," referring to the deed mentioned in the previous part of the clause. Consequently, a grant of a reversion, an appointment in exercise of a power, &c. may, after the 31st December, be as well made without a lease for a year stamp as it it can be so made now.

The 3rd section of the Act enacts, "that no partition, exchange, or assignment of any freehold or leasehold land shall be valid at law unless the same shall be made by deed."

This clause does not interfere with equity, which will, therefore, act upon agreements for partition, &c. as heretofore.

At common law, partition between joint tenants and tenants in common required a deed; not so in the case of coparceners, between whom a partition by parol was sufficient. (Co. Litt. 169 a.) At common law, also, an exchange by parol of corporeal hereditaments was good, but a deed was necessary to effect an exchange of incorporeal hereditaments. (Co. Litt. 50 a.) Assignments, too, at common law were partly by parol and partly by deed. The Statute of Frauds, however, required a writing in all the preceding cases of partition by parol, exchange by parol, and assignments by parol. After the 31st of December the above distinctions will no longer exist at law, and every partition, exchange, and assignment of freehold or leasehold land, to be valid at law, must be by deed. In practice, a deed has always been resorted to, so that the effect of the clause is to render imperative the course which has been ordinarily pursued.

CHARGE BY JUDGMENT.

The case of Houlditch v. Collins (5 Beav. 497) raised the curious point whether when a creditor had recovered a judgment in this country, and thereby obtained a charge on the debtor's lands, under the 13th sect. of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and afterwards arrested the debtor in Jersey upon mesne process for the same debt, the charge upon the land was not forfeited under the 16th sect. of the same stat. which enacts:—

That if any judgment creditor, who, under the powers of this Act, shall have obtained any charge, or be entitled to the benefit of any security whatsoever, shall afterwards, and before the property so charged or secured shall have been converted into money or realized, and the produce thereof applied towards payment of the judgment debt, cause the person of the judgment debtor to be taken or charged in execution upon such judgment, then, and in such case, such judgment creditor shall be deemed and taken to have relinquished all right and title to the benefit of such charge or security, and shall forfeit the same accordingly.

It was argued by Turner and Pigott, for the debtor, that the object of the Act was, that the party should not be imprisoned for a debt while his creditor had a lien upon his property, which charge of itself prevented a sale for the purpose of realizing the money to pay the debt. The 16th sect. provides that if a creditor "causes" his debtor to be taken in execution, the charge on the estate shall be forfeited; and by a liberal construction of the clauses, the same consequences would be the result of any course of proceeding taken by the creditor on the judgment which might operate to imprison the debtor's person.

On the other side, it was argued by Pemberton and Rolt, that the section does not apply to an execution obtained on a judgment in a foreign court after judgment here. Besides, the debtor in this case has only been arrested on mesne process.

The Master of the Rolls, after reciting the facts and the clause in the statute, observed:—

The single question, therefore, in this case must be, whether the judgment creditors have caused the person of the judgment debtor to be taken and charged in execution upon the judgment; because if they had done so, then the charge is relinquished; if they have not done that, then the Act of Parliament does not apply. What has been done in this case is to adopt proceedings in the court at Jersey for the recovery of the same sum which was recovered by the judgment here. The documents, as they are set out in the plea, plainly, as it appears to me, indicate, not execution upon the judgment (which of course could not be had in a foreign court), but a proceeding to recover, by a new action, the amount of that which had been ascertained to be due by the judgment here. It is mesne process, and not a taking in execution upon the judgment; there is no taking upon the judgment. Now, without considering whether such a proceeding would have been allowed by the Legislature, if the point had been particularly considered, it is sufficient for me to say, that this does not appear to me to be a case comprised within the terms of the sixteenth clause. If the point had been the subject of consideration, there would seem to be great reason for hesitating in enacting a clause prohibiting such a proceeding. For here the defendant has withdrawn himself from this jurisdiction, and placed himself in another, where he may or may not have property, but which property, if he has it, can be followed by means of the authority of the court there. This act of the defendant may render it absolutely necessary for the plaintiffs, for the purpose of maintaining their rights, to adopt another proceeding in that court, and one of the first steps in that proceeding may be arrest in mesne process.

Consent Causes, and Short Causes, every Tuesday at the sitting of the Court.

Notice.—Petitions must be presented, and copies left with the secretary, on or before the Saturday preceding the Tuesday on which it is intended they should be heard. Those requiring service must be presented on or before the Friday preceding.

Sir William Follett.—(From a Correspondent.)—We are gratified to be enabled, on the information of a gentleman who returned to this country from Naples on Saturday last, to announce the great benefit the Attorney-General has derived from his tour in Italy. Dr. Bright has been in company with the hon. and learned gentleman as his medical adviser, and so satisfactory is Sir William's health, that the professional duties of Dr. Bright are now dispensed with, and that gentleman is on his way to this country. It is deemed necessary for the entire restoration of Sir William's health that he should remain some months longer in the genial climate of the south.

Munificent Donation.—Mr. Serjeant Bompas, who died suddenly a short time since, left a widow and a large family in somewhat indifferent circumstances; but his professional brethren esteemed him so highly that a subscription was entered into for the benefit of his family, to which Sir Thomas Wilde contributed the princely sum of 1,000 guineas.—Derby Reporter.

Central Criminal Court.—The 132d session commenced on Monday, with a calendar of 182 cases; of which six are of murder, and ten of attempts to murder or maim.

Cheshire Winter Assizes.—It is confidently rumoured, in quarters likely to be in possession of authentic information on the subject, that there will be a winter assizes for this county, some time in the month of January, and that Baron Rolfe will, in all probability, be the judge.—Stockport Advertiser.

Mr. Brewster and Mr. Pigott are likely to succeed Messrs. Townsend and Goold as Masters in Chancery. It is said that Mr. Corballis succeeds Mr. Brewster as counsel at the Castle. The vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr. O'Hanlon, as counsel to the Irish office in London, is to be filled up. Mr. Batty, a member of the Irish bar, is to have the appointment. The learned gentleman was associated with the present Attorney-General in publishing law reports.—Limerick Chronicle.

The Movement in Retreat.—It will be seen by an advertisement in another column, that Mr. Wilson has been transferred to the debtors' side of the prison. The exertions of the independent press have thus been crowned with complete success. Sir James Graham peremptorily ordered him to be removed. Now, gentlemen of the Court—of the Prison Board; now grovelling parasites of that court and of that board, tell us, if you please, which was lawful—imprisonment in a felon's cell or in a debtor's ward, for contempt? The board is now shamefully violating the law, relaxing its wholesome rigour, or Mr. Wilson's previous punishment was grossly illegal. Upon which horn of the dilemma will you choose to be transfixed? There can be no mistake about the matter. Mr. Wilson was confined in a felon's cell; he is now in a debtor's room. To which of the two essentially distinct modes of treatment is he legally liable?—Jersey Times.

Revising Barristers.—The duties of the revising barristers for the revision of the lists of voters for the present year are drawing to a close. The first revision, in the year 1833, cost upwards of 30,000*l.* in payments to the barristers for their expenses; but under the Registration of Voters Act their charges were limited to 200 guineas each. It appears that the payment to the barristers, including their expenses, now amounts to the fixed yearly sum of 14,700*l.* More appeals are expected to the Court of Common Pleas in the present than occurred in the preceding revision. Only 13 appeals were made last year, of which ten were decided in favour of the respondents, and three for the appellants. The Court awarded no costs to either party, on the ground that the subject-matter of the appeals presented a fair and reasonable ground of doubt on the construction of the statute and the propriety of the determination of the revising barristers.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—The last number of your valuable paper contains a letter signed "G. R. Goodman," of Brighton, in which he states that Mr. Hardy, of Little East-street, Lewes, is not his clerk, and that he has no connection with him, either directly or indirectly.

I know nothing of the affair which has given rise to this intimation, nor of the circumstances which may have produced a severance of the connection between Mr. Goodman and Mr. Hardy; but it so happens that, on more than one occasion, it has been my lot to meet the latter as the clerk and representative of Mr Goodman, at Lewes, and upon those occasions Mr. Goodman's name appeared upon the door-post of the house in which Mr. Hardy officiated as his clerk.

Mr. Goodman having, however, now publicly disavowed all connection with Mr. Hardy, perhaps he will be pleased to inform you whether Mr. Hardy is, or ever was, upon the roll of attorneys, and also whether that person has used his name, and acted as his clerk, without his authority or knowledge.

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

Wm. Crowe.

ATTORNEYS' GOWNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—The attention of our order having, in the general movement of the Profession towards self-purification and advancement in public estimation, been drawn to this practice, and the resumption of it having, for the reasons succinctly stated in my letter of the 30th ult. been met on all sides with approbation, it now becomes necessary to inquire how this beneficial measure may be carried into operation.

It is universally admitted that a gown is an ancient right of attorneys and solicitors, as indefeasible as that of barristers or the bearers of academical degrees, as proved by investiture on admission, &c.

Its many advantages are also admitted, and abundant regret manifested at its falling into disuse.

In this position, many have expressed their readiness to put prejudice out of countenance, by at once adopting the gown as a right, and as a thing of beneficial tendency, and are still prepared—in the absence of a more general movement—to do so, relying on its reasonableness and convenience to insure, by degrees, it general resumption.

But the interest manifested from all parts of the country in the proposition proves in a very satisfactory manner the practicability of a simultaneous movement; and with this view we have the following hints thrown out:—

1st. Mr. Lott, of 43, Bow-lane, suggests "that each member of the Profession in the various towns should sign a consent to adopt the gown, and forward it to the Law Times or to the Law Institution."

2nd. Mr. Melland, of Chesterfield, thinks that the practice "should be submitted to the judgment and verdict of the congregated Law Societies."

3rd. J. B. W. (why write anonymously?) says, "Let those in favour of the revival request the leaders on their circuits, upon the opening of the commission, to announce to the judge their intention, and solicit his lordship's direction to the officers of the court to take cognizance of the attorney's gown."

4th. "A. B." thinks that "the matter should be taken up by the Incorporated Law Society, or the Legal Protective Society, and that it would be necessary to bring the matter in an official way before the judges;" and in the same spirit "One, &c." "sincerely hopes the ensuing term will not pass away without their lordships' attention having been drawn to the subject in a manner that may induce them to give their opinion upon it."

Availing ourselves in due season of all these suggestions, permit me to say, that the practice having fallen into desuetude, I think with Mr. Lott that the PRELIMINARY STEP in this movement is to obtain among our professional brethren A GENERAL AND PUBLIC EXPRESSION OF OPINION. It is not enough to say the opinion exists, we must have A DEMONSTRATION of it.

And as this cannot be obtained in an irregular, desultory manner, permit me to suggest a practical plan of securing it.

There are now, I learn from the LAW TIMES of last week, 2,776 solicitors practising in London, and 6,560 in the different towns of England and Wales, making the aggregate number of the members of our branch of the Profession nine thousand three hundred and thirty-six.

My plan is, that a circular lithographic letter should be issued to every practising solicitor in England and Wales, inviting their attention to this movement, alleging the reasons for it—mutatis mutandis—contained in my letter of the 30th ult. and requesting them to signify their concurrence, by signing a short form to be appended on the fly-sheet, and re-addressed, in pursuance of a part of the plan I shall after mention, to the editor of the LAW TIMES.

If, as declared in a correspondent's letter in your number of the 10th inst. "there cannot be a dissenting voice" from the proposition, we should at once have acquired the complete power of carrying out the object simultaneously by a public declaration of the time from which the observance should commence.

But supposing that, from various causes,—apathy and the rest,—only one half of the Profession expressed affirmatively their concurrence, still we should have the names of four thousand six hundred and sixty-eight declared adherents, and then, indeed, with such a brief as this list—published in a supplemental sheet of the LAW TIMES—might the leaders on the circuits be requested to direct their lordships' attention to the fact of the Order of Solicitors having recognized the propriety of a return to their ancient professional costume; then might the Law Societies be asked to sanction by their approbation a practice coming to them recommended by the publicly expressed opinion of the Profession, and all petty local opposition be crushed by the weight of the demonstration. But without this, I think isolated attempts and proposals may prove inefficient, and possibly fail in result.

All this may be easily effected through the medium of our invaluable ally the LAW TIMES, and by the agency of the LAW TIMES office and its extensive machinery for printing and communication.

'n expense would be incurred—but what would it be among so many? The publisher would, no doubt, readily furnish an estimate, and I propose a subscription to defray it. I am informed that 70*l*. more or less, would cover the expense of postages, printing, paper, folding, &c.; and I have no doubt that a sufficient number of gentlemen will readily be found to put down their names for, say 1*l*. each, for the purpose: such subscribers to form an honorary committee, and the names o. six or eight of them to be appended to the circulars on behalf of themselves and the rest.

A solicitor, a member of one of the oldest firms in this town, has mentioned to me his willingness to become one of such committee, and hereby expressing mine, I beg to call on those gentlemen who have already declared their approval of the movement, and on others who feel interested in its progress, to join us in this simple and efficient plan for effecting our object, by forwarding their names to the LAW TIMES as subscribers to carry it out.

I am, Sir, yours truly,
GEORGE JOHN DURRANT.

Chelmsford, Oct. 21, 1844.

ATTORNEYS' GOWNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I am much pleased to see that the suggestion of wearing gowns contained in my letter to you in the LAW TIMES of the 28th ult. has met with the approval of several of my brethren in the Profession, and I think that the reasons mentioned by Mr. Durrant, in his letter in the LAW TIMES of the 5th inst. are quite sufficient to convince us that the wearing gowns while attending court would be very desirable. I am very glad Mr. Abell, in his letter in the same number, has informed us that the gown can be procured of Messrs. Adams and Ede, Chancery-lane, it being very desirable that a strict uniformity in the make and material should be observed.

I beg to add (by way of making some sort of a beginning), that I should be glad to receive the names of those gentlemen who will adopt and recommend the practice, together with any suggestions that they may think proper to make, as to the best mode of carrying the same universally into execution. I shall then beg of you to allow me to publish the same in your paper, in order to shew the Profession at large that we are determined to wear "the gown, and nothing but the gown."

I shall take the liberty of heading the list with the names of Durrant, G. J. Chelmsford,

Abell, F. G. Colchester,
Chamberlain, A. Portsea,
Church, J. H. Colchester,
Melland, W. Chesterfield,
Lott, T. 43, Bow-lane, London,
Shapland, J. T. South Molton, the whole of us having signified our approval of wearing gowns in your valuable paper.

I am yours, &c.
J. T. SHAPLAND.

South Molton, Oct. 21, 1844.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

An ATTORNEY at Cheltenham thus offers his opinion upon the subject of PROFESSIONAL COSTUME:—

I quite agree with those of your correspondents who advocate its adoption, but I fear it will never become universal, unless the judges make an order for it. If the matter is to be discretionary, some will adopt, whilst others will reject it, which would probably do more harm than good. Your numerous correspondents have presented two reasons to my mind unanswerable: first, the facilities the gown would give the wearer in his necessary access to courts of justice, and conference with coun el, and as forming a distinctive badge, which would outwardly mark the real from the sham attorney. If other grounds were wanting, surely these should be conclusive with the judges for promulgating an order that all attorneys and solicitors, in their attendance in the courts on their professional business, should wear their ancient costume. If it be the general opinion of the Profession that such an order should be made, and the practice thus become universal, would it not be advisable to communicate with the heads of the higher branches of the Profession, with a view to an application to the respective courts upon the subject? I cannot but think that after the disclosure of the disgraceful practices existing in and out of the Profession that have recently come to light, the judges would gladly avail themselves of the expressed desire of the attorneys and solicitors to encourage a distinctive garb, if by such means a stop could be put (in however slight a degree) to such practices.

I earnestly hope that the hint of your correspondent "A. Chamberlain," in the concluding p rt of his letter, will be adopted, and that an application will be made to the judges in the ensuing Term, by counsel practising in the respective courts of law and equity, that orders be made that no attorney or solicitor appear in court on and after a stated time without a gown, and that counsel shall not be permitted in court to receive briefs from any person or persons who shall not be invested with such gown or other distinctive garb. Such an order would produce universal acquiescence. It will be observed that such an order as this would prevent any brief being presented by a clerk. That might be a trifling inconvenience, but it would, I think, be more than counterbalanced by the great good that would arise to the Profession generally from the extermination of that nest of hornets, the "Sham Attorneys."

B.* writes thus on the subject that appears to excite so much interest in the Profession—ATTORNEYS' GOWNS:—

In many of the letters published in your valuable journal on this subject, I notice that constant reference is made to the difficulty experienced by the members of our Profession in obtaining admittance to and proper accommodation in the assize and sessions courts, as well as the inconvenience of being unable, even when there, to communicate properly with the barrister you employ. I would beg to add my testimony to these facts, and to say that to so great a height has this crying evil risen with us, that our Law Society thought it necessary, at a late meeting, to pass the following resolution:—

"That the secretary be requested to bring before the notice of the sheriff and his deputies at each assizes the necessity of retaining sufficient and proper accommodation in the courts for the Bar, the members of the Profession, and their clerks; and respectfully to request that all others, save witnesses, reporters, and other parties whose attendance is actually requisite, may be refused admission to the body of the court."

I would add, that in our assize courts a very large space is specially allotted to the public, while the space set apart as the body of the court wherein the Profession should have proper accommodation is proportionably small, although, if strictly reserved, it would be large enough; and I would fain hope that other societies will adopt resolutions in accordance with the above; when, I doubt not, the evil would be in a great measure remedied.

That the wearing of gowns, either upon the recommendation of the different law societies, or upon an order from the judges, would be attended with still more beneficial effects, I have not one moment's doubt; and whilst, being only a young practitioner, I should have some scruples, as an individual, in adopting any particular dress, I should, as a member of the general body, be much pleased to find it adopted.

An "ESSEX ATTORNEY" sends the following:

Will any of your readers inform me, through your journal, whether there is any law, and if so, where it is to be found, prohibiting persons, not regularly admitted attorneys, appearing in courts of justice in gowns? for it will be worse than useless for attorneys to adopt the gown should there be no law to that effect. I am induced to ask this question by reason of having it hinted to me by an attorney's clerk (not an articled clerk, but one who plys for criminal briefs at the Essex assizes and quarter sessions, professedly for his master, and in his name, but in reality for his own profit, his master never gracing the courts with his presence, or coming within eighteen miles of them), that should gowns be worn by attorneys, HE, the clerk, intends also to appear at court in one!

The manner in which the criminal practice, at the assizes and quarter sessions in Essex, is conducted, is infinitely more disgraceful than at the Central Criminal Court, for briefs are openly received in court by counsel from persons well known to them as not being attorneys, but who indorse an attorney's name on the briefs.

I have called the attention of counsel to it repeatedly, and the only answer I receive from them is, that they know the practice is bad, but what can they (the counsel) do in the matter? An attorney's name is always indorsed on the brief, and therefore they presume the briefs come from such attorneys, or at least that their names are indorsed with their consent; yet the same counsel admit they never saw these attorneys! One of these plyers is a cigar vendor, residing at Chelmsford (and well known by all the counsel attending the criminal courts there to be so), and he professes to be the clerk of an attorney (whose name he always indorses on the briefs he gets up) residing at least fourteen miles from thence, and who never shews himself either at assizes or sessions, and in fact his supposed clients never see or hear of him.

Another Correspondent suggests a new argument in favour of a Professional Costume.

The proposed resumption by attorneys of their proper professional costume seems to meet with almost universal countenance, and cannot fail speedily to be carried out. Among the many advantages the use of a befitting robe has suggested to my mind, is one not yet mentioned by any of your correspondents, viz. that as in each Profession, including the Bar, there are distinctive habits worn by its different members. pointing out the rank, standing, or attainments of the individual, so the same rule might be well applied to the attorney where he holds office under the Crown, &c. or has gained, under the present system of examination on admission, a high degree of merit. Thus, would I have the solicitors to the various Government offices, an attorney being a coroner, town clerk, or clerk to justices, &c. distinguished by some mark indicating his station or office. A badge upon the sleeve of the robe, embroidered in silk and metal thread, would well effect this, or there might be adopted a facing or hood of fur or coloured stuff. To instance, the badge the solicitor to the Admiralty would bear the Lords Commissioners' arms; an attorney, being a coroner, a crown, and so on. Such marks would speedily be known and recognized, and could not fail to be of use in and out of Court, and lead to a proper spirit of emulation.

A "SOLICITOR," writing from Liverpool, differs from the majority of correspondents on the subject of ATTORNEYS' GOWNS.

Although I admit that some badge of distinction is desirable, for the reasons stated by your correspondents, I think that much inconvenience would arise from its adoption to managing and articled clerks, when intrusted by their principals with the conduct of prosecutions, causes, &c. at an assize town or court. Adopt the system of badges, and how are they to gain admittance to the court? The Jacks in office will then be more unreasonable than now, and woe to that unfortunate unbadged who presents him self for admission, even though armed with brief or blue-bag. These will fail to gain for him a passage, if the insignia of office, the "open sesame" badge be wanting.

To obviate this inconvenience it will be found necessary to give law clerks also some badge, as they are often obliged to thread their way in and out of court much more frequently than the attorney, who, once admitted and seated, has comparatively a snug berth of it.

Cannot some of your correspondents contrive for us some distinctive badge less cumbersome in a crowded court than a gown? In a squeeze they must greatly retard one's progress, and stand a fair chance of being docked of their dignified flow. Besides, without a robing-room, where are we to stow away, doff, and put on our gowns? I fear that as soon as the novelty is worn off, instead of congratulating ourselves on our toga, we shall find it a great incumbrance.

A "Country Solicitor," from Wilts, approves the suggestion as to Professional Costume.

Having on several occasions experienced the greatest possible inconvenience and obstruction in courts of assize and quarter sessions, I most cordially advocate the proposal that attorneys should wear a distinctive badge on the above occasions; and though I have never seen the scarf alluded to by your correspondent X Y, I have little doubt but that it would fully answer the purpose designed, not only as being less cumbersome, but also more economical than a gown; for which latter reason I am induced to trouble you with these few lines, hoping my professional brethren will generally adopt it.

A Barrister thus addresses us from "the Temple," on the subject of Attorneys' Gowns:—

It may be satisfactory to those attorneys who have, I think most judiciously, determined to adopt the professional costume, to know that the practice of wearing the gown is universal in the Irish courts of law.

"A Solicitor" thus notices the query which appeared a fortnight since on the subject of Letters before Action:—

I see in your last week's Journal, a question by Mr. Cooper, of Congleton, "Whether an attorney can legally charge the party to whom he writes, demanding debt, for the letter, if the debt is tendered before the writ issues?" This is an important question, and one which has engaged my attention, in common no doubt with that of other members of the Profession. I cannot pretend to answer it as an "experienced practitioner" myself, but I have asked the opinions of some of the most extensive common law practitioners in London and in the country, and I find they agree that the defendant cannot be compelled to pay for the letter, as no costs are recognized where an action has not been commenced, though the taxing officer allows the charge for the letter if the writ is actually issued. It certainly is a great injustice that every backward or dishonest debtor should be enabled to put his creditors to the expense of a letter, before he can be compelled to pay a lawful demand; but I believe the creditor has no remedy, as no respectable solicitor is willing to issue a writ till he has written a letter demanding payment. I have known a solicitor, however, do so under the following circumstances (and I think he was justified in pursuing the course he did). He had written demanding payment of an account long due; the defendant paid immediately on receipt of the letter, but refused to pay the costs of it; the solicitor, being of the opinion above stated, did not insist upon the costs, but warned the defendant that it was the last letter he would ever get for nothing. A very few days afterwards, another client employed the same solicitor to demand payment of a debt from the same defendant; the solicitor issued a writ immediately, without letter, and put the defendant of course to the expense of some two pounds, which I cannot help considering he was rightly served; and I should assuredly recommend all solicitors to adopt the same plan under similar circumstances.

If you think this letter of sufficient interest, you will oblige me by inserting it.

Another "Subscriber" at Cheltenham treats thus of the subject of Letter before Action:—

Your correspondent Mr. Cooper inquires in your last number whether an attorney can compel a debtor, to whom he has written for payment of debt, to pay for such letter, in case tender of the debt be made before action commenced.

This is a question which ought to be set at rest; for at present the prevailing opinion seems to be that he cannot.

There cannot, however, be a doubt but an attorney ought to be able to make a debtor pay for both letters and attendances before action, as they are for the debtor's advantage, and frequently save him a much heavier expense; but unless he can do so, it is not to be wondered at that attorneys are to be found who will never write such letters at all, but issue process at once, the costs of which they can legally enforce, and to ten times the amount.

If the law sanctions this, they are, perhaps, justifiable in following its dictation, which seems to be this, "If you write to the party first, and charge him 5s. or 6s. 8d. for so doing, he shall not be compelled to pay you any thing; but you shall trust to his honour. But if you put him to the expense of a writ, he shall pay for it." And I am sorry to say there are attorneys to be found who will not only advise a client to tender without paying for the letter, but will actually make such tender themselves, and charge the party perhaps twice as much for their attendance as the charge made for the letter.

Innumerable instances of this sort have occurred within my own knowledge, and by men who rank as respectable attorneys.

But let us see how the law stands. Mr. Chitty, in his General Practice, vol. 3, page 137, distinctly states, "that an attorney cannot be prejudiced by his courtesy in writing, and actually sending, a letter; and that the trouble of so doing must, if he insist, be paid by the opponent;" and "that he may proceed in the action, unless the same be paid for, even after payment of the debt, before a writ issues;" and quotes Morrison v. Simmers, reported in Bar. & Adolph. 559. But with the greatest respect for Mr. Chitty's opinion, I am tempted to doubt whether this dictum is fully borne out by that case, as there the writ issued before the money was actually received by the plaintiff in town.

Where, however, a demand of payment has previously been made by the plaintiff of the defendant, before the attorney's letter is written, I think there is little doubt but defendant can, in that case, be compelled to pay for the letter; for if a tender of the debt without the costs be made, and plaintiff's attorney refuses to accept it, and proceeds to issue a writ, defendant must plead his tender, averring "tout temp prist," and plaintiff might reply a prior demand. But where the attorney's letter is the first demand of payment, it seems to me questionable whether a tender might not be effectually pleaded.

I do not know that I am right; but, if not, I shall be very glad to see the opinion of some of your more learned correspondents on the subject; and perhaps it may lead some of our handy Law Reformers to introduce a clause in some of the very many Acts that are constantly passing for improving the law, to compel a debtor to pay all the expense which his creditor is forced to incur in order to compel payment of a just demand.

A Subscriber thus addresses the Law Times on the subject of the jurisdiction of County Courts:—

Considerable doubts exist in the Profession as to the jurisdiction of these courts. It frequently happens that towns lie on the borders of a county, and debts are contracted by persons living in the adjoining county, and questions arise as to whether they should be sued for debts under 40s. in the county court or the superior courts. Some contend that it is absolutely necessary that plaintiff and defendant should reside, and the cause of action arise, in the same county; others that it is merely necessary that the cause of action should arise and defendant reside in the same county. In support of the former view there is a case of Thom v. Chinnock (1 M. & G. 216; 9 Law J. Rep. N. S.) which appears to decide that both parties must reside and the entire cause of action arise in one county. In support of the latter view there are cases cited in Comyn's Digest (County Court, c. 8) to the effect that "an action cannot be brought in the county court unless the defendant reside and the cause of action arise within the county.

It is a matter of very considerable importance to persons living on the borders of counties as to what is the law of the matter, and many will feel obliged if you, or some of your correspondents, can state whether both plaintiff and defendant must reside in the county, or only the latter, to entitle plaintiff to sue in the county court.

A Correspondent, under the signature of "C." thus forcibly discusses the moot point, whether it be unprofessional to accept agency business on lower terms than those established by custom.

I have, from the commencement, seen with much pleasure, your unremitting and energetic endeavours to uphold the respectability of the Profession, to put down, by well-timed rebuke, all disreputable practices, and to expose to public infamy all dishonest practitioners. There is, however, one subject which has been brought under your notice, upon which you have severely animadverted; but although at first I fully concurred with you, yet subsequent reflection has induced me to entertain a doubt as to the justice of your strictures,—I refer to the practice of doing agency business for less than the usual and authorized scale of remuneration. And in the hope either to have my own scruples removed, or to relieve others from unmerited censure, I venture upon this method of calling your attention, and that of your numerous readers, to this important question.

An attorney, like every other man not blessed with an independence, has to gain his living by his profession, and it would be folly to suppose he could continue his business at a loss, or without expectation of profit. The attorneys who offer to work for lower pay are neither exempt from the necessity of gain, nor dead to the hope of reward; they therefore would not carry on an unprofitable business. What then is the inference? Why, that a lower scale will afford a fair and remunerative return to the attorney for his skill and labour. If this be the fact, why should the man who would be content with moderate gains be pointed at as an object of scorn and detestation? Why should not the same principle regulate an attorney in his dealings with his clients, as it is said, and justly said, should regulate the conduct of every other man? It is very true, that as attorneys must be employed to do certain work, they may combine for the purpose of keeping up their charges; but this would be to introduce all the mischief and to bring upon themselves all the odium of the most hateful monopoly. There are, doubtless, many wealthy, and therefore respectable firms, and individuals, who, charge what they may, will, from their very wealth and respectability, command almost any amount of business; but why should a poorer brother, who has not the advantage of a great name, nor wealth, nor any other element of respectability save skill, honesty, and industry, be debarred from earning in his vocation an humble and moderate living? When we consider that the practice in question is not only free from moral guilt, but that in fact it does precisely what we desire to have done in all other transactions, does it not appear that the hostility to the practice savours more of oppression towards poverty than of virtuous indignation against vice; that it springs rather from selfishness than love of purity? But, in addition to the charge of oppression and selfishness, I fear those who so loudly condemn this practice render themselves obnoxious to the charge of hypocrisy also, for wealth does covertly what it would crush poverty for doing openly. We hear of men purchasing a partnership and paying a large sum as a premium, and this arrangement is perfectly honourable. We also hear of men purchasing a partnership and paying as a premium, not a sum down, but a portion of their profits, they taking a smaller share than would otherwise fall to their lot; and this is a perfectly honourable arrangement, and these men, with the exception of their not being quite so wealthy, are considered quite as respectable as the former. Further, we sometimes hear of men purchasing for a sum of money the agency of a country attorney, and this is an honourable transaction. If, then, there be no dishonour in purchasing an agency business, why should there be any in the mode of payment? If a man can honourably purchase a partnership and pay for it by taking a smaller share of the profits, why should he not be allowed to purchase an agency and pay for it by taking a smaller share of the profits?

I will not take upon myself to decide upon the propriety or impropriety of this practice. It does, however, appear to me that in principle it is unobjectionable, although that principle, like every other, may be carried out by objectionable means. But conceding for a moment that the practice deserves all the reproach which is cast upon it, these observations may perhaps not be altogether useless, as they may induce some of your correspondents to shew the unworthy character of the practice, and remove the doubts of those who are wavering, or are in danger of being led away by the conduct and example of such as consider it no disgrace to be content with small profits.

"A Country Solicitor" repeats the complaint we have so often urged against the practice of judges conducting prosecutions. He says—

Notwithstanding the very excellent article in the eighteenth number of your valuable journal (and which was given greater publicity to by its insertion in several influential country papers at my request) upon the impropriety of "judges playing the part of prosecutors and performing the duties of counsel against the prisoner," I regret to observe that in Berkshire, as well as in most other counties, this highly objectionable practice still prevails, and is, I believe, chiefly to be attributed to the miserable economy of not allowing "briefs for the prosecution" except in what the magistrates please to call "special cases." I have now before me a report of the late Berkshire Quarter Sessions, and I find that out of thirty criminal prosecutions there heard, counsel on behalf of the Crown were employed in thirteen cases only. I would therefore most respectfully urge upon the serious consideration of the magistracy of England the emphatic remark of Mr. Justice Coleridge at

Exeter, "A judge ought never to be put to prosecute," and I would again express an earnest hope that "the whole system of county allowances on criminal prosecutions will be speedily and liberally amended."

"B. H" thus communicates to the Profession another practice of the SHAM LAWYERS, not so well known, because more easily transacted in secrecy —

The exposures which have from time to time appeared in your valuable columns have had a tendency materially to correct the abuses in the common law branch of the Profession, but I have never yet seen any notice taken of law stationers and others not properly qualified being in the habit of drawing and engrossing deeds A case of this description a short time ago came under my notice, I do not doubt that many of your readers will call to mind instances in which such practices have been followed to the detriment of the interests of the Profession, and it will be desirable if any of your correspondents will communicate through your columns any such practice as may come under their notice, this will materially assist in checking such malpractices.

"A F." addressing us from Bolton, asks of the experienced of our readers what is the rule of practice under the following circumstances —

Will some of your numerous correspondents inform me, through the medium of your Journal, what they believe to be the custom or etiquette of the Profession in the undermentioned case?

A mortgages to B In the usual course, A's solicitor furnishes an abstract, and B's solicitor prepares the mortgage, and submits the draft to the solicitor of A, WHO TAKES A COPY OF THE DRAFT A subsequently sells the property mortgaged, and his solicitor, having his own draft abstract and the copy taken by him of the draft mortgage, furnishes an abstract to the purchaser of the whole title Is not this, to say the least, an unusual course? ought he not to have applied to the mortgagee's solicitor to furnish the abstract? and if not of the complete title, at all events of the mortgage?

"AN OLD SUBSCRIBER" at Norwich submits the following query to the experience of our readers

I perceive there is an observation in Stone's Practice (p. 144), on the practice of the petty sessions which, if tenable, ought to be generally known The observation is as follows (in the words of Mr Stone) —

"The recent statute 1 & 2 Vict c 74, not only extends to the recovery of the possession of tenements not exceeding 20*l* a year rent, but also tenements occupied without being liable to any rent"

Perhaps some of your numerous subscribers would point out those portions of the statute which bear upon the latter point, namely, that it extends to the recovery of tenements occupied without being liable to any rent, as, from my recollection of the statute, it is not clear that it goes to effect this object, or at any rate, whether you take the same view

TO SUBSCRIBERS

THE PUBLISHER of the LAW TIMES begs to inform the subscribers, that the subscription for the current half-year is now due, and that if they wish to secure the advantages of pre-payment, they should transmit the same, by post-office order, during the ensuing week It should, however, be understood that it is entirely optional with the subscriber whether he will take the benefit of pre-payment or not

Many subscribers who have sent their volumes to be bound having inclosed one of the former volumes as a pattern, the PUBLISHER begs to say that this is a needless trouble, as a standard copy is kept, by which all are precisely bound so as to observe the most perfect uniformity Therefore it will be only necessary to transmit the numbers comprising the volume (which may be done by post, provided they be tied in a parcel with the ends open) but each packet so transmitted should be marked so as to be identified, and a letter should advise what is the mark, and where the volume is to be sent when completed.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1844

TO READERS

EXTENSIVE arrangements are being made to carry out still more effectually the system of rapid reporting, and the plan of preserving some record of every case in the Common Law Courts, which the LAW TIMES has so successfully begun

For this purpose, and to secure regularity and greater care in the verifying of references to cases cited, &c it has been determined to place two reporters in the Queen's Bench and Exchequer, where there is the greatest press of business We hope thus that the reports will always be brought down to the Wednesday evening, or, at all events, to the Tuesday, preceding publication

We regret that the great length to which the statutes of the last session have extended should have prevented their completion before the crowding upon us of the business of Term. But it was impossible to print them more rapidly, with due regard to variety in our columns, and to the claims of other topics of more immediate interest.

We insert in another place the list of subscribers received since our last report. It will, we are sure, gratify our friends equally with ourselves. Such cordial support demands unwearied exertions on the part of the LAW TIMES to deserve the honour that has been conferred upon it in its adoption as their public organ by so numerous, influential, and intelligent a body as the lawyers of the United Kingdom.

LEGAL PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

WE have received a draft of the rules to be submitted for adoption to the members of this Society at the meeting next week Of course we do not comment upon them in this their imperfect stage, but we may say of the propositions generally, that we highly approve them, and we trust that the meeting will exhibit that unanimity of feeling and resoluteness of purpose which are essential to success in the arduous task its promoters have undertaken. We shall of course report so much of the proceedings as it may be deemed desirable to publish

We are pleased to learn that every day brings numerous and influential accessions to the roll of members

THE JOINT STOCK COMPANIES ACTS.

THE LAW TIMES Edition of these important Statutes, at this time of speculation of such universal interest, is now ready It comprises three statutes, viz the Joint Stock Companies Act, the Banking Companies Act, and the Railways Regulation Act. It is edited by Mr PATERSON, who has introduced a great number of illustrative and explanatory notes, an Introduction, setting forth in order the forms to be observed in the formation of companies and the liabilities of shareholders, and added an Index so very copious, that there is not a topic, however minute, touched upon in the volume, which may not be found under three or four distinct headings We believe that thus it will become a very valuable accession to the office library

SHAM LAWYERS

We have published a great number of documents illustrative of the contrivances to which these vermin resort for the purpose of imposing themselves upon the ignorant as real lawyers, but the richest specimen of its class which has yet reached us is the following, which we copy verbatim et literatim —

SUSSEX

SPECIAL  ORDER.

Proceedings

Yourself and Smith } By virtue of Her Majesty's Original Writ of Justicies, or other Legal Process will be immediately commenced against you after this last application, whereby your Goods, Chattels and Cattle will be liable to be attached by Distringas, in case of Contempt for Non-Appearance, or by Process of Levari in case of

Final Judgment

Therefore an immediate COMPROMISE will be the only means of preventing such coercive proceedings, and you will attend at Hurst Green, or at St. Ann's Lewes, for that purpose.

Dated 10 Oct 1844

To Mr. Henry Crawford, Battle. } Debt & costs as before, Additional, 2s. 6d.

Hutchinson, Attorney in the Courts by Justicies.

 The Copy of the Precipe herein, and the form of Justicies annexed, will give an opportunity of obtaining satisfactory Advice on the Legality of the Proceedings, and the Correctness of the Demand. And NOTICE of such Proceedings will be delivered to your Landlord, not only to prevent any improper protection of property, but also to avoid the plaintiff's liability, if possible, to the payment of one Year's Rent, or any part of such Rent, which might have been previously recovered pursuant to any Act of Parliament now in force.

The indorsement on this precious document is thus:—

Mr. Henry Crawford,

WRIT OF JUSTICIES.

Hutchinson, Atty. & Jus'. Agt.
Dated Lewes 10 Sept. 1844.

Costs 2s. 6d.

Signed
Janett Smith.

We have received some four or five more of like daring impostures, which shall duly appear, but the above is enough for the Law Societies to meditate upon for one week.

Still we strongly incline to the opinion, that if it could be clearly proved that, by menaces such as this notice contains, under the fraudulent pretence of legal compulsion, a man had paid the costs so demanded of him, Mr. Hutchinson could be successfully prosecuted. At all events, we would certainly recommend that it be tried: the very trial would operate to deter others, even though a conviction be not obtained.

THE LAW MAGAZINE.

Some time since it was announced by a contemporary, from whose columns we extracted the news, that the Law Magazine, after a flourishing existence of many years, had suddenly expired. We much regretted the loss of an old friend and favourite, and now we are rejoiced to find, from an announcement among our advertisements, that the report was exaggerated. The Law Magazine yet survives, and, we hope, to live for many years to come. The truth we understand to be, that there was a change of editorship only, and hence the rumour of dissolution. The new editor is, however, a man for whom we can vouch as in all respects qualified, not only to maintain but to raise the reputation of the periodical whose conduct he has undertaken. It would have given us sincere pleasure to have welcomed our respected quarterly contemporary under any circumstances; but knowing with what peculiar recommendations he appears again, with the vigour of youth infused into his veins, we congratulate him and the Profession on his revival, and cordially wish him health and long life, and may all the prosperity attend him which we are quite sure he will so well deserve.

PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

The revelations of the Central Criminal Court have excited very just and general indignation, not only within but without the Profession. Undoubtedly the character of the Bar has suffered from the misdeeds of some of its members. The Benchers have been called upon to interpose their extensive powers, and wipe out the blot upon the Profession, by disbarring those who have disgraced it.

But the malpractices that have been revealed are almost eclipsed by that which it is our painful duty now to lay before both branches of the Profession, directing to it the serious attention of the authorities.

The following printed advertisement has been placed in our hands. We copy it precisely as it appears.

TABLE FOR MAKING WILLS.

PERSONS.	For each "distinct" portion of "Personal Property" bequeathed (although to the same person).			For each "distinct" portion of "Real Property" devised (although to the same person).			OBSERVATIONS.

In cases of limited difficulty, where only a particular clause (or clauses) has to be drawn, to be inserted in a particular Will, the above table is also to be used; also in Codicil cases.

No fees required for consultations, or conferences at my chambers, or post-paid correspondence touching any Will or Codicil to be drawn.

No fees required for clerk.

N.B.—In cases of extreme expedition, the instructions and proper fees to be sent by carrier or coach (as a parcel) direct to my Chambers; and to secure its being known as on business, the address below to be adopted: the carriage is not to be paid, but included in the fee sent. For attending in person at the making of a Will, or at the execution of any Will, as a witness, an extra fee of half-a-guinea per mile.

Geo. Farren, Esq.
Chancery Barrister,
1, Symond's Inn, Chancery-lane.

Nothing so truly disreputable, so entirely unprofessional, so derogatory to the Bar, so daring in its defiance of all acknowledged rule, so unbecoming the gentleman, so disgraceful to the lawyer, has yet fallen under the notice of the Law Times. We have had occasion to expose many advertising attorneys, but only one advertising counsel; but the advertisements of the attorneys were modest, decorous, and creditable, compared with this advertisement of one who signs himself a barrister, and, we suppose, calls himself a gentleman. It is bad to advertise at all; it is worse to announce that "No fees are required for consultations!"—"No fees required for clerk!" but the depth of degradation is reached in the scale of fees, graduated according to the number of legatees!

Really, so indignant do we feel at the insult thus offered to our Profession, that we dare not trust ourselves to comment upon it just now. We would fain cherish the hope that it is a fraud; that some enemy hath done it to damage Mr. Farren and to throw discredit upon the society of which he is a member. We will wait for a week, that an opportunity may be given for contradiction or explanation. If it be not denied, there must be interposition somewhere, the Benchers must take it up, and the Solicitors to a man must resolve not in any manner to countenance a counsel who could thus disgrace and degrade that which ought to be the most cherished possession of every lawyer—his professional character.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The first Part of the Real Property and Conveyancing Cases is now ready, and the second number of the Criminal Law Cases is in the press.

We regret much that we are as yet unable to publish the first number of the Practice Cases, although they appear to be greatly in request. The fact is, that the reporters of the two principal Courts during the last Term have been travelling, and are not yet returned, and they did not prepare their notes for the press previously to their departure, understanding that no publication was intended during the vacation.

It will be seen by an advertisement in another column that active measures are in progress for the publication of the first of the series of Text Books.

We give, as usual, the accession of members during the past week:—

Johnson, Jno. Ryde, Isle of Wight.
Wickham, Humphery, Strood, Kent.
Lakin, B. Whitchurch, Salop.
Bolton, Jno. Dudley.
Lane, Jno. Stratford-on-Avon.

PRACTICE—PLEADING—EVIDENCE.

By Professor Carey.
Delivered at University College, London.
LECTURE XII.

There are two circumstances which occur in pleading, when one of the parties relies upon a deed. Where a party pleads a deed and claims or justifies under it, he used formerly, at the time of pleading, to produce the deed in court; he used to say, in effect, "I claim under a deed, and here is the deed under which I claim;" and then the other party was entitled to have it read in court, before he answered his adversary's pleading; there is the bringing the deed into court and the hearing it read—profert and oyer. Profert is now merely formal: the party merely makes a formal entry on the pleading; he does not in fact produce the deed, he merely states that he produces it. The meaning of the profert, and the necessity of it, depend on the theory of the deed's being actually produced. Profert is not required, unless the deed is in possession of the party pleading; for instance, if it is lost, instead of stating that he produces it in court, he states as matter of excuse, that the deed is lost, and that he, therefore, cannot produce it. One of the earliest cases of profert is Read v. Brookman (3 T. R. 151). Besides this, if the deed is one to the possession of which he is not entitled, then no excuse is necessary. Two cases (Dangerfield v. Thomas, 9 A. & E. 292, and Bain v. Cooper, 8 M. & W. 751) are upon this principle, that deeds operating under the Statute of Uses do not require to have profert made of them. In common conveyances, by lease and release, the lease, as it is called, operates under the Statute of Uses. It is a conveyance from A to B to the use of C; the possession is by the statute executor in C. C is, in fact, the purchaser, and he is the person who, being beneficially entitled, would have to make profert of the deed; B is a merely nominal party; but though only a nominal party, he is the person in law entitled to the possession of the deed; therefore, when C has to plead his title, it is not necessary to make profert of the lease. With respect to release it is otherwise; as that is a conveyance operating at common law, profert must be made of it. (Jenkin v. Peace, 6 M. & W. 722.)

At every stage of the pleadings the other party may demur. If the declaration in all the facts alleged shews no cause of action, there is no necessity for the defendant either to deny the facts or to avoid the effect of them. The effect of such a declaration, in point of law, is null; and therefore all the defendant has to do is to demur (from demorari). The demurrer stops the course of the pleadings, which otherwise would go on to an issue in fact, and submits the question to the judgment of the Court. Suppose the following case:—X Y delivers a horse to C D, to be redelivered at his request; X Y then requests C D to deliver the horse to A B; C D, though requested, does not deliver the horse, but retains it. An action on the case is brought by A B against C D; the declaration states the facts, and alleges the breach to be the non-delivery according to the request. This declaration is bad; because the wrong it discloses is a wrong done to X Y, not to A B, the plaintiff. I deliver to you a horse, to be redelivered to me or to my order; I authorize a third person to receive it, and order you to deliver it: you do not deliver it to my order; the injury that is done is an injury, not to the third person, but to me, and consequently I have a right of action; the third person has no such right. (Tollit v. Sherstone, 5 M. & W. 283.)

Demurrers are of two kinds, general and special. When the objection taken relates merely to some matter of form, it is required that the particular objection intended to be taken should be specially set down, "together with the demurrers as causes of the same." (27 Eliz. c. 5; 4 Anne, c. 16.) Before these statutes, all demurrers were general; but they have introduced special demurrers, by requiring causes to be assigned where the case is merely formal: they are confined to civil proceedings, and do not apply to criminal cases. Where the objection is mere matter of form, the grounds of it must (in civil cases) be specifically stated; and if such objection is not so taken, no advantage can be taken afterwards in any stage of the proceedings. By the modern rules, whether the demurrer be special or general, some matter of law must be stated in the margin of the demurrer book which is to be delivered to the judges. This is to give the judges notice of the points to be brought before them. It frequently happens that, on demurrer, if the ground of the demurrer is held good, the other party obtains leave to amend on payment of costs. Thus, if the declaration is bad in point of form, and the facts are such that, if correctly pleaded, the action may be maintained—if the facts are right and the pleading is wrong—the plaintiff may avail himself of the leave to amend; he sets his pleading right in point of form; if he does not, there is judgment against him. If he does—if he pleads so as to make his pleading correct in point of law—it is his business to make it so as to be supported by the facts. But if in his pleading he has stated the facts truly, and there is a fact omitted, the statement of which is necessary in order to make the pleading good in point of law, and the fact does not exist, the fault is not in the pleader, it is in the fact; and it is better to break down in a case by reason of not stating a fact, than by going to trial and not being able to prove it. Suppose you state but five facts, and there is a sixth fact which it is necessary to state in order to maintain the action;—you are permitted to amend on payment of costs, otherwise judgment is against you. If the sixth fact is an existing fact, you may plead it; your pleading is then right in form, and can be supported by the evidence; but if it is no fact at all, only a desideratum which you cannot supply, then if you introduce it, you merely incur the expense of subsequent failure. There is a case in which leave was given to amend (Earl of Harrington v. Bishop of Lichfield, 4 Bing. N. C. 77).

The demurrer admits the truth of the facts alleged, provided they are properly pleaded; it merely contends that they are "insufficient in law." Where the defendant thus insists that the facts contained in the declaration are "insufficient in law," if the Court decides in favour of the demurrer, that is, that the facts are insufficient, then there is judgment for the defendant. If the Court decides against the demurrer, that is, if it decides that the facts are "sufficient in law" to support the action; then, as the facts are admitted to be true by the demurrer, and no answer is given, there will be judgment for the plaintiff. The like effect is produced where the demurrer is taken to the plea, where, instead of replying, the plaintiff contends that the facts alleged are either in point of form or substance insufficient to support the defence. Suppose, for instance, that in an action on a bill of exchange against a person who has drawn a bill of exchange on his banker with a request to pay A B the plaintiff, the plea is that the defendant's banker paid the bill, that the bill was afterwards lost, and that it came into the plaintiff's hands without consideration; to that plea there is a demurrer. The plea is bad for duplicity, because it sets up two defences, perhaps neither of them properly pleaded. Deacon v. Stodhart (5 Bing. N. C. 594) is another case in which a demurrer occurs. In an action of debt the defendant pleaded a plea in the nature of "set-off;" the plaintiff replied de injuriâ, that "your non-payment was of your own wrong, and without the excuse you have alleged;" to this there is a demurrer, and judgment is given on it. The judgment of the Court below was that the replication de injuriâ was good. The case was carried into the Exchequer Chamber, and there the judgment was reversed, the Court holding that the replication de injuriâ was a bad one, and no answer to the plea of set-off.

I have hitherto supposed the simplest case of one single demand made by the plaintiff, and met by one single answer on the part of the part of the defendant. In point of fact, the pleadings very frequently have a more complicated appearance. The plaintiff was at all times at liberty to join several claims in one action; when this is done, he inserts in the declaration as many separate statements as there are causes of action; each of these statements is termed a count. Any number of counts may be joined in the same declaration. If you have one hundred and fifty bills of exchange upon which the same person is liable, you may bring an action with one hundred and fifty counts in it, a separate count on each bill of exchange. Counts in debt may be joined with counts in detinue, and counts in case with counts in trover; but counts cannot be joined in two forms of action wherein the nature of either the plea or judgment is different; as in trespass and case, assumpsit and trover, where, though the plea is the same, the judgment is different. To each demand of the plaintiff, the defendant, at common law, could set up only one defence. For instance, if a man were sued for goods sold and delivered, it might be true that the contract was obtained by fraud; it might be also true that the defendant had paid for the goods; either of these facts would be a good defence; but at common law, the defendant was obliged to select which he would rely upon, and, in the instance I have supposed, if he pleaded payment, and failed in proving it, or proved it only in part, the judgment would be given against him, though in fact the contract might have been altogether void in law by reason of the fraud, or vice versâ. In order to relieve the defendant from this disadvantage, it was provided by the statute of Anne, c. 4, s. 16, that it should be lawful for any defendant in an action in any court of record, to plead as many several matters thereto as he should think necessary for the defence. The power of pleading several pleas given by the statute, and the power existing at common law of inserting several counts in a declaration, were intended to apply to cases where a separate cause of action was stated in each count, and a separate ground of defence was raised in each plea. Gradually a perversion of this power grew into practice, in order to obviate the difficulties occasioned by a rule of law long adhered to. The rule I allude to was this; if the cause of action set out by the plaintiff in the declaration, or the ground of defence set up by the defendant in his plea, were not precisely supported at the trial, in either case the party failed: thus, if the plaintiff set out in the declaration a contract, and the contract proved by the witnesses turned out to be different from that set out in the declaration, the plaintiff failed in his action; he did not establish the contract on which his claim was founded. (Churchill v. Wilkins, 1 T. R. 447.) Here the contract declared on was, that the defendant was to deliver to the plaintiff all his tallow at four shillings per stone, and the contract proved was to deliver at four shillings per stone, or so much more as the plaintiff paid to any other person. It does not appear that the fact arose which made the alternative material. It does not appear that he had in fact paid any other person more than four shillings, and, if so, it was practically the same as if four shillings had been the price agreed upon. However, it was holden that the bargain proved was not the bargain declared upon. "This nonsuit is proper," says Ashurst, J.; "it was incumbent on the plaintiff to prove the case truly." There is another case (Jones v. Cowley, 4 B. & C. 445), which was upon the warranty of a horse. The declaration in assumpsit stated that the defendant warranted the horse to be sound; and it was proved that the defendant warranted the horse to be sound, except a kick on the leg. It was held that this was a qualified, and not a general warranty, and was a variance from the warranty stated in the declaration. There was here a misstatement of the fact, and the Court said "The question, therefore, is, whether, at the time of making the contract, it was agreed and understood between the parties that the horse was warranted sound generally, or with the exception of any unsoundness which might arise from the kick on the leg. It appeared in evidence that at the time of the sale, the animal had received a kick on the leg, which might or might not turn out to be an unsoundness, and that the defendant said to the plaintiff, 'I will warrant against any unsoundness, except an unsoundness which may result from a kick on the leg.' It appears to me that this was a qualified warranty. Suppose it had turned out that the horse had a permanent unsoundness arising from the kick on the leg, the defendant clearly would not have been liable on the warranty given by him. But if he had given a general warranty he would have been liable. The contracts are substantially different." The motion was for a nonsuit; the judge had directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff, but reserved liberty to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit. He did so; cause was shewn, and the rule was made absolute, that is, there was leave to enter a nonsuit, as if the nonsuit had taken place at the trial. The plaintiff, therefore, failed, because he misdescribed the contract entered into between him and the defendant.

In like manner it was, if, in an action of trespass, the defendant justified, under a particular custom, a right of way or the like, and there was a variance in the proof. If he justified under a right of way for all the year round, and it turned out to be only for six months in the year, if the custom or the right proved by the witnesses differed from the custom set out; the plaintiff would fail. In order to provide against these chances, the pleader who drew the declaration considered all the ways in which the contract might have been made, and the pleader on the part of the defence considered all the ways in which the right in question might rise, and each of these ways was set out in a separate count, or in a separate plea, as if it had been a separate cause of action or a separate ground of defence; so that whichever way the contract or the right was proved at the trial, there was a count on which the plaintiff could maintain his action, or a plea on which the defendant could support his defence. It was provided by the statute 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, that where any variance should appear in the matter alleged and the facts proved, the judge at the trial should have power to amend the record, so as to correspond with the proof, provided the variance were not material to the merits of the case, and should not prejudice the opposite party. (Hemming v. Parry, 6 C. & P. 580.) The circumstances here are the same as in Jones v. Cowley, and the judge (Alderson) held that the variance was within the statute, and was not material to the merits of the case. After this statute (3 & 4 W. 4) it was provided by the rules of court that several counts and several pleas should not be allowed unless a distinct subject-matter of complaint or a distinct ground of defence were to be established in respect of each. The only exception to this is that where the first count consists of many demands a count may be added, "on an account stated." Suppose an action is brought for goods sold and delivered—the claim consisting of one hundred and fifty items; the two parties meet, and the one says, "I owe you 50*l*. in respect of these goods." There is in effect only one claim, but there are in form two causes of action; there is one primary cause of action for the goods sold and delivered, and a secondary cause of action founded on the statement of the account, and both may be united in separate counts in the same declaration. The defendant is not allowed to plead the same defence in several ways, but he is at liberty to plead as many separate defences as the circumstances admit; but here the power ends. To each plea of the defendant, the plaintiff may plead a separate replication; but he cannot plead more, except in as far as every pleading is in its nature divisible. e. g. An action is brought for goods sold and delivered, laying the debt at 50*l.*; the defendant may plead, except as to 20*l.* that he does not owe the money, and as to 20*l.* that he has paid it. Here the declaration is divided into two parts, and in the plea a separate answer is given to each part.

During the whole of the proceedings, from the time the defendant appears, it is required, at common law, that both parties should be present in person or by attorney, and an entry is made on the record that a day is given for their appearance dies datus. These entries of adjournment are called continuances; and on each of these occasions the court is said to be continued or adjourned. It sometimes happened that, after the defendant had pleaded, even after issue joined, nay, even after the jury was sworn, there might have arisen some new matter that it was proper for the defendant to plead in answer to the action. For instance, that the plaintiff, being a femme sole, had married. Suppose an action is brought against a woman, a femme sole, she pleads "not guilty," or "not indebted," as it may be; after that she marries; she may then plead her coverture in bar of the action, because the action ought to be commenced against the husband; in which case the plaintiff's right of proceeding would be stopped; or it might be that the plaintiff has given the defendant a release. Supposing the action to be commenced, and during the progress of the action the plaintiff releases the defendant from all actions, that is a defence to the action then in progress. But suppose the release does not take place until after the plea is pleaded, the defendant was at liberty at any time before the verdict was given to abandon the former defence and plead the release to be staid. The language of the law, puis darreign continuance (since the last continuance—since the last adjournment) a fact has occurred which did not exist before, by which the plaintiff is barred from recovering in this action, and then if the defendant pleaded the new matter as early as he could, he was permitted to do so. (Baker v. Gough, Cro. Jac. 82; Todd v. Emley, 9 M. & W. 606.) When an issue is joined, there is a question raised between the parties to be decided. In the 3rd vol. of Blackstone's Commentaries you have a list of the several modes of trial. Wager by battle and wager of law are now abolished, and now the only modes of trial are trial by record and by jury. Trial by record takes place where the existence of the record is attested by one and denied by the other party; and the only mode of asserting it is to produce it in court. Trial by jury is what we may consider the ordinary mode of trial. When the pleadings are drawn, a transcript is made by the plaintiff, called the issue, and delivered to the opposite party. The plaintiff must give due notice of trial; the jury process issues, and then the cause is ready for trial. It is a venire facias to the sheriff, ordering him to summon to Westminster twelve jurors of the county, stated in the margin of the declaration, and the cause is then ready for trial at the bar of the court. All trials were supposed formerly to take place at the bar of the court, but they now take place generally before the justices of assize; still they may, and sometimes do, take place at bar. (King v. Price, 5 B. & A. 447, and the recent case of Reg. v. O'Connell and Others in Ireland.) The plaintiff must give to the defendant due notice of trial, and must procure a record of the pleadings to be made out. The record is drawn out and delivered to the judge's marshal; it contains all the statements set out in the issue, without the addition of the distringas. It gives the judge a history of the proceedings, and of the question raised for trial.

There are certain rules laid down as to the persons who are to be taken as fit witnesses. All persons were considered competent witnesses who had the use of their reason, and whose religious belief did not destroy the obligation of the oath; who were not convicted of infamous crimes, or influenced by private interests. (7 T. R. 701.) Lunatics under the influence of their malady, or children who had not acquired the use of reason, were not competent. Quakers, Moravians, and Separatists, who objected to the oath, were not admissible till made so by Act of Parliament. (Atcheson v. Everitt, Cowper, 382; 7 Wm. 3, c. 34; 9 Geo. 4, c. 32; 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 49; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 87.) In Coke Lyt. 6 b, you find that infidels, that is, persons not professing Christianity, were incompetent witnesses; but upon the authority of Homechund v. Baker (Willis, 538), they are admissible, provided they believe in the existence of a God, the obligation of an oath, and a future state of rewards and punishments. By a statute of the last session, no person is excluded by reason of incapacity from crime; but the statute has not provided for the case of a man being outlawed; if he his outlawed for felony, it would appear that he is still an incompetent witness. A question may arise whether perjury, under the 5 Eliz. c. 9, would be within this Act, but I apprehend that it would. Every person interested in the event of a suit was, by the common law, excluded from giving evidence in favour of the party to whom his interest inclined, and the law looks upon a person as interested where he has some peculiar benefit depending upon the result of the suit. In a running down case, where the master has an action brought against him for the damage, the servant was an incompetent witness at common law, because, if damages were recovered against the master, he might bring an action against the servant for the damages he has been obliged to pay. This was obviated by the master giving the servant a release from all actions arising out of that particular action; and the evidence of the servant has also been made admissible by endorsing his name as a witness upon the record, in order that he might be evidence for the master. (Yeomans v. Legh, 2 M. & W. 419.) This is now of less importance, for by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, no person offered as a witness is excluded by reason of interest—with some exceptions. The plaintiff or the defendant named on the record is not allowed to give evidence. Formerly no person interested was allowed to give evidence: no persons were more interested than the parties themselves, and therefore they were excluded. (Bowerman v. Radmius, 7 T. R. 662.) Where an action is brought by a trustee who has a legal interest in the property, against a third person, the trustee is for all purposes to be deemed as the plaintiff himself, and any admission made by himself would be evidence against him in any action that might be brought. In an action of ejectment, the virtual plaintiff, the landlord in whose right the ejectment was made, is not allowed to give evidence. No one is competent as a witness in whose immediate or individual behalf an action is brought or defended. It is very difficult to say what persons would be actually included within these words. Suppose an action is brought by a trading corporation — say a gas company — against an individual whom they supplied with gas, and who has not paid for it; a member of the corporation is put into the box, and he is a competent witness as a member of that corporation, though if he were a great capitalist, carrying on the like business in his own name, he would not, as the law stands, be able to give evidence. Again, an action is brought against a sheriff for misconduct of the officer; the sheriff has no interest in defending it, and he does not defend it; the officer is the defendant in point of fact; but though he is the person actually interested, it does not appear that he is the person in whose immediate behalf the action is defended; he is only touched mediately through the sheriff, and therefore he is a good witness. Take the case of an action of quare impedit, brought by a college; probably the senior fellow would be a good witness; the action is brought by the college, and he is only an individual.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

The Judgment of Lord Denman in the case of O'Connell and Others against the Queen, as delivered in the House of Lords, September 4, 1844; with Notes, a Preface, and additional Observations. Edited by David Leahy, Esq. one of the Counsel in the Cause. London, 1844. Butterworth.

No lawyer will question the learned Editor's estimate of "the vast importance of the principles discussed" in the memorable judgment of the Lord Chief Justice of England, in the famous O'Connell case, nor can there be two opinions as to the propriety of its publication in the present accessible form, corrected and revised, as the report has been, by the eminent Judge by whom it was pronounced.

But an extraordinary value has been given to this edition of a valuable document, by the addition of some further explanations of his views, with which Lord Denman has supplied the Editor; for these alone it will be eagerly read on both sides of the channel.

It is the misfortune of such a topic as this, that people will not divest it of partisan feelings; nor will they allow to any other person the credit of being able to do so. If, for instance, we were to say that we either approved or disapproved the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice, we should forthwith be accused of making the Law Times political. And yet, in truth, with lawyers, law will almost always take precedence of politics; so much are we in the habit of looking at the case without reference to the parties, and so eager are we to ascertain the law, without the slightest regard for consequences, that we believe there are few lawyers, from the judge to the articled clerk, who would permit any party feelings to disturb, ever so slightly, his judgment upon a point of law. And least of all would Lord Denman be likely to be so swayed.

Indeed, it is impossible to read this judgment without feeling the profoundest respect for the lofty views of the judge; he has treated a great constitutional question in no narrow spirit, and however we may doubt the law he propounds, it is impossible to question his motives. He gives reasons, many and weighty, for his opinions; his arguments, startling at first, grow in power as we contemplate them, and few, we suspect, will rise from their perusal without at least feeling that his previous views have been shaken, if not overthrown.

The judgment of the Lord Chief Justice, as our readers will remember, was directed mainly to two points, in both of which he differed from the majority of the judges. These were, first, whether the true import of the expression "for his said offences," in the judgment of the Court below, be that the punishment was awarded in respect of all the facts indicted as offences, and, secondly, whether the incompleteness of the jury-list avoided the trial. We are not about to repeat any portion of this judgment, as it has been already submitted, in great part at least, to our readers; but we limit our extracts to the new matter supplied by Lord Denman to the Editor, and the history of which is thus stated in the Preface.

As Lord Denman observed, in the course of his judgment, that he had committed to writing some statements which he did not propose to address to the House, I took the liberty of requesting to be favoured with the inspection of the papers to which he alluded, with a view to their insertion in the present publication. His lordship was pleased in the most obliging manner to comply with this request, and to place the whole of the memoranda in question at my disposal, to be used according to my own discretion. As they were composed at various periods during the short interval between the close of the circuit and the day appointed for the re-assembling of the House, they necessarily included some actual repetitions as well as some brief expressions of opinions which are more fully developed in the judgment as delivered. But the unprecedented interest and admiration excited among all parties by the delivery of this noble address—in every respect so worthy of the transcendent importance of the subject—induce me to believe that the public will be happy to hear that I have exercised to the smallest possible extent the power of retrenchment with which I was invested in so confiding and condescending a manner, and that the papers in question, which are almost all printed at the end of the present publication, contain a full exposition of the whole of his lordship's opinions upon every part of the case.

From these additional observations we make a few extracts.

The question of the imperfection of the jury-lists, his lordship asserts to be "of the highest and most extensive consequence, as affecting jury trials, both in England and Ireland, the statutable enactments under which they take place in both parts of the United Kingdom being substantially the same."

It had been questioned whether a challenge of the array is still part of the law. It was clear that it had not been abolished by express enactment:—

Whether a privilege of such great value could be taken away by implication, might admit of grave deliberation. But the intention to repeal without substituting any similar security is hardly to be believed. Penalties are imposed on all the successive officers employed on this duty for the neglect of any portion of it, but there is no provision that the defective lists shall stand good notwithstanding. The great object of improving the mode of appointing juries was undoubtedly to purify the practice, and prevent all tampering, and suspicion of tampering, with the construction of those important bodies. But if the present doubt is well founded, the most impure proceeding might pass unquestioned; the most corrupt packing of juries might prevail. For though in the present instance no suspicion is felt as to the motives, this argument goes the length of depriving the parties of all redress, however criminal the design may have been.

Then it was said that great inconvenience would arise from admitting a challenge for such a cause, as it would set aside the jury-book, and prevent the summoning of a good jury for that year. But

This doctrine seems open to many observations. 1. Whatever inconvenience the law produces must be borne by those whose duty it is to administer the law. The excessive inconvenience of one construction of an ambiguous Act may furnish a strong argument in favour of another construction equally consistent with its words: but it cannot introduce words which are not there, nor a construction of which no words which are there are susceptible. 2. Taking the supposed inconvenience at the highest, what are we to say of subjecting parties, through any misconduct, negligence, or default, in official persons, to a trial by a different jury from that which the law provides for them. But 3. The inconvenience imagined is a chimera, if the objection be of such a nature as to prove that the book called the jurors' book appears to have no title to be so styled. And this appears to me to be its true result; for if the sheriff has not received the book described and required by the Act, the Jury Acts of both countries have met this inconvenience by express enactment. "Provided," says the 11th section of the Act for England, and in the same form the 11th of the Act for Ireland,* "that if there shall be no jurors' book in existence for the current year, it shall be lawful to return jurors from the jurors' book for the year preceding." And if this construction of the proviso be considered doubtful, still, 4, it may be observed, that the supposition of the Court's setting aside the book generally, when they give effect to a challenge of the array in a particular case, by reason of the imperfection of such book, can hardly be maintained. Other parties may not challenge, notwithstanding the defect, and the book actually sent by the sheriff, if unchallenged, must stand good; or they might be unable to prove the facts, or might have waived the objection, or be estopped from insisting upon it.

Again—

Those who argue against the right of challenge to the array must be content to take up a position ever regarded by our courts with the utmost jealousy,—that here is a right which cannot be effectuated,—a wrong without redress. Remedy or redress there is none pretended, however defective the panel may be, or from whatever cause or motive the defect has arisen, unless it can be obtained through the old and well-known constitutional proceeding of challenge to the array. But an opinion has in some way grown up, that the array can be challenged for no cause but one,—partiality, or, as our books phrase it, unindifferency, in the sheriff. Now, though this was probably the most ordinary ground for such challenge, and though on conviction the sheriff would be punished by the Court, whose officer he was, it is obvious that the object of the party challenging must have been his own security, much more than the sheriff's punishment. His security is a lawful jury. Unindifferency in the sheriff might deprive him of it; but so might other faults. Unindifferency is plainly stated by Lord Coke as an example; he adds the more general word "default," and constantly repeats both in describing the effect of the challenge. If then the sheriff, or other officer (i. e. such other officer as may by law be clothed with his duty of returning juries), should transmit to the Court a panel from a list out of which it ought not to have bee[n t]aken; as if he should insert names of persons having no qualification within his bailiwick, here is a default, which would support the challenge. Is it not equally a default to make up the panel from a book which omits a whole class that ought to have been there? If the law enjoins him to make a general list, composed of lists A, B, and C, and then to select his panel from that general list, but he thinks proper to compose his general list from lists A and B only, is this no default? It may be venial,—it may involve less blame to him than to some of his subordinates, and the Court may properly refuse to exercise its power of punishing the officer; but surely the party, who has duly complained of the evil consequence to himself and his own security for a fair trial, cannot justly have that unlawful jury forced upon him.

After reviewing many of the arguments which had been raised on the part of the Crown, his lordship thus proceeds, and deals with it as a great question of constitutional law, as one nearly affecting the liberties of the subject and the right of trial by jury:—

For my part, I do not understand how the right to challenge the array can rest on any other principle than the right of her Majesty's subjects to have their interests decided by juries duly constituted according to law. That jury, which was returned from partiality, or imperfect through any default in the sheriff, was not so constituted. On that officer, and on the bailiffs of franchises who performed analogous functions, the whole duty was cast in ancient times. By the recent Act it is divided with other officers: but if the panel is rendered essentially imperfect by any one of these, when not exercising a judicial capacity, the subject loses the protection which the law would have afforded him, and the principle of challenge to the array applies. During the discussion, I heard a suggestion thrown out—from what quarter I do not now remember—to meet the argument arising from the absence of all other remedy. The party was said to be at liberty to apply by motion to the Court. I confess that I am at a loss to find it just or reasonable to strip a party of a well-known constitutional process, fully adequate to correct the wrong and prevent the mischief, and to refer him to the discretion of any Court, exercised on facts brought before it in the unsatisfactory form of written depositions, where the accused officer has the benefit of swearing last, when questions of fact would be withdrawn from the tribunal established for settling them, and the law would be laid down without appeal.

To another argument, that no injury was in fact done, and that after the omission there remained names enough to secure a fair jury-list, the Lord Chief Justice replies:—

It is said, that "no particular injury is stated" in the challenge. But none can be stated, nor, if stated, could be proved. There are no materials on which the judgment of the triors or of the Court could be exercised. The whole subject lies beyond the reach of human speculation. But as long as men differ in their opinions, understandings and feelings, and so long as these influence their decision on disputed points of morality, expediency and general policy, so long must it be at least uncertain whether the extrusion of a tolerably large proportion of persons from the body to which they belong may not materially affect the character of its general composition, and vary the chances of their arriving at such or such a conclusion. Here, if the true list had been entered in the sheriff's book, it might have happened that not one of the gentlemen who tried this case would have been suffered to enter the jury-box. The jury might have consisted altogether of individuals comprised in the omitted sixty, and might have brought to the inquiry such sentiments and habits of thinking as must have insured the acquittal of all the persons under accusation. To disclaim any thing like an opinion that this would have happened, or a suspicion of the fairness of those by whom the cause was tried, cannot be necessary. The want of all opportunity and power of arriving at any conclusion upon such a matter drives me to say that there is no alternative between a list duly formed according to the Act and one not so formed; no middle course between what is unlawful and what is right; no equivalent or substitute for that security for a fair trial which the law has carefully provided. The strictness, which would vitiate the whole for a single omission, was not formerly considered as a reductio ad absurdum, but was acted upon as a ruling principle. Nor will this jealousy appear excessive, if we weigh the opposite inconveniences. The question, rather tauntingly thrown out, "Will you set aside the whole panel because one name has been omitted?" is surely well enough rebutted by the other question, "Will you hold it good, though nine-tenths should be omitted?" There is no great inconvenience in exacting perfect fidelity and accuracy from ministerial officers who have to perform an easy duty of incalculable importance to the public. Glance at the inconvenience of dispensing with those qualities in their returns. At best, according to the learned judges, the Court must task itself with the inquiry, whether the number to which a panel may have been improperly reduced, was large enough to promise a fair trial, under all the varying circumstances of each particular case, without any means whatever of ascertaining the fact. But the negligence thus sanctioned and encouraged might be assumed as the cloak of fraud, and would infallibly incur the suspicion, and fill the minds of the people with all the distrust and discontent which, we can all remember, to have hung upon the special jury system but a few years back.

The concluding remarks of his lordship must not be omitted; and with these we close our notice of this pamphlet, which will recommend itself to the careful perusal of every lawyer:—

Thus have I set down what occurred to me from recollection and my notes of the argument in the House of Lords. I have since that time again read over the judgments on this point given at Dublin, and am much fortified in my own views by Mr. Justice Perrin's concurrence and reasoning, while I cannot feel that there is the least weight in the opposite argument of the majority of the judges. The only mode in which I think it possible to resist his conclusion is by finding some technical meaning for the word array—as that it imports nothing but the sheriff's act in selecting the names that make up the panel. Even this restricted sense would appear to me not to be inconsistent with the idea that an array taken from an illegal list cannot be legal. If I am asked how many omissions and interpolations will suffice to vitiate a return, I might perhaps decline the question as irrelevant, because the number actually omitted is at all events so considerable as to disturb the identity of the return. But I would decline to answer it for another reason,—the impossibility of tracing the operation of the faulty proceeding. The truth may be that the whole jury of twelve would have come out of the rejected sixty; or the truth may be, when one only is excluded, that that one entering the jury-box as one of the twelve to try the issues, would, by his influence with the other eleven, cause a different verdict. But such truth can never be established by evidence, nor can it be made the subject of any rational speculation. The law, regardless of the calculations which may be formed in various quarters upon these doubtful probabilities, affords a certain protection to all whose interests are to depend on the verdicts of juries, by cautiously providing the manner in which these are to be composed; and if this protection is not secured, the parties have none.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

THE MONEY MARKET.

Friday.—The only feature in the Stock Market this morning is that the Commissioners bought about the usual quantity of Consols at 99⅝. Money is in increased demand, and some transfers have been made at a fall of 92¾. For the Account par has been the only value given this morning. The premium on Exchequer Bills is firm at 71s. to 73s. Bank Stock has fallen to 202¼, a re-action of about 3 per cent. within a week. The fluctuation in the New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents. is very trifling, scarcely exceeding ⅛ to ¼ per cent.

The value of Spanish Stock remains nominally the same as yesterday. Dutch Securities are a trifle lower, and Belgian Five per Cents. were firm in the morning at 10[illegible], but they have since receded to 103⅞. For Mexican and Portuguese Bonds the demand was limited to one or two bargains only.

The Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Shares have been flat to-day, at 1 to 2¾ premium. Edinburgh and Glasgow are lower, 10 premium being now the price. The Great Western Shares have been sold as low as 59 prem.; the London and Birmingham have been at 111½ to 113 prem.; Midlands at a fall to 3 prem.; York and North Midland are firm at 58 prem. and the Half Shares at 56 prem. The French lines are rather on the advance. General Steam Navigation Company's Shares are worth 13 prem.

RENTALS IN SUFFOLK.

A correspondent of the Times has published the following curious particulars relating to the rentals of estates in the division of Cosford, in the county of Suffolk. It will be useful to those engaged in the sale or purchase of land.

"I subjoin a table of the rent of the parishes in the Cosford division for 1692, 1815, and 1843. The rental of 1692 is assumed on the amount of land-tax assessed, which, having been made at 4s. in the pound on the then rental, is probably as near an approximation to the truth as the property-tax valuation of 1843.

"The above illustrations of the progress of rent in the Cosford division of Suffolk will establish one of two facts—either that the agricultural improvement of the district has been very considerable since 1815, or that the condition of the farmers and labourers has very much deteriorated, since the rent has so greatly increased, whilst the average price of wheat has fallen from 101s. 7d. the quarter, as in the six years ending 1814, to 63s. 2d. the quarter on the average of the six years ending 1842."

THE REPORTS.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Thursday, Oct. 31.
Ex parte NORTON, re WOOD.
Equitable invalidity of fiat.

A fiat annulled on the ground of equitable invalidity, it having been issued by the petitioning creditor in concert with one of the bankrupts, for purposes foreign to the proper purposes of a fiat.

The petition in this case was presented by William Norton, one of the bankrupts, for the purpose of annulling a fiat, issued on the 1st of July, 1844, against Jacob Wood and himself, who had carried on business in copartnership as fancy cloth manufacturers. The grounds upon which it was sought to set aside the fiat were, legal invalidity, on account of the absence of a good petitioning creditor's debt, and equitable invalidity, on account of the alleged fraudulent concert of the bankrupt Wood with the petitioning creditor, Jane Hampshire, in issuing the fiat, for the purpose of getting rid of a deed of arrangement between himself and partner, and compromise with the creditors of the firm, dated the 30th of January, 1844. The original petition in the case was heard during the vacation, but the question of the equitable invalidity not being properly raised upon it, the Chief Judge directed the case to stand over, with liberty for the petitioner to amend his petition, or present a supplemental petition. The petitioner accordingly filed a supplemental petition, which now came on to be heard with the original petition. The remainder of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Swanston and Bennet, for the petitioner, cited Harding v. Glover (18 Ves. 281); Attwood v. Banks (2 Bea. 192); Smith v. Jeyes (4 Bea. 503); and Ex parte Browne, re Browne (1 Rose, 151).

Kenyon Parker and Bacon, for the bankrupt Wood and the petitioning creditor.

Roupell, for the creditors' assignee.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—The first question in this case is, whether the fiat issued by Mrs. Hampshire is the fiat of Mr. Wood. I put it as the first question for convenience only. Now, the only allegation upon the first petition was, that the fiat was issued for the purpose of injuring the petitioner; and I thought, and still think, that the passage in the petition in which this allegation is contained might well have passed unnoticed. The defence of Mr. Wood and Mrs. Hampshire has been one: Mrs. Hampshire did not deny concert, but she denied collusion, or any intention of injuring the petitioner, and expressed her belief that the fiat was for the benefit of the creditors. I considered that the question, whether this fiat was in fact Mr. Wood's fiat, was not properly in issue; but I saw sufficient on the whole evidence to give the petitioner an opportunity to bring that forward. The present petition, which regularly raises the point, was presented in September last, and contains this allegation—"That the issuing of the fiat against the said Jacob Wood and your petitioner, as such co-partners, was fraudulently concerted by and between the said J. Wood and the petitioning creditor, the said Jane Hampshire, and that the same was issued at the instance of and by the procurement of the said J. Wood, for the purpose of defeating the said indenture of assignment, of the 30th day of January, 1844." Here, then, was an opportunity afforded of meeting and controverting this statement. Not one syllable in addition has been put forward by Mr. Wood or Mrs. Hampshire. Accordingly, by all the rules of evidence, it is my unavoidable duty to decide that the fiat was concerted for the purpose of defeating the indenture of assignment. Were I not to rely upon this, the allegations on one side and the absence of denial on the other, and to give the petitioner the benefit of that state of the record, I should, when I look at the general effect of the whole evidence together, be obliged to come to the same conclusion. I am of opinion then, on the whole evidence, that this fiat was not issued by Mrs. Hampshire with a view to the benefit of the creditors, or to obtain payment of her debt, but for the purposes of Wood, and that the object of Wood was the destruction of the indenture of assignment. The result is, that the fiat is that of Wood, and that Mrs. Hampshire was merely his instrument. Could Wood then be the author of such a fiat? Wood and Norton had been in partnership, and disputes had arisen between them, which rendered a continuance of the partnership impossible. This led to the deed of January, 1844, which was an act of bankruptcy, of which any creditor, not bound by participation, might avail himself. The trustees, however, correctly or otherwise, so conducted the affairs as to create dissatisfaction in the mind of Wood, and accordingly Wood wished that the affairs should be administered under a bankruptcy. It is clearly established that Wood made various endeavours for this purpose, and that they were successful with Mrs. Hampshire, and that he procured her to issue the fiat. In my opinion it has not been issued for the proper purposes of a fiat, and must therefore be annulled at the cost of Mr. Wood, whose fiat it is. It is said that Norton has so conducted himself as to give validity to the fiat. The matter being under the consideration of the commissioner, I cannot hold that the endeavour to procure an assignee favourable to the views of Norton implied an acquiescence in the fiat, or an intention of abandoning the petition. I annul this fiat solely on the ground of equitable invalidity, and that renders the question of the sufficiency of the petitioning creditor's debt immaterial.

Let the fiat be annulled at the cost of Wood in the usual way; but the costs of preparing, engrossing, presenting, and filing the first petition, and the costs of affidavits, so far as relates to the question whether Mrs. Hampshire was, at the time of issuing the fiat, a creditor of the two bankrupts, not to be allowed. Reserve the question whether Jane Hampshire shall be ordered to pay any costs. The petitioner to pay the assignees' costs, and have them over again against Wood, not exceeding 4l.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Friday, Oct. 25.
(Before Sir C. WILLIAMS.)
Re C. C. FOOTE, an Attorney.

The insolvent in this case applied for his final order.

Sturgeon, who opposed for the creditors, craved a further adjournment, on the ground that a person named Harvey had, in the insolvent's first account, been placed as a debtor to the estate in the sum of 1,800l., but was now, in his amended schedule, put down a creditor in 200l., making exactly 1,000l. of difference. That alone, he thought, justified the creditors in asking some further time to investigate the causes for such an extraordinary proceeding.

Sir C. WILLIAMS.—It was a very proper course on their part. The motives must be very dubious, indeed, which could induce a man to act as the insolvent had in this case. It was disgraceful, to say the least of it, that he should come to that court and affirm upon oath that the first account was a correct one, and yet in a short time after be as ready to make oath that the assets, as amended, were the real ones. What was the insolvent—an attorney's clerk?

Sturgeon.—Sometimes an attorney himself; then managing clerk, he believed, to this person, Harvey.

Sir C. WILLIAMS found his debts stated at 6,500l., and his assets at 1,250l, which would not, he supposed, fetch 1,250 shillings.

The solicitor to the creditors said that in the amended schedule, the insolvent's debts were above 13,000l.

Sir C. WILLIAMS.—It is most disgraceful, he repeated, that the insolvent should try to get off, in the first place by an artifice, and then make his schedule up to thousands instead of hundreds, as in the first instance. He would grant the creditors full time to make an ample investigation, and the more such a system was exposed the better.

The further hearing was then adjourned for a month.

Re DOWNEY.
Petition for protection—Insolvent Court.

The insolvent had been discharged by the Insolvent Court about a year and a half since, on condition of assigning 30l. a year to the provisional assignee for the benefit of his creditors out of his salary as a clerk in Sewers' Office, and his assignment had been made a rule of court. He never, however, made any payment according to the rule, and a rule nisi was moved for an attachment for contempt of court, which was made absolute without any cause shewn. Before he could be taken, he petitioned the Court of Bankruptcy; the sum due to the provisional assignee being inserted in his schedule, he now appeared for the first examination.

Woodroffe, for the creditors, represented these circumstances to the Court.

Mr. Commissioner EVANS was decidedly of opinion that this was not a case contemplated by the Act. The Insolvent Court was in possession of the case, and it could not be expected that its jurisdiction was to be limited by this Court. Something was required to be done to prevent these continual trials by persons not entitled to it, to obtain the benefit of an Act intended only for the unfortunate.

[This case may be mentioned as an instance of the confused way in which business is managed in these Courts. Woodroffe having intimated, in the course of his remarks, that an officer was ready with a warrant to convey the insolvent to Newgate, the latter took advantage of a moment when the commissioner and counsel were interchanging observations, to draw back into the crowd surrounding him, and disappeared from the court.

A few weeks since, a prisoner, brought up in custody, withdrew in like manner, on being remanded, and a disturbance ensued in the court-yard, which it required the aid of the police to quell.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

OCTOBER SESSIONS.
Tuesday, October 22.
REG. v. RILEY.
Larceny.

The prosecutor having been decoyed into a tavern by the prisoner, was induced to lend him money for the purpose of paying certain losses which he appeared to be incurring in a game at cards with one whom the jury found to be a confederate. The prisoner stated that he was about to receive other funds, and he would then repay the amount. The jury found that there was a design, ab initio, to defraud the prosecutor. Held, that the offence did not amount to larceny, and the conviction was quashed.

The prisoner was indicted for larceny, and the facts of the case, as they appeared in evidence, were these. The prosecutor having arrived from the country with a large sum of money in his possession, was decoyed into a public-house by the prisoner. A third person having joined them, cards were introduced, and the prisoner and the stranger commenced playing; the former was unsuccessful, and having lost all the money he appeared to be possessed of, he borrowed some from the prosecutor, stating that he was going to receive a large amount shortly, and he would then repay it. The two players, however, soon afterwards decamped, and the prosecutor found that he had been their dupe.

Wilkins, for the prisoner, submitted, that on this state of facts, an indictment for larceny could not be sustained. To support such a charge, the property must have been obtained against the will, or contrary to the intent of the owner; and admitting the third party to have been a confederate, still the prosecutor parted with his money voluntarily. If the party were indited at all, it should be for a conspiracy.

The Common Serjeant.—Does not the question resolve into this? Was there any design on the part of the prisoner, ab initio, by fraud and deception, to obtain this man's money? The latter could not be said to part with it voluntarily, if he did so under an erroneous impression, which the deceitful acts of the prisoner had caused, and here there is evidence to go to the jury that the coins which the prisoner pretended to lose were mere counters.

Wilkins.—An indictment for larceny cannot be supported if the property as well as the possession of the thing alleged to be stolen was parted with by the owner. In that case a charge of obtaining money under false pretences might be sustained. Now here not only the possession, but the property in the coins lent, passed to the prisoner. The very purpose for which they were lent, and the stipulated mode of repayment, shew that the prosecutor never expected to have the identical pieces of money returned to him. The property in them was absolutely relinquished, with the understanding that others of a similar value would be repaid. Whatever, then, may have been the fraudulent intention of the prisoner at the moment of his first meeting with the prosecutor, a charge of larceny cannot be maintained.

The Common Serjeant referred to Reg. v. Campbell (1 Moo. C.C. 179).

Wilkins.—In that case the property was clearly not parted with. The owner swore that he never intended to give them up until the price was paid for them.

Simon, for the prosecution, contended that this case was similar to those of ring-dropping, which had been held to be larceny.

The Common Serjeant went into the Old Court for the purpose of consulting the Recorder, and on his return, he stated that that learned judge took the same view as he had originally taken, namely, that if this was an original and preconcerted fraud to cheat this man out of his money, there was a conspiracy between the prisoner and his confederates, and that, as no real play was intended on their part, the indictment might be sustained. He observed, however, that in case of a conviction he would take the opinion of the judges on the point before he passed sentence.

Wednesday, October 23.—The Common Serjeant stated that he had consulted Mr. Baron Rolfe on the subject, who was clearly of opinion that the conviction was bad, for that the offence did not amount to larceny. The prisoner was accordingly discharged.

Thursday, October 24.

Reg. v. Walker.

Where a party is indicted for obtaining money under false pretences, the false pretence being that he was a minor, a plea of infancy to an action brought against him is not receivable as evidence to shew either the fact of minority, or a guilty knowledge on his part. Query, whether to establish the fact of such minority, statements made by the prisoner that he was under age are admissible?

The prisoner was indicted for obtaining money under false pretences, and the instance laid was his having represented himself to be of age, when he well knew he was under age at the time.

To prove the fact of his having been then under twenty-one,

Ballantine, for the prosecution, offered in evidence a plea of infancy which the defendant had since that time put in to an action brought against him, and he contended that this was sufficient as an admission on the part of the defendant of his then age.

Wilkins, for the prisoner, objected to this evidence: parties were constantly in the habit of pleading matters of the most contradictory kind; it was a practice sanctioned by the law, and frequently necessary for the purposes of justice; but if the pleas were contradictory, they could not all be true; and it would be absurd, therefore, to assume that the person adopting such a course intended to pledge himself to the verity of each individual portion of the record. Again, a party to a suit intrusts his case to his legal adviser, and generally speaking knows but little of the nature of the proceedings in the cause. It would be a manifest injustice, therefore, to bind him down to the admission of facts merely on account of circumstances of which he has had no cognizance whatever. In this instance an attorney may have put in the plea without consulting the defendant, and is it just that in a criminal case the latter should be estopped from denying what in fact he has never affirmed.

The Common Serjeant consulted Mr. Baron Rolfe upon the point, and that learned judge decided that the evidence was not admissible, on the ground that the plea might have been put in without the knowledge of the defendant. The case was subsequently closed, no other evidence of the fact that the prisoner was a minor having been given, except that when applied to for the payment of a debt, and threatened with an action, he had told the applicant he might do as he pleased, that he, the defendant, was a minor, and that he should plead his infancy. The mother of the prisoner had given evidence before the magistrate, but although called on the part of the prosecution at the trial, she did not appear.

Wilkins submitted that there was no case for him to answer. The prosecution was bound to make out the falsity of the pretence as well as the guilty intention on the part of the prisoner. Here there was no evidence whatever of the former. The prisoner's admission is of no avail. It is not evidence, even of his belief, that he was a minor. It might have been used for the mere purpose of preventing a creditor from taking proceedings against him. Still less is such an admission evidence of the fact itself, since the prisoner could have had no knowledge of what his age really was. He would only be aware of it, if at all, from hearsay. The same rule would apply here as in cases of pauper examiners, where the statement of the pauper himself as to his age is not receivable for the purpose of establishing a settlement.

Ballantine contended that there was at least sufficient evidence for the jury. If it were necessary in all cases where the age of a party was to be proved, that some one should be called who was present at his birth, a failure of justice would constantly arise, since all such witnesses might be dead, or at least it might be impossible to produce them. Here the prosecution had done all it could do; it had subpœnaed the mother; she had not thought proper to attend, and he should submit, that under all the circumstances, the question was one for the jury.

The Common Serjeant.—I cannot see how the jury are to take this case into their consideration. It is necessary to shew that the prisoner was under age. The best evidence of the fact is that of a person who was present at the birth. Such a person is producible, but is not here. I cannot speculate as to motives, I only know that she is absent.

Ballantine then suggested that the mother's deposition should be read, and referred to Reg. v. Oldroyd (Russ. & Ryan, 88); but

The Common Serjeant thought, if admissible at all, it was now too late. He undertook, however, to consult Mr. Baron Rolfe as to whether the admission made by the prisoner was evidence of the fact of minority; and, on his return to the court, he stated that learned judge's opinion to be, that it was a question for the jury under the circumstances.

It was accordingly left to them, but they acquitted the prisoner.

[Note.—The decision in this case appears so opposed to principle that one is tempted to believe that in the midst of the performance of arduous duties in another court, the learned baron must have misapprehended the precise nature of the proposition submitted to him. That the evidence in question might properly be left to the jury is undoubted, because it would tend to establish one of the two necessary ingredients in the offence, namely, the guilty knowledge; but if a party is held incompetent to declare his own age, how can it be receivable to establish the other ingredient in the proof—that he was in fact of a particular age at the time he made the representation. If there is a tittle of evidence adduced, the jury are entitled to decide as to its sufficiency, but it is for the Court to declare whether or not there is any legal evidence for them to consider. Here it would seem there was none but what must have been founded on mere hearsay, and therefore not legally adducible; consequently, a material allegation in the indictment was utterly unproved. —Reporter.]

Cap. CIX.

An Act to indemnify Persons connected with Art-Unions, and others, against certain Penalties. (Sept. 5, 1844.)

Cap. CX.

An Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint Stock Companies. (Sept. 5, 1844.)

Long as is this statute, we deem it necessary, on account of its great importance, to reprint it entire, omitting only the voluminous schedules.

1. General provisions. Operation of Act as to time.—Whereas it is expedient to make provision for the due registration of joint stock companies during the formation and subsistence thereof; and also, after such complete registration as is hereinafter mentioned, to invest such companies with the qualities and incidents of corporations, with some modifications, and subject to certain conditions and regulations; and also to prevent the establishment of any companies which shall not be duly constituted and regulated according to the provisions of this Act: Now be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that this Act shall come into operation at the following times; that is to say, as to the officers to be appointed in pursuance hereof for the registration of companies, and the regulation of the office hereby provided for that purpose, immediately on the passing hereof; and as to all companies to which this Act is to apply, and all other the provisions hereinafter contained, except such as relate to such officers and office as aforesaid, on the first day of November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-four.

2. Operation of Act as to companies. Application of term "Joint Stock Company." Future companies. Companies for executing Parliamentary works. Incorporated companies.—And be it enacted, That this Act shall apply to every joint stock company, as hereinafter defined, established in any part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, except Scotland, or established in Scotland, and having an office or place of business in any other part of the United Kingdom, for any commercial purpose, or for any purpose of profit, or for the purpose of assurance or insurance (except banking companies, schools, and scientific and literary institutions, and also friendly societies, loan societies, and benefit building societies, respectively duly certified and enrolled under the statutes in force respecting such societies, other than such friendly societies as grant assurances on lives to the extent hereinafter specified); and that the term "Joint Stock Company" shall comprehend—

Every partnership whereof the capital is divided or agreed to be divided into shares, and so as to be transferable without the express consent of all the copartners; and also,

Every assurance company or association for the purpose of assurance or insurance on lives, or against any contingency involving the duration of human life, or against the risk of loss or damage by fire, or by storm or other casualty, or against the risk of loss or damage to ships at sea or on voyage, or to their cargoes, or for granting or purchasing annuites on lives; and also every institution enrolled under any of the Acts of Parliament relating to friendly societies, which institutions shall make assurances on lives, or against any contingency involving the duration of human life to an extent upon one life or for any one person to an amount exceeding two hundred pounds, whether such companies, societies, or institutions shall be joint stock companies or mutual assurance societies, or both: and also,

Every partnership which, at its formation, or by subsequent admission (except any admission subsequent on devolution or other act in law), shall consist of more than twenty-five members:

And that, except where the provisions of this Act are expressly applied to partnerships existing before the said first day of November, it shall be held to apply only to partnerships, the formation of which shall be commenced after that date: provided nevertheless, that, except as hereinafter specially provided, this Act shall not extend to any company for executing any bridge, road, cut, canal, reservoir, aqueduct, waterwork, navigation, tunnel, archway, railway, pier, port, harbour, ferry, or dock, which cannot be carried into execution without obtaining the authority of Parliament: provided also, that, except as hereinafter is specially provided, this Act shall not extend to any company incorporated, or which may be hereafter incorporated by statute or charter, nor to any company authorized, or which may be hereafter authorized, by statute or letters patent, to sue and be sued in the name of some officer or person.

3. Construction of words.—And be it declared, That the following words and expressions are intended to have the meanings hereby assigned to them respectively, so far as such meanings are not excluded by the context or by the nature of the subject-matter: that is to say,

The word "company" to mean any joint stock company or other institution, as before defined:

The expression "assurance company" to mean any assurance company, association, or institution, as before defined:

The word "directors" to mean the persons having the direction, conduct, management, or superintendence of the affairs of a company:

The expression "promoter" or "promoter of a company," to apply to every person acting by whatever name in the forming and establishing of a company at any period prior to the company obtaining a certificate of complete registration as hereinafter mentioned:

The word "subscriber" to mean any person who shall have agreed in writing to take or have taken any shares in a proposed company or in a company formed, and who shall not have executed the deed of settlement, or a deed referring thereto:

The word "shareholder" to mean any person entitled to a share in a company, and who has executed the deed of settlement, or a deed referring to it, or, in the case of mutual assurance societies, any person who shall be an assured member thereof:

The word "person" to apply to bodies politic or corporate, whether sole or aggregate:

The expression "Commissioners of the Treasury" to apply to the Lord High Treasurer for the time being, or the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the time being, or any three or more of them:

The expression "Committee of Privy Council for Trade" to mean the Lords of the Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council for the consideration of all matters of trade and plantations:

The expression "secretary of the committee" to mean one of the joint assistant secretaries of the said Committee of Privy Council for trade:

And, subject as aforesaid to the context and to the nature of the subject-matter, words denoting the singular number are to be understood to apply also to a plurality of persons or things, and words denoting the masculine gender are to be understood to apply also to persons of the feminine gender.

4. Registration of companies. Provisional registration. Returns by promoters of companies. Certificate of provisional registration.—And be it enacted, That before proceeding to make public, whether by way of prospectus, handbill, or advertisement, any intention or proposal to form any company for any purpose within the meaning of this Act, whether for executing any such work as aforesaid under the authority of Parliament, or for any other purpose, it shall be the duty of the promoters of such company, and they or some of them are hereby required, to make to the office hereby provided for the registration of joint stock companies (and hereinafter called the registry office) returns of the following particulars according to the schedule (C) hereunto annexed; that is to say,

1. The proposed name of the intended company; and also,
2. The business or purpose of the company; and also,
3. The names of its promoters, together with their respective occupations, places of business (if any), and places of residence; and also the following particulars, either before or after such publication as aforesaid, when and as from time to time they shall be decided on, viz.
4. The name of the street, square, or other place in which the provisional place of business or place of meeting shall be situate, and the number (if any) or other designation of the house or office; and also,
5. The names of the members of the committee or other body acting in the formation of the company, their respective occupations, places of business (if any), and places of residence, together with a written consent on the part of every such member or promoter to become such, and also a written agreement on the part of such member or promoter, entered into with some one or more persons as trustees for the said company, to take one or more shares in the proposed undertaking, which must be signed by the member or promoter whose agreement it purports to be (but such agreements need not be on a stamp); and also,
6. The names of the officers of the company and their respective occupations, places of business (if any), and places of residence; and also,
7. The names of the subscribers to the company, their respective occupations, places of business (if any), and places of residence; and also, before it shall be circulated or issued to the public,
8. A copy of every prospectus or circular, handbill or advertisement, or other such document at any time addressed to the public, or to the subscribers or others, relative to the formation or modification of such company:
9. And afterwards, from time to time, until the complete registration of such company, a return of a copy of every addition to or change made in any of the above particulars:

And that upon such registration of at the least the three particulars first before mentioned the promoters of such company shall be entitled to a certificate of provisional registration.

5. Penalty as to delaying registration.—And be it enacted, That if for a period of one month after the particulars hereby required to be registered, or any of them, shall have been ascertained or determined, the promoters of any company fail to register such particulars, then, on conviction thereof, any promoter as aforesaid shall be liable to forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding twenty pounds.

6. Relief from penalties to promoters by the appointment of a solicitor to make returns. Return of appointment and acceptance. Penalty on solicitor failing to make returns.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That if the promoters of a proposed company appoint a person, being an attorney or solicitor of one of her Majesty's superior courts of law or equity, to be solicitor for the promoters of such company, and return to the said registry office a duplicate of such appointment in writing, signed by some one or more of such promoters, together with a duplicate of the acceptance of such appointment, signed by the person so appointed, then, until a duplicate of the revocation or of the resignation of such appointment be returned in like manner, so signed as aforesaid, or until the decease of such solicitor, all returns by this Act required to be made by such promoters shall be made by such solicitor in their behalf, and the penalty hereinbefore imposed in respect of any failure to make such returns shall not be incurred by them; and that if within the period of one month after the particulars hereby required to be registered, or any of them, shall have been ascertained or determined, such solicitor fail to make such returns, then he shall be liable to forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding twenty pounds; and that if it be made to appear to the court to which he shall belong that he fraudulently omitted to make a return of any such particulars, then he shall be liable to be suspended from practice for any time to be appointed by the said court, or to be struck off the rolls of the said court.

7. Complete registration. Constitution of companies. Provisions of deeds of settlements. Covenant to pay instalments on shares, &c. Provision in deed for purposes in Schedule A. Execution of deed of settlement. Authentication of deed. Registration of deed. Supplementary deed.—And be it enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any joint stock company hereafter to be formed for any purpose within the meaning of this Act, whether for executing any such work as aforesaid under the authority of Parliament, or for any other purpose, to act otherwise than provisionally in accordance with this Act until such company shall have obtained a certificate of complete registration as hereinafter provided; and no joint stock company shall be entitled to receive a certificate of complete registration unless it be formed by some deed or writing under the hands and seals of the shareholders therein; and in or by such deed there must be appointed not less than three directors, and also one or more auditors; and such deed must set forth in a schedule thereto, in a tabular manner, according to the order hereinafter mentioned, the following particulars; that is to say,

1. The name of the company; and also,
2. The business or purpose of the company; and also,
3. The principal or only place for carrying on such business, and every branch office (if any); and also,
4. The amount of the proposed capital, and of any proposed additional capital, and the means by which it is to be raised; and where the capital shall not be money, or shall not consist entirely of money, then the nature of such capital and the value thereof shall be stated: and also,
5. The amount of money (if any) to be raised or authorized to be raised by loan; and also,
6. The total amount of the capital subscribed or proposed to be subscribed at the date of such deed; and also,
7. The division of the capital (if any) into equal shares, and the total number of such shares, each of which is to be distinguished by a separate number in a regular series; and also,
8. The names and occupations and (except bodies politic) the places of residence of all the then subscribers, according to the information possessed by the officers of the company in respect of such names and occupations and places of residence; and also,
9. The number of the shares which each subscriber holds, and the distinctive numbers thereof, distinguishing the numbers of the shares on which the deposit has been paid from those on which it has not been paid; and also,
10. The names of the then directors of the company, and of the then trustees of the company (if any), and of the then auditors of the company, together with their respective places of business (if any), occupations, and places of residence; and also,
11. The duration of the company, and the mode or condition of its dissolution:

And that such deed must contain a covenant on the part of every shareholder, with a trustee on the part of the company, to pay up the amount of the instalments on the shares taken by such shareholder, and to perform the several engagements in the deed contained on the part of the shareholders; and that such deed must also make provision for such of the purposes set forth in Schedule A, to this Act annexed, as the nature and business of the company may require, and either with or without provision for such other purposes (not inconsistent with law) as the parties to such deed shall think proper; and that every such deed of settlement must be signed by at least one-fourth in number of the persons who at the date of the deed have become subscribers, and who shall hold at least one-fourth of the maximum number of shares in the capital of the company; and that every such deed must be certified by two directors of the company, by writing indorsed thereon in the form contained in the schedule (B) to this Act annexed; and that on the production of such deed, setting forth such matters and making such provisions as are hereby required to be provided for, and being so signed and certified, together with a complete abstract or index thereof, to be previously approved by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, and also a copy of such deed, for the purpose of registering the same, or as soon after such production as conveniently may be, the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies shall grant a certificate of complete registration, according to the provisions of this Act in that behalf; and unless such deed and other matters be so produced, and such conditions be so performed, it shall not be lawful for him to grant such certificate; and that after such certificate shall be granted, it shall be taken as evidence of the proper provisions being inserted in such deed, and of the performance of the conditions hereby required previously to the granting such certificate of complete registration; and that any defect or omission as regards the matters hereby required in any deed of settlement may from time to time be supplied by a supplementary deed or deeds; and that if any such supplementary deed be not inconsistent with or repugnant to this Act, or any Act respecting joint stock companies, and if it be duly registered, then it shall have the same effect as if there were only one deed for the purposes of this Act; and that unless the same shall be registered it shall be of no force or effect.

8. Notification of incompleteness of deeds of settlement.—And be it enacted, That if any deed of settlement or supplementary deed of settlement, whether made before or after the granting of the certificate of complete registration, appear to such Registrar of Joint Stock Companies to be insufficient by reason of the omission or incompleteness of any of the provisions therein contained for the purposes set forth in the said schedule (A), or if the deed contained provisions which appear to such registrar to be inconsistent with or repugnant to this Act, or any Act for the time being in force respecting joint stock companies, then as soon thereafter as conveniently may be, such registrar shall notify the same in writing to the persons, or to the company by whom the deed shall have been presented for registration, specifying in such notification the particulars wherein such deed of settlement or supplementary deed of settlement is incomplete, or inconsistent with or repugnant to any such Act as aforesaid.

9. Companies for executing parliamentary works to register copies of documents required to be deposited by the standing orders. Certificate of complete registration.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That if any company for executing any bridge, road, cut, canal, reservoir, aqueduct, waterwork, navigation, tunnel, archway, railway, pier, port, harbour, ferry, or dock, which cannot be carried into execution without the authority of Parliament, deposit at the proper offices of the two Houses of Parliament, in compliance with the standing orders of such Houses respectively, and at or within the time required by such standing orders, such deeds of partnership or subscription contracts as shall be required to be deposited by such standing orders, and also return to the said registry office a copy of such deeds of partnership or subscription contracts, together with such certificate of the receipt of such plans, sections, and books of reference as shall be appointed by the said Committee of Privy Council for Trade, then it shall be lawful for the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, and he is hereby required, to accept the same instead of the deed of settlement by this Act required to be returned for the purpose of obtaining a certificate of complete registration; and thereupon such company shall be entitled to a certificate of complete registration accordingly.

10. Further registration: returns of further deeds and changes. Penalty.—And be it enacted, That throughout the continuance of any joint stock company completely registered under this Act, except such companies as shall have been incorporated by Act of Parliament after complete registration, and within one month after the date of any new or supplementary deed of settlement, there shall be transmitted by the directors of every such company to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies a copy of such new or supplementary deed of settlement, together with a complete abstract thereof, so approved of as aforesaid; and within six months after any change shall have taken place in any of the particulars hereinbefore required to be set forth in the schedule to the deed of settlement, except so far as respects the shareholders thereof and their respective shares, there shall be transmitted returns of such particulars, so far as the same shall have been changed; and if within such period any such return be not made, then, on conviction thereof, every director of such company shall be liable to pay a sum not exceeding twenty pounds.

11. Half-yearly returns of changes and additions of members. Penalty.—And be it enacted, That in the months of January and July in every year the directors of every joint stock company completely registered under this Act, except companies which shall have been incorporated by Act of Parliament after complete registration, shall make or cause to be made the following returns to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, namely—

A return according to the schedule (E) hereunto annexed, and containing the particulars therein set forth, of every transfer of any share in such company which shall have been made since the preceding half-yearly return (or, in the case of the first of such returns made by such company since the complete registration thereof), and which shall have come to the knowledge of the directors.

And also a return according to the schedule (F) hereunto annexed, and containing the particulars therein set forth, of the names and places of abode of all persons who shall either have ceased to be shareholders of such company, or have become shareholders of such company otherwise than by a transfer as aforesaid, since the preceding half-yearly return, or since the complete registration of the company, as the case may require, and also of the changes in the names of all shareholders of such company, whose names shall have been changed, by marriage or otherwise, since the last preceding half-yearly return, or since the complete registration of the company, as the case may require:

And if within any such period any such return be not made, then, on conviction thereof, every director of such company shall be liable to pay a sum not exceeding twenty pounds.

12. Returns made by request.—And be it enacted, That if at any time any party to a transfer of a share request in writing the directors of any such company to make a return thereof, then forthwith, on such request, the directors shall make the same accordingly; and that on proof of such transfer and such request to the satisfaction of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, it shall be lawful for any such party to make a return of such transfer, which shall be received, marked, and registered, and with the same effect, as hereby provided in the case of returns made by such companies.

13. Restriction of rights of shareholders by non-registration of shares transferred. Continuance of liability of shareholders transferring.—And be it enacted, That until the return of the transfer or other fact or event whereby a person becomes the holder of any shares, be made, pursuant to the provisions hereinbefore contained, it shall not be lawful for such company, its directors or officers, if such fact or event be known to them respectively, to pay to any such person any part of the profits of the concern, nor for any such person to sue for or recover any part of the profits arising in respect of such share, or in anywise to act as a shareholder; and that until the return of the transfer of any share shall have been made pursuant to the provisions hereinbefore contained, the person whose share shall have been thereby transferred shall, so far as respects his liability to the debts and engagements of the company, and also as respects the reimbursement of any loss, damages, costs, and charges he may incur thereby, be deemed to continue a shareholder of such company.

14. Periodical registration of companies. Penalty.—And be it enacted, That annually in the month of January in every year every company completely registered under this Act, except companies which shall have been incorporated by Act of Parliament after complete registration, shall make to the said registry office a return of the name and business of the company; and that on the receipt of such return the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies shall give a certificate thereof; and that if within the further period of one month such return be not made, then, on conviction thereof, such company shall be liable to pay a sum not exceeding twenty pounds: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the lords of the said committee, on the application of any company, to appoint any other period of the year for the making of such annual return as aforesaid.

15. Returns generally; evidence of registration. Certificates of registration. Effect of certificate as evidence.—And be it enacted, That when the particulars and documents severally by this Act required to be returned to the said registry office shall have been so returned, it shall be the duty of the said Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, and he is hereby required, to cause to be written on every such document and return of particulars brought to him for registration the day of the receipt thereof, and to cause to be marked on every such return or document, in writing or otherwise, a number denoting the order in which the same was received, and also, upon demand, to cause an acknowledgment of the receipt of such return or document to be given to the person by whom the same shall be so brought; and that if such returns or documents be conformable to the provisions of this Act, or of any regulations in that behalf, then it shall be the duty of the registrar, and he is hereby required, forthwith to register the same, and, on demand, to grant to such company a certificate of provisional or complete registration, as the case may require, signed by him, and sealed with the seal of his office; which certificate must set forth whether the company has been constituted provisionally or completely; and that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, any such certificate, or a copy of any such return as aforesaid, shall be received in evidence, without proof of the signature thereto, or of the seal of office affixed thereto.

16. Authentication of returns.—And be it enacted, That until the company shall have obtained its certificate of complete registration, the promoters of the company, or their solicitor as aforesaid, shall make or cause to be made every return by this Act required to be made; and after such company shall have obtained a certificate of complete registration the directors of the company shall make or cause to be made every such return; and one or more of such promoters, or their solicitor, or such directors, as the case may be, shall sign such return; and every such return which shall be made after complete registration of the company, shall be sealed with the seal of the company.

17. Regulations as to returns. Regulations to apply to all companies.—And be it enacted, That if the Committee of Privy Council for Trade shall deem it expedient, then it shall be lawful for the said committee, and they are hereby authorised, from time to time to make regulations respecting the form of any such returns as are hereby directed to be made, and the manner and time of making them, and for those purposes to alter and vary the schedules annexed to this Act, and to dispense with any of the returns hereby made necessary, or any of the forms of returns prescribed by this Act; and that every such regulation shall be published in the London Gazette, and thereupon shall be of the like force as if the same were contained in this Act: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to permit the said committee to make any such regulations which shall not apply alike to all such companies as may be registered under the authority of this Act, so far as the same may be applicable to them.

18. Inspection of returns at registry office. Certified copies or extracts. Legal effect thereof.—And be it enacted, That every person shall be at liberty to inspect the returns, deeds, registers, and indexes which shall be made to or kept by the said Registrar of Joint Stock Companies; and that there shall be paid for such inspection such fees as may be appointed by the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury in that behalf, not exceeding one shilling for each such inspection; and that any person shall be at liberty to require a copy or extract of any such return or deed, to be certified by the said registrar; and there shall be paid for such certified copy or extract such fee as the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may appoint in that behalf, not exceeding sixpence for each folio of such copy or extract; and that in all courts of law and equity and elsewhere, every such copy or extract so certified shall be received in evidence, without proof of the signature thereto, or of the seal of office affixed thereto.

19. Office for registration. Appointment of registrar, &c. of joint stock companies. Assistant registrar. Leave of absence.—And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, and they are hereby empowered, to appoint a person to be and to be called the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, and, if the said committee see fit, an assistant registrar, clerks, and other necessary officers and servants; and that every such registrar and assistant registrar, clerks, and officers, shall be entitled to hold their offices during the pleasure only of the said committee; and that from time to time it shall be lawful for the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and they are hereby authorized, to fix the salary or remuneration of such registrar, assistant registrar, clerks, officers, and servants; and that, subject to the provisions of this Act, it shall be lawful for the said Committee of Privy Council for Trade, and they are hereby authorized, to make rules for regulating the execution of the office of the said registrar; and that such registrar shall have a seal of office to be by him used in the authentication of all matters relating to his said office in respect of which such authentication is by this Act required; and that such assistant registrar shall, in the absence of the registrar, be competent to do all things which the registrar is authorized or empowered, directed, or required to do, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as the registrar himself may do; and all provisions in this Act relating to the signature and seal of office of the said registrar shall apply to the said assistant registrar: provided always that the registrar shall not be absent from the duties of his office, except on account of ill health or other urgent cause, without express leave in writing of the said Committee of Privy Council for Trade for that purpose previously obtained.

20. Registrar's office attendance.—And be it enacted, that from the hour of ten of the clock in the morning until five of the clock in the afternoon, and at such other times as the said Committee of Privy Council for Trade shall appoint, such registrar, or in the unavoidable, or, as aforesaid, permitted absence of the registrar, then such assistant registrar, shall give his attendance at the said office every day throughout the year, except Sundays, Good Friday, Christmas Day, and any other general holiday or fast day appointed by her Majesty in Council.

21. Fees of registration. Commissioners of Treasury may fix other fees. Balance to go to Consolidated Fund. Regulation of fees. Return of three-fourths of the fee on capital to companies obtaining Acts of Parliament. Repayment by Treasury.—And be it enacted, That every company shall pay the following fees; that is to say,

For a certificate of provisional registration, the sum of five pounds.

For a certificate of complete registration the sum of five pounds; and one shilling additional in respect of every thousand pounds value of capital, as declared on the formation of the company in the deed of settlement, or by any other special authority.

For an annual certificate the sum of one pound:

And also such other fees as shall be appointed to be paid in respect of any other services to be performed by the said registrar; and that from time to time it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and they are hereby authorised, in addition to the fees hereinbefore required to be paid in respect of such certificates, to fix such other fees to be paid for the services to be performed by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies as they shall deem requisite to defray both the expenses of the said office and the salaries or other remuneration of the said registrar and of any other persons employed under him, with the sanction of the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, in the execution of this Act; and that the balance, if any, shall be carried to the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and be paid accordingly into the receipt of her Majesty's Exchequer at Westminster; and that it shall be lawful for the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to regulate the manner in which such fees are to be received, and in which they are to be kept, and in which they are to be accounted for; provided always, that if within two years after a company shall have obtained a certificate of complete registration such company shall obtain an Act for the incorporation thereof, then three-fourths of the fee paid by or on behalf of such company on such complete registration in respect of the capital of the company shall be reimbursed and repaid to the said company, and that it shall be lawful for the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and they are hereby authorized and empowered, to repay the same accordingly.

22. Extortion a misdemeanor.—And be it enacted, That if either the said Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, or any person employed under him, either demand or receive any gratuity or reward in respect of any service performed by him, other than the fees aforesaid, then for every such offence every such registrar or person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

23. Powers and privileges of companies. On provisional registration. Effect of provisional registration.—And be it enacted, That on the provisional registration of any company being certified by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies it shall be lawful for the promoters of any company so registered to act provisionally, but not for any longer period than twelve months from the date of the certificate, unless such certificate shall be renewed, which may be done on application for that purpose; and no such renewed certificate shall be in force for a longer period than twelve months from the date thereof, and it shall be lawful for the promoters of such company,—

- To assume the name of the intended company, but coupled with the words "registered provisionally;" and also,
- To open subscription lists; and also,
- To allot shares, and receive deposits by way of earnest thereon, at a rate not exceeding ten shillings for every one hundred pounds on the amount of every share in the capital of the intended company; and also, in the case of companies for executing any bridge, road, cut, canal, reservoir, aqueduct, water-work, navigation, tunnel, archway, railway, pier, port, harbour, ferry, or dock, which cannot be carried into execution without the authority of Parliament, in addition to and exclusive of such sum of ten shillings per hundred pounds, such further sum per hundred pounds on the amount of every such share as may be required by the standing orders of either House of Parliament to be deposited before the obtaining of an Act of Parliament for enabling the company to execute such work; and also,
- To perform such other acts only as are necessary for constituting the company, or for obtaining letters patent, or a charter, or an Act of Parliament;

But not to make calls, nor to purchase, contract for, or hold lands, nor to enter into contracts for any services, or for the execution of any works, or for the supply of any stores, except such services and stores or other things as are necessarily required for the establishing of the company, and except any purchase or other contract to be made conditional on the completion of the company, and to take effect after the certificate of complete registration, Act of Parliament, or charter, or letters patent, shall have been obtained, and, except in the case of companies for executing such works as aforesaid, contracts for services, in making surveys and performing all other acts necessary for obtaining an Act of incorporation or other Act for enabling the company to execute such works.

24. Proceedings of companies before registration, and while a company is not deemed to be provisionally registered. 25l. penalty against persons offending.—And be it enacted, That if before a certificate of provisional registration shall be obtained the promoters or any of them, or any person employed by or under them, take any moneys in consideration of the allotment either of shares or of any interest in the concern, or by way of deposit for shares to be granted or allotted; or issue, in the name or on behalf of the company, any note or scrip, or letter of allotment, or other instrument or writing to denote a right or claim, or preference or promise, absolute or conditional, to any shares; or advertise the existence or proposed formation of the company; or make any contract whatsoever for or in the name or on behalf of such intended company; then every such person shall be liable to forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding twenty-five pounds; and that it shall be lawful for any person to sue for and recover the same by action of debt.

25. On complete registration. Powers and privileges obtained thereby. Incorporation. Without restriction of liability. Company empowered to act. Restriction of powers of companies for executing Parliamentary works before obtaining an Act. Power to obtain Act of Parliament. Regulation of company under such Act.—And be it enacted, That on the complete registration of any company being certified by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, such company and the then shareholders therein, and all the succeeding shareholders, whilst shareholders, shall be and are hereby incorporated as from the date of such certificate by the name of the company as set forth in the deed of settlement, and for the purpose of carrying on the trade or business for which the company was formed, but only according to the provisions of this Act, and of such deed as aforesaid, and for the purpose of suing and being sued, and of taking and enjoying the property and effects of the said company; and thereupon any covenants or engagements entered into by any of the shareholders or other persons with any trustee on the behalf of the company, at any time before the complete registration thereof, may be proceeded on by the said company and enforced in all respects as if they had been made or entered into with the said company after the incorporation thereof; and such company shall continue so incorporated until it shall be dissolved, and all its affairs wound up; but so as not in anywise to restrict the liability of any of the shareholders of the company, under any judgment, decree, or order for the payment of money which shall be obtained against such company, or any of the members thereof, in any action or suit prosecuted by or against such company in any court of law or equity; but every such shareholder shall, in respect of such moneys, subject as after mentioned, be and continue liable as he would have been if the said company had not been incorporated; and thereupon it shall be lawful for the said company, and they are hereby empowered, as follows; that is to say,

1. To use the registered name of the company, adding thereto "registered;" and also,
2. To have a common seal (with power to break, alter, and change the same from time to time), but on which must be inscribed the name of the company; and also,
3. To sue and be sued by their registered name in respect of any claim by or upon the company upon or by any person, whether a member of the company or not, so long as any such claim may remain unsatisfied; and also,
4. To enter into contracts for the execution of the works, and for the supply of the stores, or for any other necessary purpose of the company; and also,
5. To purchase and hold lands, tenements, and hereditaments in the name of the said company, or of the trustees or trustee thereof, for the purpose of occupying the same as a place or places of business of the said company, and also (but nevertheless with a license, general or special, for that purpose, to be granted by the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, first had and obtained), such other lands, tenements, and hereditaments as the nature of the business of the company may require; and also,
6. To issue certificates of shares, and also,
7. To receive instalments from subscribers in respect of the amount of any shares not paid up; and also,
8. To borrow or raise money within the limitations prescribed by any special authority; and also,
9. To declare dividends out of the profits of the concern; and also,
10. To hold general meetings periodically, and extraordinary meetings upon being duly summoned for that purpose; and also,
11. To make from time to time, at some general meeting of shareholders specially summoned for the purpose, bye laws for the regulation of the shareholders, members, directors, and officers of the company, such bye laws not being repugnant to or inconsistent with the provisions of this Act or of the deed of settlement of the company; and also,
12. To perform all other acts necessary for carrying into effect the purposes of such company, and in all respects as other partnerships are entitled to do:

And the said company are hereby empowered and required,—

13. To appoint from time to time, for the conduct and superintendence of the execution of the affairs of the company, a number of directors, not less than three, for a period not greater than five years, with or without eligibility to be re-elected at the expiration of the term, as may be prescribed by any deed of settlement or bye law; and also,
14. To appoint and remove one or more auditors, and such other officers as the deed of settlement under which the company shall be constituted may authorize:

Subject nevertheless, with respect to all such powers and privileges, to the provisions of this Act, and subject also to the provisions of the deed of settlement of the company or any other special authority: provided always, with regard to any company for executing any bridge, road, cut, canal, reservoir, aqueduct, waterwork, navigation, tunnel, archway, railway, pier, port, harbour, ferry, or dock, which cannot be carried into execution without obtaining the authority of Parliament, that on the complete registration of any such company, and before such company shall have obtained its Act of incorporation or other Act whereby the authority of Parliament shall be granted for executing such work, it shall not be lawful for any such company or the directors or officers thereof to exercise the hereinbefore mentioned power to enter into contracts, otherwise than conditionally upon obtaining such Act, or to exercise the power to purchase and hold lands as aforesaid, or to exercise the power to receive instalments from shareholders beyond the sum or per-centage necessary to be deposited in compliance with the standing orders of either House of Parliament, or such other sum as may be requisite for obtaining the Act of incorporation or other Act for granting the authority of Parliament to execute such work, or to exercise the power to borrow money, as aforesaid, or to exercise the power to declare dividends, as aforesaid; and, subject to these last-mentioned exceptions, all the powers by this enactment hereinbefore given to any company completely registered, except the general power to perform all acts necessary for carrying on the business of the company, may be exercised as fully by any such company so completely registered as by any other company so completely registered: provided always, that it shall be lawful for any such company to perform all acts which may be necessary for obtaining an Act of incorporation or other Act for obtaining the authority of Parliament to execute its works as aforesaid, any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding; and that upon obtaining such Act of incorporation or other such Act as aforesaid, or at the time of the coming into operation of such Act, as shall be thereby appointed, all the powers which any such company shall obtain by virtue of this Act, and all the provisions and regulations of this Act which shall apply to such company, shall cease and determine, except so far as shall be otherwise provided by such Act of incorporation or other such Act as aforesaid.

26. Shareholders. Restriction of rights prior to execution of deed of settlement. Rights thereafter. Restriction on disposal of shares. 10l. penalty. Contracts of certificates of shares. Penalty as to false certificate.—And be it enacted, That no shareholder of any joint stock company completely registered under this Act shall be entitled to receive any dividends or profits, or be entitled to the remedies or powers hereby given to shareholders, until he shall have executed the deed of settlement of the said company, or some deed referring thereto, and also have paid up all instalments or calls due from him, and shall have been registered in the registry office aforesaid; and further, that it shall be lawful for every shareholder who shall have signed such deed, and paid up such instalments or calls, and shall have been registered, and he is hereby entitled,—

- To be present at all general meetings of the company; and also,
- To take part in the discussions thereat; and also,
- To vote in the determination of any question thereat, and that either in person or by proxy, unless the deed of settlement shall preclude shareholders from voting by proxy; and also,
- To vote in the choice of directors, and of every auditor to be elected by the shareholders;

Subject nevertheless to the provisions of this Act, and of the deed of settlement of the company or other special authority, so far as such provisions shall either regulate or restrict the exercise of such powers, but not so as to deprive such shareholders thereof; and further, with regard to subscribers and every person entitled or claiming to be entitled to any share in any joint stock company the formation of which shall be commenced after the first day of November, one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, that until such joint stock company shall have obtained a certificate of complete registration, and until any such subscriber or person shall have been duly registered as a shareholder in the said registry office, it shall not be lawful for such person to dispose, by sale or mortgage, of such share, or of any interest therein, and that every contract for or sale or disposal of such share or interest shall be void, and that every person entering into such contract shall forfeit a sum not exceeding ten pounds; and that for better protecting purchasers it shall be the duty of the directors of the company by whom certificates of shares are issued to state on every such certificate the date of the first complete registration of the company, as before provided: and that if any such director or officer knowingly make a false statement in that respect, then he shall be liable to the pains and penalties of a misdemeanor.

27. Regulation of companies. Directors. Powers of directors. Restriction as to lending money.—And be it enacted, That with regard to the powers and duties of directors it shall be lawful for the directors of any joint stock company registered under this Act,—

1. To conduct and manage the affairs of the company according to the provisions and subject to the restrictions of this Act, and of the deed of settlement, and of any bye law, and for that purpose to enter into all such contracts and do and execute all such acts and deeds as the circumstances may require, and also,

2. To appoint the secretary, if any; and also,
3. To appoint the clerks and servants, and also from time to time, as they see fit,
4. To remove such secretary, clerks, and servants, and to appoint others, as occasion shall require, and also,
5. To appoint other persons for special services as the concerns of the company may from time to time require; and also,
6. To hold meetings periodically and from time to time as the concerns of the company shall require, and also,
7. To appoint a chairman to preside at all such meetings, and in his absence to appoint a chairman at each such meeting,

Subject nevertheless to the provisions and restrictions of this Act, and to the provisions of the deed of settlement of the company or other special authority, but not so as to enable the shareholders to act in their own behalf in the ordinary management of the concerns of the company otherwise than by means of directors provided always, that it shall not be lawful for the directors to purchase any shares of the company, nor to sell any such shares except shares forfeited on the non-payment of calls or instalments, nor to lend to any one of their number, or to any officer of the company, any money belonging to the company without the authority and sanction of a general meeting of shareholders duly convened

28. Pecuniary qualification of directors, patrons &c —And be it enacted, That henceforth, notwithstanding any thing to the contrary in any deed of settlement or other instrument by which a joint stock company shall be constituted or regulated, it shall not be lawful to appoint any person to be or to act as a director, whether honorary or otherwise, or to hold the office of patron or president, or any other office of the like description, nor shall it be lawful for any person to act in any such capacity unless at the time of such his appointment or of such his acting he hold in his own right at least one share in the capital of such company, and that if, without having such share, any person be or become or act as a director, patron, or president of such company, or in any office of such or the like nature, then he shall forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding twenty pounds, and that if any person be announced or held out by or on behalf of the company as a director, patron, or president, or as holding any office of such or the like description, without having so consented or acted, then each director of such company knowingly concurring in such representation shall forfeit a sum not exceeding twenty pounds.

29. Disqualification of directors As to contracts Approval of general meeting of shareholders As to shares, &c —And be it enacted, That if any director of a joint stock company registered under this Act be either directly or indirectly concerned or interested in any contract proposed to be made by or on behalf of the company, whether for land, materials, work to be done, or for any purpose whatsoever, during the time he shall be a director, he shall, on the subject of any such contract in which he may be so concerned or interested, be precluded from voting or otherwise acting as a director, and that if any contract or dealing (except a policy of assurance, grant of annuity, or contract for the purchase of an article or of service, which is respectively the subject of the proper business of the company, such contract being made upon the same or the like terms as any like contract with other customers or purchasers) shall be entered into, in which any director shall be interested, then the terms of such contract or dealing shall be submitted to the next general or special meeting of the shareholders to be summoned for that purpose, and that no such contract shall have force until approved and confirmed by the majority of votes of the shareholders present at such meeting, and that if at any time any director cease to be a holder of the prescribed number of shares in the company, or shall become a bankrupt or insolvent, or shall have suspended payment, or compromised with his creditors, or be declared a lunatic, then it shall be unlawful for any such director to continue as a director, or to act as such, and the office of such director shall be and is hereby declared to be vacant

30. Validity of acts of directors —And be it enacted, That, notwithstanding it may afterwards be discovered that there was some defect or error in the appointment of any person acting, or who may have acted, as a director of a joint stock company registered under this Act, or that such person was disqualified, yet all acts done by him as such director before the discovery of such defect or error, either solely or with other directors, shall be as binding on him, and on the company, and the directors and officers thereof, as if such person had been duly appointed or qualified, and, if such acts were done bonâ fide, shall be as binding on all persons whomsoever as if such person had been duly appointed or qualified.

31. Acts of fraud or wilful omission by directors or officers a misdemeanor.—And be it enacted, That if any such director or other officer of any joint stock company registered under this Act wrongfully do or omit any act, with intent to defraud the company or any shareholder therein, or falsify or fraudulently mutilate or fraudulently make any erasure in the books of account or books of register, or any document belonging to the company, then such director or officer shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor

32 Authentication and legal effect of books of record —And be it enacted, That if the entry of the proceedings of any meeting of the shareholders or of the directors of any joint stock company registered under this Act purport to be signed by the chairman duly presiding at such meeting, and sealed with the seal of the company, then it shall be the duty of all courts of justice, justices, and others, and they are hereby required to receive the book in which such entry shall be made as primâ facie evidence, not only of the proceedings of the meeting of which entry shall be so made, but of such meetings having been duly convened, and of the persons making or entering such orders or proceedings being shareholders or directors, and of the signature of the chairman

33 Inspection of books of registry —And be it enacted, That the books of any such company wherein the proceedings of the company are recorded shall be kept at the principal or only place of business of the company, and at all reasonable times such books shall be open to the inspection of any shareholder of the company, subject nevertheless to the provisions of the deed of settlement or of any bye law

34 Account books —And be it enacted, That the directors shall cause the accounts of such company to be duly entered in books to be provided for the purpose

35 Balancing of books Examination of balance sheet —And be it enacted That fourteen days at the least before the period at which the accounts are required to be delivered to the auditors as hereinafter provided the directors of such company shall cause the books of the company to be balanced and a full and fair balance sheet to be made up and that previously to such balance-sheet being delivered to the auditors, as hereinafter provided, the directors, or any three of their number, shall examine such balance sheet, and sign it as so examined, and that when the balance sheet shall have been so examined the chairman of the directors shall sign such balance sheet and that thereupon the directors shall cause the same to be recorded in the books of the company

36 Production of the balance sheet —And be it enacted, That at each ordinary meeting of the shareholders the directors shall produce such balance sheet to the shareholders assembled thereat

37 Inspection of accounts by shareholders Occasional inspection —And be it enacted, That during the space of fourteen days previously to such ordinary meeting and also during one month thereafter, every shareholder of the company may, subject to the provisions of the deed of settlement, or of any bye law, inspect the books of account and the balance sheet of the company and take copies thereof and extracts therefrom, and that if at any other time three directors authorize in writing any shareholder to make such inspection then at such other time the shareholder so authorized may make such inspection

38 Auditors appointment of auditors by company By Board of Trade Salary of such auditor —And be it enacted, That every joint stock company completely registered under this Act shall annually, at a general meeting, appoint one or more auditors of the accounts of the company (one of whom at least shall be appointed by the shareholders present at the meeting in person or by proxy), and shall return the names of such auditors to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, and that if an auditor be not appointed on behalf of the shareholders, or if he shall die, or become incapable of acting or shall decline to act at the prescribed period, or if such return be not made, then on the application of any shareholder of the company, it shall be the duty of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, and they are hereby authorized, to appoint an auditor on behalf of the shareholders, and that such auditor shall continue to act till the next general meeting, and the due appointment of such auditor shall be returned to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, and that thereupon it shall be his duty to register the same, and that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of the Treasury, and they are hereby empowered, to appoint that the company shall pay to such auditor such salary or remuneration as to the said commissioners shall appear suitable, having regard to the duties of his office, and that thereupon such auditor shall be entitled to recover such salary from the company as and when it shall become due, according to the terms of the appointment thereof.

39 Delivery of accounts to auditors. Auditors to receive and examine accounts.—And be it enacted, That twenty-eight days at least before the ensuing ordinary meeting at which such balance-sheet is required to be produced to the shareholders, the directors shall deliver to the auditors the half-yearly or other periodical accounts and the balance-sheet required to be presented to the shareholders; and that the auditors shall receive from the directors such accounts and balance-sheet, and examine the same.

40. Powers of auditors. Assistance to auditors.—And be it enacted, That throughout the year, and at all reasonable times of the day, it shall be lawful for the auditors, and they are hereby authorized, to inspect the books of account and books of registry of such company; and that the auditors may demand and have the assistance of such officers and servants of the company and such documents as they shall require for the full performance of their duty in auditing the accounts.

41 Report by auditors.—And be it enacted, That within fourteen days after the receipt of such balance-sheet and accounts the auditors shall either confirm such accounts, and report generally thereon, or shall, if they do not see proper to confirm such accounts, report specially thereon, and deliver such accounts and balance-sheet to the directors of the company.

42 Publication of reports —And be it enacted, That ten days before the ordinary meeting of such company the directors shall, subject to the provisions of any deed of settlement or bye law in that behalf, send, or cause to be sent, a printed copy of the balance sheet and auditors' report to every shareholder, according to his registered address, and shall, at such meeting of the company, cause such report to be read, together with the report of the directors.

43 Balance-sheet and auditors' report to be registered —And be it enacted, That, within fourteen days after such meeting, it shall be the duty of such directors, and they are hereby required, to return to the said registry office a copy of the balance sheet, and of the report of the auditors thereon, and that thereupon it shall be the duty of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, and he is hereby required, to register or file the same with the other documents relating to such company

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

The Quarter Sessions of Somerset have been again the scene of a very extraordinary debate on the subject of the fees demanded from defendants in misdemeanors by the clerk of the peace

The history of this dispute may be briefly recapitulated

About three years since the Somerset Gazette, an influential local newspaper, in a short but earnest article, directed the attention of the magistracy to the fact, that a fee of three pounds and upwards was exacted from defendants in misdemeanors, even though acquitted of the offence with which they were charged.

So monstrous a violation of the plainest principles of justice was at first looked upon as a fiction of the editor's brain: the magistrates would pay no attention to the complaint, pronouncing it to be impossible. It is probable that the subject would have passed away, and the wrong continued to flourish, but that the article chanced to meet the eye of Mr. Bickham Escott, the member for Winchester, himself a lawyer, and who at once recognized the importance of the question. Inquiry satisfied him that the complaint was strictly true. At the next Sessions he laid the whole affair before the magistrates, with his usual ability, and succeeded in eliciting from them an almost universal condemnation of the practice, and a committee of inquiry

The committee reported that the fees in question were those allowed by the table duly prepared and sanctioned by the judges, in pursuance of the statute for regulating the fees of clerks of the peace, and that they could only be altered by the same authority, a revised table was presented, with the objectionable fees modified, but not quite expunged, and these were ordered to be, in due form of law, submitted to the judges of assize for their sanction.

But this was a slow process, and the wrong was a very urgent one. Mr. Escott was impressed with a strong belief that the fees were illegal in themselves, and that to take them was, in the legal sense of the term, extortion. In his place in Parliament he called the attention of the Home Secretary to the occurrence, but the members of the Government exhibited the same incredulity as the magistrates; they could not believe that so monstrous an injustice could be perpetrated. Returns were ordered on the motion of Mr. ESCOTT, and there the matter rested for awhile.

The notice thus attracted to the subject roused inquiry in almost all the counties. It was found that in some these fees were exacted, in others not so. But the magistrates everywhere interfered, and they were forthwith abolished in thirty-four counties.

In Somerset they continued to be demanded. Mr. ESCOTT was persevering in his endeavours to abolish them. At each session he renewed his motion and complaint; and he personally interfered to recommend many defendants not to pay.

It will be remembered that, in commenting upon this topic some time since, we expressed our opinion that Mr. COLES, the clerk of the peace for Somerset, had not been quite fairly treated in this matter. We stated the arguments and cases that led us to the conclusion that the fees in question, though grievously unjust and unconstitutional, were strictly legal; that they could only be abolished by the process prescribed by the Act of Parliament, and that being the remuneration of the officer for his labours, they could not be abolished without compensation, and that it was unfair to blame him for requiring the payment of fees to which he is legally entitled.

Such was the state of the case when Mr. ESCOTT again brought the subject under the notice of the magistrates of Somerset at the late Quarter Sessions: a scene of mutual recrimination and angry debate ensued, such as, for the dignity of the Bench, we trust will not be again exhibited. The whole report in the Somerset Gazette will be found deeply interesting, but we have not room for it here, and must refer our readers to that newspaper, copies of which can doubtless be procured. But the result was, that Mr. ESCOTT moved that the fees be abolished, and carried his motion by a small majority.

But though condemned by a vote of the magistrates, is the clerk of the peace bound to abandon his legal fees? Certainly not. Were they trifling in amount, he would, in deference to the desire so expressed, and their obvious impropriety, readily yield them. But their sum is considerable, as it would appear, averaging from three to four hundred pounds a year. It would, we think, be expecting too much of an industrious public officer to resign so large a portion of his income voluntarily, and without compensation. The clerk of the peace for Somerset has been subjected, as it seems to us, most unfairly, to much odium because he has not foregone a legal stipend of four hundred pounds a year. Would any of those who reproach him have done otherwise? It is certain that if he were to do so, he would never afterwards obtain the compensation to which he is equitably entitled. We cannot, therefore, blame Mr. COLES for persisting in demanding his fees until they are legally abolished.

But the exertions of Mr. ESCOTT do not the less deserve to be gratefully remembered, nor will the vote of the magistrates of Somerset be worthless. They have done this great good, that they have forced upon the notice of the Legislature and the public a question which might otherwise have slumbered for years, and compelled a speedy change of a very bad system—that of the payment of public officers by fees. Another session of Parliament cannot pass without some efficient measures being adopted to remove the monstrous stain upon the administration of justice denounced by Mr. ESCOTT, and that will involve a revision of the entire system of payment of officers in courts of justice. To none will such a change be more welcome than to those gentlemen, who would, we are sure, with gladness exchange an uncertain income and the obloquy produced by the source whence it comes, for a fixed salary with regular receipts, which have not upon them the taint of injustice and the curses of the wronged.

The following excellent article has appeared in The Times on the subject of Inequalities in Punishments, so often noticed in this Journal, but which has been so powerfully handled by our contemporary, that we cannot but direct to it the particular attention of our readers both among the Magistracy and in the Profession.

We feel compelled to recur to a subject that we have more than once touched on lately; and that is the great and growing inequalities of justice in our criminal courts, high and low. If any one wants to see his whole common-sense notion of justice violated in awarding punishments he must really enter one of our criminal courts—he must attend a police sitting or a quarter sessions. We do not mean to assert that justice is administered without reference to any principle whatever. There may be some recondite principle at the bottom; and the sage maxims of a new science of social order may probably pride themselves on their contrariety to superficial common sense and common feeling. All we say is, however, that there is this contrariety. Common sense is shocked, common feeling is wounded, by the disproportionate punishments that we repeatedly see. All our natural expectations are disappointed: the trial goes on, and the issue is just the opposite of what every ordinary notion of moral desert requires. A crime of the most brutal character is hardly tracked, and an obvious ruffian goes into society again, after a few weeks' imprisonment or a fine, to commit his assaults, to stab again, to get heated with liquor and commit murder ag in—the definition of manslaughter now-a-days. An unfortunate half-famished stealer of a penny loaf, a pound of bacon, or a shoulder of mutton is transported.

We have two or three cases in our eye, which have occurred lately. At the Berkshire Quarter Sessions a man of the name of Jackson, under the stimulus of grievous actual distress, joined in stealing a sheep. It was evidently not an ordinary case of sheepstealing. The man was not one of a gang: he had not made any trade of his crime. He joined in that particular instance in stealing a sheep, but he was obviously not what we mean by a "sheepstealer." He actually wanted food for his family: he stole the sheep, not to make money of it, but for the sake of the real meat upon its back: he took his share of the mutton home to his starving family, and they ate it. We do not mean to say that any extremity of destitution justifies theft, but we do say that it ought to be taken in palliation of it. In the present case, for stealing so much mutton to furnish a meal or two for a miserable family, the miserable man, who bore in his pale emaciated form the evidence of the motive on which he had acted, was sentenced to ten years' transportation.

Where is it that we read, "Men do not despise a thief, if he steal to satisfy his soul when he is hungry?" The act of theft, inexcusable as it is, is recipient of different motives, and is a totally different crime, according to the motion which impelled it. Scripture language makes this distinction. There is a crime of theft which arises from mere cupidity, and the wish to enrich yourself at the expense of your neighbour's purse; and there is a crime of theft, which has no greediness of gain whatever in it, but simply shews a man impatient of famine, and eager and unscrupulous in satisfying a natural appetite. The latter is most wrong, most pitiable; but it is not despicable. It does not create any of those feelings of indignation which the former shape of the crime does. Pickpocketing is one thing, impatient hunger is another. A man who steals food, as food, and for the sake of the actual support to life which it gives, and which he wants, stands upon a totally different ground, as a criminal, from one whose object is ill-gotten lucre.

Without meaning to throw particular blame upon the Berkshire magistrates—whose respected chairman evinced a strong disposition to leniency—we must, nevertheless, say, that we wish both they and the other magistracies throughout the country would attend a little more to the plain moral distinctions which often lie underneath the different crimes which come before them. We do not blame them as individuals, but we blame their system of justice. There is a theory of civil justice which simply regards, in the case of crime, the injury of the act itself to society, and intentionally omits all consideration of the motive as foreign to its purpose—as belonging to the department of moral, and not of civil, justice. Without entering philosophically into this theory, it is quite clear to us, that a justice which shocks common feeling and common sense is neither good moral, nor good civil justice either. It can never do for civil and moral justice to shew this palpable, staring gap between them.

The other case we refer to, and which we extracted a few days since from a provincial police report in a Portsmouth paper, unveils a more ludicrous department of the evil we are pointing out. Prepare for the pomp of justice. Four little boys are seen to go down a lane, are watched under a walnut-tree, are seen to clamber up, and then to clamber down again. They are pursued by the vigilant officer of the district, and three walnuts are found in their pockets. A prosecution is immediately instituted according to law. Two of the urchins took to their heels, and got off: so of the other two, one is put to the bar, and the other turns Queen's evidence against him. The culprit is sentenced to fourteen days' hard labour.

An extremer form of paltry drivelling nonsense, in the shape of a judicial trial, is hardly conceivable. It is too despicable to laugh at. An apprehension—a trial—a 14 days' imprisonment of a little boy, because he got some walnuts off a tree in a lane! And the other little boy made to turn Queen's evidence against him! O founders of the English constitution, sages of the Witenagemote, institutors of the Magna Charta; O shades of King Alfred, Judge Littleton, and Sir Edward Coke, did you mean to bequeath us such a despicable justice as this? The infliction of the overwhelming pomp of a criminal court upon a little boy for stealing three walnuts off a tree on the road, and making his little companion turn Queen's evidence against him—there is a concentration of anility, humbug, sickness, and nausea in the proceeding which is almost unique in our experience. A boy who takes what he ought not should be chastised certainly, and if the policeman who caught this urchin had given him some sharp cuts with his stick, it would have been about the proper punishment. But who would have thought of a gaol for such an offence? What but a degraded and sickening theory of justice could ever condemn a poor little boy, for a mere boyish crime, a joke, a piece of fun, to the gloom, the corrupting influence, the perpetual bad name, and the conscious disgrace and ignominy of a malefactor's imprisonment? According to this rule, half the schools in the country would have to draft off an annual proportion of their alumni for a temporary residence in a county gaol. School-boys are and have been proverbial robbers of orchards and perpetrators of mischief on farm-yards. Lord Eldon, if we are to believe Mr. Horace Twiss, would, according to this rule, have had to commence his experience at the bar in this culprit attitude. But it seems the rich are to have the benefit of a common-sense justice, and the poor are not. The rich man's son is flogged by the schoolmaster, the poor man's is sent to gaol.

WHITEHALL, OCT. 28.—The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Baronet of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto the Right Hon. William Magnay, of Postford-house, in the county of Surrey, Lord Mayor of the city of London, and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten.

FOREIGN OFFICE, OCT. 29.—The Queen has been graciously pleased to appoint George William Featherstonhaugh, esq. to be her Majesty's Consul at Havre-de-Grace.

The following buildings have been duly registered for the solemnization of marriages, pursuant to the Act of 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 85:—Lady Huntingdon's chapel, situated in Peck-lane, Dudley-street, in the parish of Birmingham, in the county of Warwick. The Baptist chapel, situated at the Back-hills, in the parish of St. Nicholas, in the borough of Warwick, in the district of the Warwick union. The Wesleyan Methodist chapel, situated at Congleton, in the parish of Astbury, in the county of Chester, in the district of Congleton. Norwood Independent chapel, Norwood.—William Thomas Logan, superintendent registrar. St. Mary's Wesleyan Chapel, Truro, Cornwall.—R. M. Hodge, superintendent registrar. Wesley chapel, Atherstone, Warwickshire.—S. S. Baxter, superintendent registrar.

THE CONVICTS BARBER AND FLETCHER.—Accounts have recently arrived in London, stating that in the vessel which took out these will-forgers, a fever had broken out, to which it was said Barber had become a victim. It was added that he had left behind him some important memoirs connected with the extraordinary will-forgeries.

FRAUDULENT PRACTICES.—A circular has been issued by the Commissioners of the Dublin Metropolitan Police, stating that they have received from various parts of the United Kingdom counterfeited certificates, purporting to be from magistrates, with fictitious subscription lists appended, and sometimes municipal seals (found to be impressions from casts of corporation livery buttons), in which papers, women represented to be widows of sergeants or other non-commissioned officers of her Majesty's forces, are recommended for alms, usually under pretence of destitution from shipwreck; and various fabricators of such papers, apprehended by the police, having escaped punishment for want of legal proof of the actual receipt of money by means of the false pretences used (the only offence cognizable in the present state of the law), it was considered advisable thus to give this public notice of the frauds so practised, with a view to prevent further imposition, and induce the transmission of charitable donations through responsible persons, when given in compliance with the written solicitations of unknown applicants.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

TERM begins to-day, and with it the manifold cares and duties of the legal year. We have heard that business is unusually slack at least, such is the complaint in the agency offices. It will be seen that we have made extensive preparations for giving to our readers a still more perfect record of the proceedings of the courts, two reporters being now placed in each of the Common Law Courts. It was rumoured some days since that Mr. Justice ERSKINE had retired from the Bench, but as yet we have received no confirmation of the rumour.

ALTERATIONS IN THE LAW

BY 7 & 8 VICT. CAP. 96.

No. III.

(Concluded from p. 13.)

Bankruptcy.—The principal alteration in the law of bankruptcy worthy of notice is contained in the 41st section. This enables any trader who has committed an act of bankruptcy, by filing a declaration of his insolvency in the office of the Secretary of Bankrupts, to petition the Lord Chancellor for a fiat against himself, and so obtain the distribution of his property under the bankrupt laws without any thing being done by his creditors; but the bankrupt must prove all the matters requisite to support a fiat, and the proceedings under such fiat will thenceforth be prosecuted and carried on in like manner as if such fiat had been issued and adjudicated upon on the petition of a creditor of the bankrupt.

IMPRISONMENT AND EXECUTION.

The 57th and 58th sections of this Act destroy the power of imprisonment upon any judgment obtained "in any action for the recovery of any debt wherein the sum recovered shall not exceed the sum of twenty pounds, exclusive of the costs recovered by such judgment."

The first question that arises upon these sections is a consequence of what seems almost to be the studied carelessness of the whole Act. Why is there a difference between this and the Small Debtors Act, 48 Geo. 3, c. 123? That Act had the words "debt or damages," and the omission of the latter part in the present statute leaves it uncertain whether actions of special assumpsit are within this enactment or not.

In Fogarty v. Smith (4 D. P. C. 597), where the question was the prisoner's right to discharge, having been twelve months imprisoned on a judgment in debt for twenty pounds and one shilling damages, PATTESON, J. said—

"I think that when the Act of Parliament speaks of 'debt or damages,' it means to distinguish between those cases where the action is substantially brought for the recovery of a debt, as in the action of debt or assumpsit, and those where the action is brought for the recovery of damages merely, as in action of trespass."

And as this Act is remedial, and therefore to be construed liberally, it may be held that in cases of special assumpsit in form, but wherein the non-payment of a specific sum is the real cause of action, and that sum is under 20*l*., the Act would be held to apply. But there are many cases in which the sum sought to be recovered is purely a question of damages, just as much as in an action of trespass: for instance, actions against a tenant for breach of the conditions of his agreement, against bailees for negligence, &c.; and could the 57th section be held to apply in such a case? We think not, unless the law is strained to suit the cry of the day against imprisonment. A colour of authority would be perhaps found in sec. 59, where, in addition to the word debt, are the words "the liability which may be the subject of demand." We consider our view supported by the construction of the words "sum sought to be recovered" in the Writ of Trial Act, under which no claims for unliquidated damages can be tried. (See 2 Law T. 239.)

The principal cases upon the 48 Geo. 3, c. 123, may be seen collected in Chitty's Archbold, p. 868.

Sec. 58 would have been some protection to the creditor against a fraudulent debtor, but the practice has, we believe, been to allow the debtor to be discharged upon his ex parte affidavit, and leave the creditor to his remedy. This was contrary to the practice under 48 Geo. 3, c. 123, and we were extremely surprised that it was permitted by the learned judge who presided at chambers when the Act came into operation. By sec. 59 it was intended to punish the fraudulent debtor under 20*l*. by rendering him liable to imprisonment, but the same fatality of blundering is again prominent. In the first place, no time or mode is pointed out for making the inquiry. Then the power is only given to "the judge who shall try such cause." So that if judgment is obtained on demurrer or by default, and damages assessed on writ of inquiry, the fraudulent debtor would be safe.

Again, the power is given only to "a judge of one of the superior courts, or a barrister or attorney at law," being judge in the inferior court; consequently, in the numerous local and inferior courts, where the judge or judges, as in many Courts of Request, are neither barristers nor attorneys, fraudulent debtors have unlimited protection. Any one who had predicted that such an Act as this would have passed would have been laughed at as a dreamer. But it is now law, and the remedies must be sought by an Act to amend the Act for amending the Act relating to Insolvency.

Suspending execution.—The 62nd section is one of which all must approve. It confers upon the judge power "to suspend or stay any judgment, order, or execution given, made, or issued," in case "defendant is unable, from sickness or unavoidable accident, to pay and discharge the debt or damages recovered against him." That such a discretionary power was needed was shewn by the case of Jones v. Robinson (2 D. N. S. 1044), where a ca. sa. had been issued against a man who had been ill for three years, during sixteen months of which he had kept his bed. The sheriff had been obliged to incur the cost of keeping a man in the house, as the defendant could not be removed without danger of his life, and he applied to the Court for relief, but could obtain none, except an enlargement of the time for his return until the following term.

Executions from small debt courts.—All sales under executions from all courts for the recovery of small debts will in future be regulated by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 17, and 57 Geo. 3, c. 93.

Claims to goods seized under process of any court for the recovery of small debts.—The 68th section will diminish the number of actions of trover and trespass in respect of goods of small value. It empowers the clerk of the court out of which the execution issues, in case any claim is made to or in respect of any goods or chattels seized under such execution, upon the application of the officer charged with the execution of such process, at any time, whether before or after any action brought against the officer, to summon the claimant and the execution creditor before the inferior court; and upon such summons all proceedings in the action are to be stayed, and the judge of the inferior court is to adjudicate upon the claim. This is giving a large power to the inferior courts of judicature, without the intervention of any jury, and is another instance of the tendency which we think is evident in many quarters to get rid of that ancient institution.

Landlord's lien for rent.—The effect of this entirely new enactment, contained in sec. 67, will probably be to lessen the extent of credit given by landlords, for it deprives them, in a great degree, of that preference which they have hitherto enjoyed. It is as follows:—

That no landlord of any tenement let at a weekly rent shall have any claim or lien upon any goods taken in execution under the process of any court of law for more than four weeks' arrears of rent, and if such tenement shall be let for any other term less than a year, the landlord shall not have any claim or lien on such goods for more than the arrears of rent accruing during four such terms or times of payment.

The last alteration deserving of our notice is contained in sec. 72, which empowers the commissioners of any inferior court to appoint, with the approval of one of the secretaries of state, a barrister of seven years' standing, or an attorney of ten, to act as assessor to any such court. There is a proviso, that no assessor so appointed shall be deemed entitled to compensation by reason of the passing of any general Act for the recovery of small debts. A similar proviso ought, in our opinion, to be inserted as to every appointment under any future Court of Requests Act, or else the great increase of these courts will be found an absolute bar to the establishment of any general system, by reason of the number of compensations required.

We now conclude this sketch without noticing the Act for facilitating Arrangements between Debtors and Creditors," for we do think the details are so cumbrous and troublesome, that it will be almost a dead letter. We had intended to have devoted another article to an exposure of the manifold blunders and omissions in this Act, but they are already so notorious, that we have, for the present, postponed it. We only trust that a Bill so truly discreditable to our legislators will never again pass.

We extract from the Morning Chronicle the following admirable article on PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

There sits not on the judicial bench, adorned as that bench is by a DENMAN, a PATTESON, and a POLLOCK, a more amiable and gentlemanlike man than Mr. Baron ROLFE, nor a more discreet, painstaking, and learned judge—

"In Israel's courts ne'er sat Abethdin
With more discerning eyes, or hands more clean."

Considering that by far the greater portion of Mr. Baron ROLFE's life has been spent in the Equity Courts, the precision, the patience, the accuracy, and the despatch with which he administers the criminal law, are the alternate themes of wonder, praise, and gratulation, among even his best friends. But with all these amiable and excellent qualities—with the best judgment, the best temper, and the best sense—Mr. Baron ROLFE is, like the best among us, fallible; and with all respect for his high office, and unaffected admiration for himself personally, it seems to us that he fell on Thursday afternoon into as great a mistake as one wholly unacquainted with the genius of the locality of the Old Bailey could well perpetrate. The upright and calm-thinking baron will pardon the strength of the word when we tell him that an incidental expression, which he unguardedly let fall, involves no less an issue than the honour, the credit, and the respectability of the Bar of England.

That we may not be accused of overstating the case, we shall here give an account of the transaction obtained from a barrister who was present—which, though .. somewhat differs from the reports published yesterday in the Chronicle and the Times, corroborates these reports in every main particular;—

James Ball, indicted for a serious offence, appeared at the bar to plead, and informed the Court that he had no counsel. Upon being asked, he said he did not know the gentleman's name, but that he had given some money into the hands of the deputy-governor, who said that he had paid it over to Mr. Cope, the governor; the latter having been requested by him (prisoner) to recommend to him a barrister for the defence, and that he expected one to be retained for him. After waiting a short time, Mr. Ballantine (who had conversed for a minute or two in an undertone with a turnkey in the dock), addressing the Court, said, from what he had heard, he had reason to believe the prisoner spoke the truth, and shortly afterwards remarked that he appeared for the prisoner. Several barristers here observed that Mr. Ballantine ought not to conduct the defence under such circumstances. Mr. Wilkins then rose, and commented strongly upon the way in which the instructions had been given to Mr. Ballantine, observing with much force and truth, that the interests of the bar must necessarily suffer most seriously if such methods of procuring counsel were allowed, that the prisoner appeared to have no actual choice in the matter, and that nothing could be more improper than that such a power should be allowed to be in the hands of the governor of the gaol, who was in effect acting as an attorney without the responsibility, and favouring a particular counsel.

Mr. Baron ROLFE said he could not interfere. That he considered the prisoner had a right to ask for advice from the governor, as to the party most fit to conduct his defence, and that he could not prevent the governor naming any gentleman at the Bar in preference to another, and that he considered that Mr. Cope was, in so doing, acting as the prisoner's agent (Mr. Cope had entered the court about this time). At the conclusion of the case, Mr. Parry rose, and said he trusted the Court would excuse him if he humbly asked whether the Bar was to understand that he, Mr. Baron Rolfe, approved of the course pursued in the above case, as the opinion of the Court would relieve many juniors from the doubts entertained, and observations lately made in particular quarters as to the practice in defences in this court, that in his humble opinion the course above alluded to was most improper, and would seriously affect the character of the Bar. Mr. Baron ROLFE said he did not 'approve or disapprove' of the matter, that it was impossible for him to interfere, and made a few other observations to the same effect as he had previously.

These few sentences are of the very gravest and most vital importance to the character and honour of the Bar. Every thing that a judge says, even incidentally, carries with it, as it ought to do, great weight; but we say advisedly, that unless the effect of such observations as fell from the bench on Thursday last be counteracted by some decision of the fifteen judges, or some explanation from the learned baron himself, there is an end to the independence and honour of the Bar of England. We have always understood that the Bar was a learned and liberal profession, occupying a high social, and a still higher mental and moral rank; but if the observation of Mr. Baron ROLFE be allowed for one moment to influence the conduct of the Bar, at the Old Bailey or elsewhere, then one of the most elevated of professions will sink from its "high estate," and instead of being, as it now is, the guide of the weak, the refuge of the oppressed, the terror of the oppressor, and the shield of the innocent, the Bar must and will inevitably degenerate into the humble clients and fawning flatterers of the gaolers—not alone of the Old Bailey, but of the turnkeys and prison fags throughout the length and breadth of England.

With an independent, a high-spirited, and an intellectual Bar, it is impossible for tyranny or oppression to prevail in any country; but if the Bar are to become the dependents of gaolers and the governors of gaols, we shall have men allured to the trade of law, to use the words of Milton, "grounding their purposes not on the prudent and heavy contemplation of justice and equity which was never taught them, but on the promising and pleasing thoughts of litigious terms and fat fees." Pasquier, the celebrated French magistrate and jurisconsult, exalts the wisdom of Charles V. because, says he, the calling of an advocate was not alone honoured in his time, but the profession was the road to the highest dignities in the state. But advocates were then "omnium rerum magnarum atque artium scientiam," and did not stoop to the patronage of the great and powerful, much less did they cringe and fawn to gaolers and turnkeys. The notorious John Wilkes was fond of declaring, that the name of a lawyer was but another name for a scoundrel; and so it must unquestionably become, if the members of the profession ever degrade themselves so low as to be the retainers of turnkeys and thief keepers. The Bar, after all, it must not be forgotten, is the raw stuff from which judges are made; and if our advocates be not alone pure, but above all taint of suspicion, how can our judges be honest? It was said of Jefferies by Charles II. that he had more impudence than ten carted strumpets, but at the time he was on the bench the Bar was no better nor purer than those who sate above them. Trevor, who afterwards became a judge, began by being clerk to his brother, Arthur Trevor, who allowed him, says North, "to learn the knavish part of the law. After this he courted the society of gamesters, and brought his knowledge to bear well with them, so that he was their point d'appui when in difficulties." There was then at the bar one Wallop, whom Jeffries addressed from the bench as follows:—"Mr. Wallop, I observe you are in all those dirty causes. If you don't understand your duty better I shall teach it to you." Yet the "incomprehensible miscreant" of a judge, to use the epithet of O'Connell, who thus addressed a degraded profession which suffered such a tone even from the bench, had himself begun to plead two years before he had been regularly called; had frequented Hicks's-hall, and the lowest criminal courts, and was patronised by civic functionaries, turnkeys, gaolers, &c. By these vile and unworthy means—by "wassailing," to use the expression of Roger North, and drinking deeply with the lowest hangers-on of courts of justice—Jefferies found himself, says his biographer, Woolrych, in practice sooner than any of his contemporaries, and succeeded in places

"Where loudest lungs and biggest words prevail."

At such a time it was no uncommon thing for judges to come to the council quite drunk, or to receive bribes for the ransom of a prisoner; but the Bar was contemporateously in a state as utterly corrupt and degraded as the bench who expounded the statutes. To such inevitable degradation must the Profession come again, if the system of receiving fees from a turnkey be adopted or tolerated. The successful professional scamp, who thus succeeds by courting low company, may address his admiring father in the very lines of the author "of the modern way to get on at the bar."

> "Thus you see, my dear father, it answers my ends
> To make all these vagabond turnkeys my friends;
> And think just as I've hit to a tittle
> The way to get on, and it costs me out little.
> At chambers I now and then give them a lunch,
> Or at night a regale of hogs' puddings and punch."

It is essential to the independence and respectability of the Bar that no system approaching to what is called "huggery" should be countenanced or tolerated. On the northern circuit, in Lord ABINGER's or Mr. Justice CRESSWELL's time, a man guilty of "huggery" to even a first-rate attorney, would be discountenanced or disgraced at the circuit mess. How much severer would the punishment fall on the shoulders of the degraded being who consented to receive a paltry guinea on the recommendation of a turnkey.

It is the business and the duty of the press to watch over the administration of justice, without reference to Bar or Bench; and how can the administration of justice be ever pure, if the paltry arts by which vulgar and cunning pettyfoggers attempt to obtain practice are allowed to prevail? This is not a question relating simply to the Bar. It is an important national question, which may concern the liberty, which may affect the life, of any man in England. The extra-judicial opinion of Mr. Baron ROLFE can have no weight—the ominous silence of so able and honest a man as Mr. Justice MAULE (who, we regret to say, sat on the bench without interfering) no significancy. Their opinions, supposing Mr. Justice MAULE to have agreed with his brother, which nowhere appears, are repudiated and disowned by the whole Profession; nay, even by the Bar practising at the Old Bailey. It is true, the wolves and the foxes were sly, as is their wont—and silent, as best became such men; but Mr. Wilkins and Mr. Parry spoke out in a befitting and dignified tone, and for such service they merit the warm thanks of the Profession and the public.

JOINT STOCK COMPANIES.

Yesterday, two Acts, passed on the 5th September last, respecting joint stock companies, came into operation. The first Act is for the registration, incorporation, and regulation of companies; and the other for facilitating the winding-up the affairs of such companies unable to meet their pecuniary engagements. The first-mentioned statute contains eighty sections, with several schedules; and the second thirty-three, with one schedule annexed. The titles of the Acts disclose their objects, and the preambles (an important branch of a statute) appear to have been wrought out in the provisions. By the preamble of the first it is declared to be expedient to make provision for the due registration of joint-stock companies, with the qualities and incidents of corporations, and also to prevent the establishment of any companies which shall not be duly constituted and regulated according to the provisions of the Act. The preamble of the second is to the effect that it is expedient to extend the remedies of creditors against the property of such joint stock companies or bodies when unable to meet their pecuniary engagements, and to facilitate the winding-up of their concerns, and that it may also be for the benefit of the public to make better provision for discovery of the abuses that may have attended the formation or management of the affairs of such companies, and of ascertaining the causes of their failures. It appears that companies existing on the 1st November must, by the 58th section, register their names, purposes, and places of business within three months, under a penalty not exceeding 50*l.*; and, by the fourth clause, a provisional registration must be effected of all companies to be formed after that day, before any prospectus, hand-bill, or advertisement appears, under a penalty of 25*l.* Permission is granted by the 17th section to the public to inspect the returns made to the registry-office (which is to be opened with a registrar and other officers appointed by the Board of Trade) for a fee not exceeding [illegible]; copies may be obtained and received as evidence in all courts. Patrons and directors must be shareholders; and, to prevent the formation of fraudulent concerns, it is provided that any person who has pretended that a company was patronized or directed, whether now existing or not, by any eminent or opulent person, in any advertisement or other paper, whether printed or written, shall forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding 10*l.* Annual returns are to be laid before Parliament of all joint stock companies. The remedies provided for and against joint stock companies are, by the second Act, greatly simplified. Companies can declare their own insolvency and stop themselves when in embarrassment, without getting further into debt by fictitious capital or by offering to pay a rate of interest which they cannot honestly afford, and by which means many misguided people have been duped out of their money; also companies can be summoned to the Court of Bankruptcy as a "trader," and proceedings adopted as in ordinary cases. By the 27th section of the second Act it is provided that the papers may be laid before the Attorney-General, who shall direct whether any and what proceedings shall be taken against any person who was a director or officer of a company, or any other person, and any prosecution or other proceeding so directed shall be conducted by or under the management of the Commissioners of the Treasury. These two Acts extend to England and Ireland (Scotland being omitted), and they bring within their provisions all joint stock companies, and define the associations to which the term has reference, and place under the control of the Board of Trade, as the eye of the government, the various establishments now formed, or which may be reared under that comprehensive denomination. The Acts are known as 7 & 8 Vict. c. 90 and c. 91.

ISLAND OF SKYE.—We understand that Thomas Fraser, esq. Solicitor, Inverness, has been appointed Sheriff Substitute of the Island of Skye, district of Invergordon, in the room of the late George Robertson, esq.—Ross-shire Advertiser.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—The solicitors and other inhabitants of this rapidly-increasing town, having long felt the want of a public stamp-office, presented a memorial to her Majesty's Commissioners of Stamps, who immediately saw the propriety of it, and appointed Mr. Joseph Wherent, stationer, as their sub-distributor for Weston-super-Mare and its neighbourhood.

CHANCERY COURT OF LANCASHIRE.—Joseph Briggs Dickson, esq. of Preston, solicitor, has been appointed by Lord Granville Somerset, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancashire, to the office of Clerk in Court, vacant by the death of the late Charles Buck, esq. The other four Clerks in Court are—R. Palmer, esq.; C. B. Walker, esq.; W. Hopkins, esq.; and John Wilson, esq.

JOINT STOCK COMPANIES REGISTRATION ACT.—The Gazette of Tuesday contains the regulations prescribed by the Board of Trade, under the provisions of the Act of last session, for the registration, &c. of Joint Stock Companies, respecting the form of such returns as are directed to be made by that Act. All the forms to be observed by the companies are prescribed in five pages of the Gazette, to which we must refer those who stand in need of more detailed and specific information.

OFFICIAL ASSIGNEES.—As these officers are now forced on the estates of all bankrupts, whether required or not, it behoves the members of the Profession, in examining audit accounts, to see that the official assignee's allowance does not exceed the amount fixed by the order of the Court, which is "One per cent. on the moneys they receive; one and a half per cent. on the moneys actually to be divided," except under special circumstances, when it may be increased or diminished on application to the Court of Review. (Vide 7th order of that Court, January 12, 1832.)

TRIAL OF HENRY MURPHY, SOLICITOR.

Dublin, Oct. 29.

Henry Murphy, one of the attorneys, was charged with burning several original documents connected with a suit in Chancery, in which the prosecutor here was the plaintiff. These documents were receipts for rent, and necessary in the progress of the suit. Mr. Murphy claimed from Captain Richardson the sum of 50*l*., as the balance of a bill of costs, which, it was alleged, he never furnished, and when the legality of his charge was questioned, he wrote to the captain to say that he would burn one of the documents every day until he received the money, and until all were consumed.

The case was stated by Mr. Brewster, and the letters formed a remarkable portion of his address to the jury. It would appear by the letters of the prisoner that he burned four documents, as he wrote on four occasions to Captain Richardson, inclosing the ashes of burned paper, with a small portion of each document to satisfy him that they had been actually destroyed.

Thomas Morrin, one of the conducting clerks in the Rolls Chancery-office, produced the bill in the cause of Richardson v. Preston, for the purpose of shewing the Court the nature of the suit in which Mr. Murphy was engaged.

Captain Richardson deposed that he had handed Mr. Murphy all the documents necessary for conducting the suit in Chancery. He identified the portion of a burned receipt, which he received inclosed in a letter, in the handwriting of Mr. Murphy. He also identified portions of other material documents sent to him in letters written by the traverser. Some of the ashes of paper was contained in each letter.

Mr. Curran objected to the reading of the pieces of paper which purported to be receipts, inasmuch as they were not stamped.

Mr. Brewster held they were "exhibits" in the cause—as such were described in the indictment—and should be received as legal evidence in this prosecution.

Mr. Curran contended that the case did not come within the meaning of the Act under which the prisoner was indicted, as that Act only contemplated the protection of records in public offices.

The CHIEF BARON, in charging the jury, expressed his opinion that the documents were public, inasmuch as they formed part of a suit pending in a superior court.

The jury, after an absence of seven minutes, returned with a verdict of "Guilty."

The prisoner was then removed in custody of the gaoler.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

LEGAL PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

(From our own Reporter.)

A GENERAL meeting of the Profession and members of the Legal Protective Association was held on Wednesday, 30th ult., at the Gray's Inn Coffee House, to elect officers and adopt rules for the management of the society.

Sir GEO. STEPHEN having been called to the chair, directed the attention of the meeting (which was not numerous) to the objects of the association; stated that if there was one object more than another on which through a long professional life his anxiety had always been great, it was—if he might use the word in its legitimate sense—the combination of the members of the profession to which he belonged, with a view to their own advantage, and especially with a view to their own character. It so happened, from the nature of the duties they had to discharge, that they were engaged in a fearful conflict with the world, and there was also a conflict carried on among themselves. This had always appeared to him a great mistake; and he knew of no way in which such an error could be corrected except by meeting on friendly terms in constant intercourse, with a view to promote their general interest in a way in which no such conflict could arise. (Hear, hear.) There was no doubt about the fact that, as a Profession, they had in their hands perhaps greater power than any other profession that could be named: they were admitted ex necessitate into the domestic confidence of their clients, who consisted of all classes, political, parliamentary, and commercial, and every class that carried with it importance and consideration in the country. If, therefore, possessing such a confidence, and possessing that highest influence which every respectable and honourable attorney must possess with his client,—if they had hitherto forborne to use that influence for legitimate purposes connected with their own protection, the fault had been entirely their own. He hailed, therefore, the establishment of this institution as an era from which they might, hereafter, be enabled to date a combination of professional influence for the legitimate objects connected with their business. They had been run down on too many occasions by public feeling; from the nature of their duties they too often provoked something like general hostility; they were exposed constantly to be carped at, and their profits to be pecked at; their means of existence, even, cut down and torn away from them for the purpose of gaining an empty popularity, and for the purpose of making a reform at their expense. (Cheers.) It was therefore most important that they should be allowed, at every such attack made upon them, professionally to join together heart and hand to resist it, and to turn the tide of prejudice that had too often, hitherto, been suffered to run riot at their expense. He rejoiced to see that one of the objects of the Association, specified in the prospectus, was that of "exposing, and if possible punishing, all persons guilty of any acts of malpractice, whether they were members of the bar, attorneys, or solicitors." It was their duty to the public, not less to themselves, to correct the malpractices of others as well as themselves: but it would be most improper and ungracious to attempt a reformation of a higher department in the Profession unless they were sincere, honest, and persevering in reforming the errors of their own department. (Hear.) The next specified object was to him equally gratifying: it was, "to maintain the respectability of the Profession by an honourable and liberal mode of practice." They all knew that the practice of the Profession had been reformed very largely and simplified very much by many legislative enactments; but the greatest of all reforms was that which must spring from themselves, by giving a liberal and honourable and straightforward character to the practice in their respective houses of business; and he was bound to say, from his own experience of the Profession, that it was only by the principals that this could be effected. Nineteen times out of twenty when they had had occasion to complain of any thing in the nature of "sharp practice," the fault had been traced, not to the principals but to the clerks. It was therefore only from the authority which they possessed as principals that it was in their power to restrain that sort of practice which had hitherto obtained a very unfavourable reputation in society. If they combined together, as the heads of offices, to set their faces against every undue advantage—every unfair effort to extract from the pockets of their professional opponents five shillings here and ten shillings there, less for the sake of costs than for the sake of causing mortification and annoyance; and if they instructed their clerks and subordinates to act upon the principle they were desirous of establishing as the ruling principle of the Profession, their Profession would then be what it deserved to be considered in every point of view—a liberal Profession. In conclusion, he expressed his deliberate and sincere conviction that, if they combined for no other purpose than to carry out these two objects, they would confer no less a benefit on society than a benefit on themselves. (Cheers.)

D. W. WIRE, Esq., then stated that, since the last meeting of the Association, the committee had formed a series of rules and regulations (which had been printed), upon the suggestions of members of the Association both in town and country. He thought it was due to themselves that they should combine together, because he was satisfied, from an actual estimate of the working of the Law Institution in Chancery-lane, that all that the Profession needed could not be accomplished by that body—(hear, hear!)—supposing it to be as willing to work as they were anxious to see it do; and therefore he believed there was a necessity for another institution, embracing more widely all the objects necessary for the protection of the Profession, apart from that institution. He wished to dissipate the idea that the Association now about to be formed was intended as a rival to the Law Institution. He held in his hand a letter from a respectable member of that body (Mr. Fynmore), who said he deemed it advisable to withdraw his name as one of the officers of the Legal Association, because he understood that it was generally considered that that Association was intended to be in opposition to the Incorporated Law Society. He (Mr. Wire) regretted that such a letter had been sent to the secretary, because he had, on the former occasion of their meeting, distinctly disavowed any desire whatever to be placed in opposition to that institution. He believed there was room for both, and he hoped that there would be a cordial harmony between the two bodies, and a desire to assist each other in accomplishing the objects they were seeking. What he understood by reform in the law was improvement and amendment, for the benefit of the public and the Profession; that it should be what Sir Edward Coke had designated it, "the perfection of reason," and not more alteration, such as had of late been introduced under the name of reform, and which, while it did not benefit the public, only degraded the Profession. He was anxious that, while reforms of the law cut down unnecessary expense, they should still leave to the practitioner sufficient profit to enable him to maintain his station in life with respectability; and the public, he was sure, never required that the profits of the Profession should be so cut down as to reduce them to the level of the small shopkeeper. As lawyers, they were not opposed to any necessary and righteous reform of the law; and as men and Englishmen, they would assist in carrying out whatever conduced to the general prosperity, happiness, and security of society. What they objected to was innovation, miscalled legislation, by men unacquainted with the law, and whose only object was a little empty popularity. (Hear, hear!) They did not want such reforms as that by which a few young gentlemen were permitted to retire on the munificent provision of 7,000*l*. or 8,000*l*. a year, extracted from the pockets of the public; nor did they want such a reform as that which, while, under the pretence of simplifying the classification of fees, cut down the profits of the Profession, and left the revenue untouched. All they wanted was, that a living profit should be left to the solicitor. (Hear!) In conclusion, he proposed a series of rules, to the effect, "that the Association be styled the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association, consisting of duly qualified attorneys and solicitors and writers to the signet throughout the United Kingdom, to be admitted on the recommendation of two members; that the objects of the Association be to promote and support the general interests of the Profession; to prosecute (if necessary) all unqualified persons who may usurp either the duties or privileges of the Profession; to originate and assist in obtaining all useful and practical reforms and amendments of the law; to expose and, if possible, punish all persons guilty of any acts of malpractice, whether they be members of the bar, attorneys, or solicitors; to maintain the respectability of the Profession by an honourable and liberal mode of practice; and to adopt measures for obtaining a co-operation with all law societies (provincial or local) having similar objects in view."

Then there were the usual rules for the payment of the subscription, the time of meeting, and the general government and conduct of the Association.

Mr. GODDARD seconded the adoption of these rules, and remarked, in reference to the withdrawal of Mr. Fynmore from the Society, that that gentleman had given to the interim committee full authority to put his name down as a member.

Some discussion then took place upon the rules, and many amendments were suggested.

Mr. VICKERY suggested a more explicit disclaimer on the part of this Association, of any rivalry with the Law Institution.

Mr. WIRE replied, that the committee had considered that subject, and had determined to send a letter to the Legal Observer disclaiming any rivalship or hostility in the two institutions, unless it began with the elder; and also to address a letter to the council of the Law Institution asking them to co-operate with this Association.

Mr. JOHNSON suggested that there should be an addition to the objects of the Association; and he was sure that many influential members of the Profession would join it, if it was known that, it would strenuously support a measure which had been proposed for throwing open Doctors' Commons to the Profession generally.

Mr. WIRE said that they could not make that a rule. It had been proposed to include the Proctors, but he objected to that, because many of the members of the Association, with himself, entertained a strong opinion against the propriety of passing the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill; and they thought, that instead of carrying into effect the little petty reform contemplated by that Bill, there ought to be a sweeping measure to throw open the Ecclesiastical Courts, and reform them in their expenditure.

Mr. DONNE suggested that some plan should be adopted in order to keep out of the Association disreputable persons; and, if they were allowed to creep in, that there should be created a power of expulsion. It was very likely they would have to put such a power in force, for many of such persons were frightened at the appearance of the Association, and were anxious to join it.

The CHAIRMAN suggested that, instead of creating a power of expulsion, the members should be eligible by ballot only. He had felt, from the first moment it was suggested to him, that if there was any one danger to be avoided with more anxiety and sedulous care than another, it was the introduction of gentlemen who wanted reform into a reforming society, because he believed self-reform was the last thing persons undertook. It was very difficult to meet the case now under discussion. The introduction of any candidate upon the personal assurance of two or three members would do.

Mr. SANGSTER did not think that many persons would lavish their money upon an institution formed avowedly for the purpose of putting down practices by which they lived. As the rules were framed, he doubted whether they could refuse the subscription of any duly qualified attorney, and he proposed that it be one of the rules that the council have power to return any subscription, or to decline receiving it from an improper person.

Mr. RUSSELL objected to the council having a power intrusted to them which ought to be exercised only by the general body of members. He did not think there were many persons who would render the exercise of such a regulation necessary; and he thought also, that until some charge could be brought against any person who desired to belong to the Association, he should not be publicly slandered by being rejected by the council.

The CHAIRMAN entirely disapproved of the power of expulsion existing in the council or the general body of subscribers, because, he urged, however great might be his offence, it could not warrant such a public exposure unless it warranted a prosecution; and if a public prosecution was not required to meet the offence, then the exposure consequent upon expulsion, in any case of unjustifiably sharp practice, would be the infliction of a penalty which might, perhaps, involve the individual in perpetual ruin, and would be unjust and cruel.

Mr. WISE said that there were so many insuperable difficulties in the way of adopting the suggestion of Mr. Russell, that he thought the power sought to be created had better be left to the general influence of the body over all its members to promote honourable practice and upright conduct amongst themselves.

Mr. RUSSELL merely meant that if any such power as that suggested were created, it should rest in the general body, and not in the council.

The CHAIRMAN thought it very desirable that such a power should exist, and that it should be known to exist; because it would tend to keep out many persons applying to become members who might think it a convenient thing to add a quasi respectability to their names. It was considered an evidence of respectability for a man to belong to the Law Institution, and the same degree of reputation ought to be attached to this Association.

After some further discussion it was agreed "That the council shall have power to add to their number not exceeding ten members; and, also, when twelve in number are present (at the least), to decline to receive or return the subscription of any party."

Sir Geo. Stephen was then appointed president of the institution; Messrs. James Birchell, Thos. Pain (Dover), and D. W. Wire, vice-presidents; Messrs. W. H. Ashurst, John H. Boyce (Margate), and Thomas Mosely, auditors; Mr. Edward Clarke, secretary; and a council of inquiry and direction, consisting of twenty four members, was also appointed.

Mr. CLARKE, in returning thanks for the appointment of secretary, said that he had received a vast number of letters from attorneys from all parts of the country, all of whom gave a direct lie to the foul slander endeavoured to be affixed on the character of the Profession by an eminent and noble personage; and there was but one opinion as to the total abolition of imprisonment for debt, which was, that the Profession were not friendly to the imprisonment of parties for debt under any circumstances. There was one important subject which it would be his duty to lay before the council at their next meeting, and that related to a matter that concerned the interests, not only of the London, but the country practitioner. They were all aware that deeds, releases, deeds of composition, bills of sale, assignments, indentures of apprenticeship, and numerous other instruments were daily prepared by accountants and parties unqualified for such a purpose. But they might be to'd that there were statutes for the protection of attorneys against such an innovation, and that there were fines to be inflicted and penalties to be imposed; but they found these statutes were quite ineffectual; and, therefore, as a remedy for this evil, it had been suggested that the Association should endeavour to obtain the passing of a statute rendering invalid all deeds and instruments requiring a stamp that are not prepared and attested by a professional man. For this purpose they required the assistance of the provincial Law Societies. In conclusion, he said that most eminent services had been rendered to the Profession by that excellent periodical the Law Times (cheers), and he hoped that, as it had been working, with unflinching efforts and untiring zeal, with the Profession, to protect their privileges and interests, the members would not part that day without voting their thanks to the editor of the Law Times for his strenuous efforts in assisting them to attain their present position. (Cheers.)

Thanks were then voted to the Chairman, and the meeting separated.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In answer to the letter in your last number, addressed to me through you from Mr. Crowe, of Uckfield, I beg to inform that gentleman (what I believe he, as well as every attorney both in Lewes and Brighton, is well aware of) that for several years I had a branch-office in Lewes, and attended there regularly once or oftener every week; that such office was at the house of Mr. Hardy, and that he, during that time, acted as my clerk. As Mr. Crowe wishes for every particular, I further beg to inform him, that the reason of my giving up such branch-office was, that I was considerably out of pocket by keeping it on, and that I should have given it up long before I did (which was at the close of the summer assize in 1843), but wished to get Mr. Hardy another situation first, on account of his family. This I succeeded in doing with a friend of mine, who, having extensive connections in Sussex, took a house in Brighton; but it not meeting his views, he, after a few months, gave it up, and returned to London. From the time I discontinued my branch-office at Lewes, Mr. Hardy has been totally unconnected with me as to business; not that there is any disagreement between us, and nothing would give me greater pleasure than seeing Mr. Hardy placed in a good situation, in the common law or criminal department of some office of extensive practice, in the knowledge of which branches there are few persons who surpass him.

Now to explain the circumstances which caused my disclaiming all connection with him at the present time; they are these:—a person in difficulties, who had been served with a copy of a writ of summons, and subsequently with notice of declaration, applied to Mr. Hardy, supposing him to be still in connection with me; he advised him to put in a plea to gain time, which the other consented to, and the plea was accordingly put in as in person, Mr. Hardy going to London for the purpose, and the party stated he paid Mr. Hardy 3*l.* for so doing. The attorney who appeared at the hearing to oppose endeavoured to make out that I was a party to this proceeding, of which I was wholly ignorant, not even knowing the party until some time afterwards. Added to this, on instituting an inquiry, I found that it was generally believed, both in Lewes and other places, that Mr. Hardy had my consent to use my name in any business that might be taken to him. Under these circumstances, I thought it a duty I owed to myself, the Profession, and the public generally, to disclaim all connection with him, that no such impression might exist in future, and accordingly I put an advertisement into the county paper (the Sussex Agricultural Express) and a letter in the LAW TIMES.

The only query remaining unanswered is, whether Mr. Hardy's name is on the roll of attorneys? To this I can only say, I believe Mr. Hardy never professed to be an attorney; at least I never heard that he did.

I hope I have now satisfactorily answered Mr. Crowe's letter; if, however, he wishes for any further information, and will call upon me in Brighton, I shall be most happy to furnish it.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.
G. B. GOODMAN.

Brighton, October 28, 1844.

[Note by the EDITOR.—In a private letter, Mr. GOODMAN at first stated the circumstances; but as it contained other names, we did not deem it advisable to publish it. He need not further trouble himself about that which is now satisfactorily explained.]

METROPOLITAN AND PROVINCIAL LEGAL ASSOCIATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—At the last meeting of the interim committee of the above association, held on the 29th inst. (and whose duties then closed, having been superseded by the council appointed at the general meeting yesterday), I was desired to address you upon a report which has been somehow or another industriously circulated, that the association has been got up in opposition to the Incorporated Law Society, than which nothing can be more unfounded and untrue. The very fact of the objects of both being similar carries a denial of opposition on the face of it; and, as was stated yesterday at the general meeting by our worthy chairman and president, Sir George Stephen, "it is impossible to conceive what objection on earth there could be even if twenty societies were all in full operation for the accomplishment of our objects—it would be a subject of congratulation rather than regret and ill-feeling."

I assure you, Sir, that this association intends, and intended from the first, to solicit the aid, advice, and assistance of the Incorporated Law Society upon all matters of importance touching the furtherance of its objects; for considering that institution as the parent society, and as possessing, not only both power and influence, this association is bound for the interests of the Profession, but is of itself most desirous that an harmonious feeling should at all times exist; and I trust this declaration will at once check and remove the impression that has been unwarrantably and industriously circulated.

I shall do myself the pleasure next week of forwarding you a copy of the rules as passed, with the list of the executive for the ensuing year.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
E. CLARKE, Sec.

5, Bedford-row, Oct. 31, 1814.

BRIEFS TO COUNSEL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In one of your earliest numbers, I directed your attention to this subject, and you then appeared incredulous. The public attention has since then been brought to it, and many influential members of the Bar have pleaded guilty, "with extenuating circumstances."

I have attentively read the numerous explanatory letters and remarks which have been made upon the subject, and there appears to be only one class of cases in which the general rule established between the two branches of the Profession can be honourably broken in upon by the Bar. I mean the case of the poor prisoner who is able to raise his guinea fee for his defence and no more.

In such a case, I think I speak the general feeling of my own branch of the Profession when I state that we should willingly consent to a relaxation of the general rule, if proper precaution were taken to prevent its abuse.

Let then the poverty of the prisoner be openly stated in court, and, if the statement appear true, let him ask the Court to allow him there to name a counsel, to whom he may hand over his fee, without the intervention of any third party, whether governor or friend.

This would prevent the disgraceful practice of sham attorneys and agents being admitted by counsel to advise as friends of the prisoner, to draw up the briefs, and even to prompt the counsel in open court.

It is not the wish of attorneys to extort from the wretched prisoner his last guinea, under the plea of etiquette. They only wish to prevent his being thrown into the hands of those whose conduct is not under the control of the Court, and they ask the members of the Bar to co-operate with them in preventing this.

As a check upon the practices complained of, I would recommend every attorney, on delivering his brief to counsel, to instruct him to ask of the adverse counsel the name of the attorney from whom he holds the brief. This question should be asked at first privately, then, IF NECESSARY, publicly. The Court would, I am convinced, refuse to hear the counsel, unless a satisfactory answer were given.

Your obedient servant,
Hertford, October 28, 1844. J. L. FOSTER.

LETTER BEFORE ACTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Observing that some of your correspondents still entertain some doubt, and are desirous of learning the views of other members of the Profession, upon the important question whether an attorney can compel payment by a defendant of the costs of a letter written before action, although the debt be paid or tendered before any writ has been issued, I beg to offer you a few observations on the subject; and when the cases which have received judicial decisions are examined, I think it will appear quite clear that such a payment cannot, in ordinary cases, be insisted on.

I believe a great many of the Profession have been misled by the way in which the case of Morrison v. Summers (1 Barn. & Ad. 559) has been quoted or referred to in the works of Mr. Tidd and Mr. Chitty, as an authority to shew, generally, that such a fee may be legally enforced.

The facts of that case appear to be as follows:

On the 10th of April the plaintiff's attorney wrote to the defendant requiring payment of the debt, and 5s. for the letter; the defendant replied that he would remit in the course of a fortnight. On the 14th the plaintiff's attorney, in answer, stated that if the debt with 13s. 4d. his costs, were paid on the 21st, no further expenses would be incurred: but the defendant, without waiting the receipt of such answer, on the same day (14th) remitted the debt to the plaintiff through a banker, and on the following day (15th) it reached the plaintiff, who sent a receipt. But the attorney, on the 15th, in order to secure the payment of his charges, sued out a writ, and, on finding afterwards that the debt had been paid, informed the defendant that unless one guinea was paid for his costs, he should proceed in the action. The defendant refusing to pay any costs, the attorney proceeded.

The defendant then, instead of pleading payment before action brought (and which he probably could not successfully have done, as the writ was issued on the same day on which the money reached the plaintiff, and perhaps at an earlier hour), applied to the equitable jurisdiction of the Court for a rule to stay the proceedings. But, on argument, the Court very justly said, "Remitting the money to the plaintiff, and not to the attorney, was a breach of good faith; and as, if the writ, in fact, had issued before payment of the debt, the attorney would have been entitled to charge the costs of the writ and 6s. 8d. for instructions, the rule for staying the proceedings must, therefore, be absolute only on the terms of paying the 13s. 4d. and the costs of the application."

These facts, no doubt, fully justified the decision to which the Court came; but the case certainly affords no authority for the general and unqualified terms in which the above very able and talented authors have laid down the rule that "an attorney may insist upon payment by the defendant of the costs of a letter, and that he may proceed in the action unless the same be paid, even after payment of the debt before a writ issues."

The subsequent case of Kirton v. Braithwaite (5 Law J. N. C. Exchequer, p. 165) is, however, directly in point, and is decisive. There the plaintiff's attorney wrote requiring payment to be made at his office, on a day named, of the debt, with 6s. 8d. his charges. The defendant sent a person to the office to tender the debt, but the attorney not being there, the tender was made to his clerk (a youth), who refused to receive the debt unless the 6s. 8d. costs were also paid, and which being objected to by the defendant, a writ was issued. The defendant pleaded a tender, which was denied by the plaintiff. At the trial, the under-sheriff held that the tender was sufficient, and the jury found a verdict for the defendant.

A rule for a new trial having been obtained, and cause shewn, the Court (consisting of Lord Abinger, C.B., Parke, Bolland, and Gurney, Barons) distinctly held, that the attorney had no right to claim the costs of the letter, and that the tender was a good one, and the rule was accordingly discharged.

I apprehend the observations of Mr. Dax, in his work, must be considered as applying only to the rule observed in the Masters' offices on taxation, and, to that extent, they are, no doubt, perfectly correct.

I will merely add, that I cannot agree with your correspondent, "A Subscriber," at Cheltenham, in thinking that where a demand of payment has been made by the plaintiff before the attorney's letter is written, the defendant can in that case be compelled to pay for the letter. The plaintiff to a plea of tender could not reply a prior demand; but if the defendant were ready to pay, and tendered the debt upon the last demand being made, or at any time subsequently before the issuing of the writ, the action might, I think, clearly be defeated by a plea of tender.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

WM. THORNE.

SMALL TENEMENT ACT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I beg to refer your correspondent, "An Old Subscriber," from Norwich, to sec. 1 of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, for an answer to his query in your last week's paper; that section expressly mentioning tenants who hold premises of the kind it describes, "either without being liable to the payment of any rent, or at a rent not exceeding twenty pounds a year, and upon which no fine shall have been reserved or made payable."

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
EDW. FRANCIS SLACK.

ATTORNEYS' GOWNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—It is gratifying to find that the adoption of the attorney's gown seems almost universally approved of by the Profession, and I cannot but feel some degree of satisfaction at having, with two or three of my brethren in this town, first mooted the subject. So long back as May last, myself and Mr. Abell being desirous, with others, of appearing in proper costume, made inquiries on the subject, and found that Messrs. Adams and Ede, of Fleet street, were in the habit of making attorneys' gowns as well as other robes; and having understood they were in point of fact worn in many parts of the country in local courts and otherwise, we at once gave the order, and in the LAW TIMES of 1st June last will be found a paragraph in allusion to the intended practice in Colchester, copied from our local paper, The Essex Standard.

As some of your correspondents seem to be in doubt as to the kind of gown or badge of distinction to be worn, I beg to observe, that no difference of opinion need prevail upon the subject; the attorney's gown is as well known amongst robe-makers as any other kind of costume.

The expense has also been glanced at, and I have therefore ventured to append a copy of Messrs. Adams and Ede's bill on me as follows: —

London, May 31, 1844.

J. H. CHURCH, Esq.

Bought of ADAMS and EDE
(Successors to the late Mr. Webb),
Robe Makers to her Majesty and the Royal Family,
193, Fleet-street, corner of Chancery-lane.

Robes for Peers, Bishops, Judges, Clergymen, Queen's Counsel, Serjeants-at-Law, Barristers, Attorneys, and robes of every corporation, executed in the neatest manner.

An Attorney's Gown of fine Princetta.... £2 10

Mr. Durrant, of Chelmsford, one of the warmest advocates of the measure, suggests that a circular should be sent to every attorney in the kingdom, through the medium of the LAW TIMES, the expense of which he estimates at about 40*l.* He also suggests that persons subscribing one guinea each should be members of a committee to carry the object into effect. As far as regards myself, I am quite willing to become a member of a committee, but I do not consider it necessary to incur the proposed expense—at any rate for the present. I would venture to suggest that an attorney favourable to the measure, and who, from a perusal of the LAW TIMES, may be aware of the movement to that end amongst the members of the Profession, should, in each town and locality, take the trouble of ascertaining the views of his Professional brethren on the subject, communicating the result of his inquiries through your valuable publication. More can be done, I think, in the first instance by personal communication than by circular letters, and afterwards a summary of numbers, &c. might be published in the LAW TIMES.

I intend forwarding you a copy of a memorandum signed by practitioners here in favour of the measure, who already amount to thirteen.

I am, &c.

Colchester, Oct. 30, 1844. JOHN H. CHURCH.

ATTORNEYS' GOWNS—LETTER BEFORE ACTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—So far as the opinion of the Profession can be collected from the correspondence in the LAW TIMES, the feeling in favour of the adoption of a costume seems to be uniform; it strikes me that the most proper way of effecting the object is, that the Law Institution or the new Society forming in London should address the Attorney and Solicitor-General, who might make a formal application to the Chancellor and the judges to promulgate such an order for the purpose as their lordships might think fit; this plan combines simplicity with the advantage that the change, it made, is recommended by authority.

May not the same plan be adopted with regard to the charge for letter before action? It is but right that the party who by his neglect has been the cause of the expense being incurred should pay it. By a similar order, if their lordships thought proper to make it a fair charge for writing a letter and attending to receive, debt and costs might be allowed, and if not paid, be recovered by attachment upon the Master's allocatur, after summons to the defendant and taxation of the costs. It would be very seldom necessary to resort to such a proceeding as an attachment, when it once became known that payment of the costs could be enforced.

Your correspondent, the "Essex Attorney," puts me in mind of the fable of the God and the Waggoner; why do not the Essex gentlemen help themselves by putting in motion their law society, and prosecuting the delinquents of whom he complains; or if they have no law society, why do not they "stir their stumps" and get up one? Who is to help them if they will not help themselves?

I am yours, &c.
JOHN RUDDOCK.

Bridgewater, Oct. 29, 1844.

ATTORNEYS' GOWNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Enclosed I send you a paper containing the names of two gentlemen (in addition to my own) as subscribers of 1*l.* each, and to be enrolled as members of the honorary committee of seventy, suggested in my letter in the last number of your journal.

If you will second our views, by publishing with the names sent herewith, those of any other gentlemen you may have received, you will be doing this movement most efficient service.

I am, yours truly,
GEORGE JOHN DURRANT.

Chelmsford, Oct. 31, 1844.

P. S. There are several professional gentlemen in this town who fully concur in the propriety of a return to the "ancient and respectable practice" of distinguishing ourselves in the ordinary way in which the members of a learned profession are distinguished, viz. by a gown, who decline to send you (Mr. Editor) their names, on account of not wishing to appear prominent in the movement. I am sorry for this shamefacedness. Colchester is setting the other provincial towns an excellent example in this respect by its manly expression of its approval of the measure.

List of solicitors willing to become members of the honorary committee suggested in Mr. Durrant's letter of the 21st ult., published in No. 82 of the LAW TIMES:—

George John Durrant, Chelmsford.
Michael Lane, Braintree.
Frederick T. Veley (of the firm of Perkins, Gepp, and Veley), Chelmsford.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

A "SUBSCRIBER" thus treats of "ATTORNEYS' GOWNS:"—

I really do not see any advantage of an attorney adopting a gown to counterbalance the constant trouble the practitioner would be put to by being obliged to carry it about with him, and the additional expense consequent upon such a custom being adopted. I, for one, confess myself ignorant of the authorities upon which it is stated to be the ancient custom, and should really feel obliged to some of the multitudinous host of advocates for enlightenment upon the subject. At the same time I hope they will favour me with the reasons why it was discontinued. I shrewdly suspect that its excessive inconvenience led to its disuse.

"CAUSIDICUS" thus objects to the resumption of "ATTORNEY'S GOWNS:"

In two or three of your recent numbers I perceive this subject occupies no inconsiderable space, and as few, if any, of your numerous correspondents have written to you in opposition thereto, I am induced to address you in the hope that some abler pen may join in the endeavour to prevent the adoption of a costume which, however well established our right may be, is nevertheless one that I, in common with many others, am well convinced would not prove of such benefit and advantage as the promoters of it appear to imagine. An attorney, it should be remembered, is not by any means a fixture in the court; every one knows how frequently his "ingress, egress, and regress" are necessary; and, unlike the barrister, whose peregrinations are merely from one court to the other, an attorney has frequently, in the absence of witnesses for instance, to travel a considerable distance therefrom. How, in such a case, I would ask, is he to dispose of his gown? Is he to rush in all the hurry of business with its graceful folds waving in the breeze, and retarding the progress of his fellow-wayfarers equally with his own? It may be true that admission to the court, and when admitted, possibly a seat, might be considerably facilitated by some distinguishing mark by which the attorney could be readily known from a mere spectator; but is so cumbersome a garment as a gown necessary to effect this, and what is to prevent its being adopted by unqualified persons? I would, in lieu thereof, suggest that a part of each court should be exclusively appropriated to attorneys, and no person admitted thereto without previously producing his certificate to an officer appointed for its inspection; none but attorneys or articled clerks, to whom, on producing their master's certificate, I would extend the privilege. Being able to produce such a document, the intrusion of unqualified persons would be prevented, whilst it would, without the inconvenience of the gown, answer every purpose equally as well, and, with regard to the exclusion of non-professionals, infinitely better.

"A CORRESPONDENT" has sent the following answer to a question upon the subject of COUNTY COURTS.

The jurisdiction of the County Court does not depend upon the residence either of the plaintiff or the defendant. It may affect the proceedings by throwing difficulties in the way of the services and execution, as will be seen by the following requisites:—

The cause of action must arise within the county.

The summons must be served within the county; and if no attorney appears, and the defendant reside in another county, the notice of declaration and other proceedings cannot be left at his residence, but must be served upon him personally, and, I believe, when he is within the jurisdiction.

Neither the distringas nor the levari facias can be executed on property of the defendant which is not within the county.

"A BARRISTER" transmits the following on the subject of the recent revelations:—

One begins to be staggered with the revelations as to the doings in both branches of the Profession; fictitious attorneys, advertising solicitors, and now a placarding counsel is reported to appear. The Bar have long maintained a dignified silence in all matters affecting their interest, where complaint was open to the imputation of private motives. But now, Sir, I think the time arrived when it ought to disclaim all participation in, or sanction of, the wrongdoers of any class of the Profession. Ought not a meeting of the Bar to take place? Privately, if thought best, but let there be a meeting. I am ready to incur my share of any expense in calling it.

"A SUBSCRIBER" at Gloucester replies to the query as to the jurisdiction of County Courts:—

In answer to your correspondent's query on the subject of the jurisdiction of the County Court, I refer him to Tubb v. Woodward (6 T. R. 175); Welsh v. Troyte (2 H. B. 29); Smith v. O'Kelly (1 B. & P. 75); Bayley v. Chitty (2 M. & W. 31); in which cases it has been held that it is merely necessary the defendant should live in the county in which cause of action arose; and to Prichard v. Macgill (5 Dowl. P. C. 731), where it was held that it is not necessary in order to give a County Court jurisdiction that the plaintiff should reside within the county.

The following, by "LECTOR," contains an admirable suggestion for the suppression of the malpractices by pretended Lawyers and Lawyers' Clerks:—

Though I have read Mr. Durrant's and the other letters in your journal relative to the adoption of a professional costume by our order of attorneys, I have not been convinced that such a proceeding will be attended by the results which the admirers of it seem to suppose would follow its adoption.

Though the manly toga may add to the boy's dignity, yet surely it is a strange way of raising the respectability of attorneys, to put an additional garment on their shoulders; and as your "Essex attorney" writes, what is to prevent such cigar dealers as he mentions having their coats likewise made of stuff and of what shape they please?

Even if gowns should be adopted, the plan of having distinctive habits to shew the rank or attainments of the wearers is open to still greater objection. What will be the lot of the wretches who were admitted before the system of giving honorary degrees on examination shall have come into operation? Will their gowns have to be embroidered in front and rear "Admitted 1840," "Admitted 1841," that all may know 'twas no fault of theirs that they did not attain to the dignity of broidered sleeve or coloured hood? Does there, indeed, want such an exciting cause, that a proper spirit of emulation may be raised up to induce honourable individuals to take upon themselves the duties of coroner, town clerk, &c.?

In conclusion, I would offer another plan, which I think would have all the advantages which can attend gowns, and none of the many disadvantages; especially the disadvantages of the want of a robing-room at assizes, &c. and the impediment of the loosely-flowing robe in threading the crowded alleys of the court, as well as in the court itself.

Let each attorney, when he takes out his yearly certificate, receive a card, with his name and place of residence, stamped with an appropriate stamp.

Let each attorney give an open note to his clerk as follows: "Staffordshire Summer Assizes—A B, clerk to C D, attorney," to which should be attached the above card.

On the production of the above, the officer would at once admit the attorney or his clerk; which last requires a free entry as much as his master. Qy. Is the clerk intended to be gowned?

All criminal cases to be entered as at Nisi Prius; or if such plan cannot be carried out—

No barrister to receive a brief from an attorney except upon the production of his card; or from a clerk, except upon the receipt of a note from the attorney whose name is indorsed on the brief.

A "Wiltshire Subscriber" submits the following query:

I shall feel much obliged if some of your readers will oblige by informing me whether it is usual for London agents to charge, in their bill of costs to their country clients, for half the charge allowed on taxation for drawing and fair copy brief to oppose a bankrupt on behalf of the assignees, when the brief is actually drawn and copied in the country, and merely sent up to agents to hand to counsel, and with instructions to attend him at the hearing at the Court of Bankruptcy?

"Eboracus" asks of the experienced of the Profession the following query on a point of practice:—

As the question about the proper stamp on transfer of a mortgage security has excited so much discussion, and is not yet at all clearly settled, in my opinion, I would wish to ask you, or any well-informed reader of the Law Times on the stamp duties, what is the proper stamp for a promissory note payable on demand, as follows:—"On demand, I promise to pay to A B, or order, the sum of 250*l.* with lawful interest," &c.? Now, this note may not be called in for more than six months, but is generally adopted as a continuing security. I have asked the stamp distributor his opinion, and find he always sells the lower rate or class of stamp for such a note, and therefore 5s. would be a proper stamp. Is he correct, or not?

"T. H. A." thus answers a query as to the practice in case of a Sale by a Mortgagor.

Your correspondent "A. F." moots the point in your last number, whether it is the province of the solicitor of the mortgagor or of the mortgagee to prepare the abstract of title in case of a sale by the mortgagor. This question had to be decided in a case in which I was concerned about two years since, and as I and the solicitors concerned on the other side were quite "at sea" with regard to the custom of the Profession, we agreed to refer the question to the Committee of the Law Institution for its decision, and to act accordingly. They decided, most unequivocally, that the solicitor for the mortgagee had the right to prepare the abstract.

I think, on a moment's reflection, no one can impugn the correctness of this decision. A mortgagee is a purchaser pro tanto, and in case of a sale of the property he must be regarded as the vendor, and the mortgagor as a releasor of the equitable interest he possesses in the property. Besides, a mortgagee is not compellable to produce the title-deeds for examination with the abstract; he is only bound to take them out of his deed-box on being tendered the mortgage-money and interest.

THE JOINT STOCK COMPANIES ACTS.

These important statutes came into operation yesterday, and so seriously do they affect the liabilities of every shareholder in the multitudinous speculations now afloat, that it is the duty of the Profession to instruct their clients of the great risks they incur unless the provisions of the Act are strictly complied with, and these are so numerous and complicated, that it will require the skill of a lawyer to keep any projected company, or even any shareholder, secure from danger. These statutes will necessarily throw much business, and proportionate influence, into the hands of the Profession, and we would recommend practitioners to be extremely cautious in advising their clients purposing to become shareholders in any of the new schemes.

The Board of Trade has issued its instructions relative to the forms to be observed for the regulation and establishment of Joint Stock Companies. These we have caused to be added in a Second Edition to Mr. Paterson's edition of the Statutes, which will be ready on Tuesday morning; and to those who may have purchased the first edition, the sheet containing the forms will be forwarded on application.

METROPOLITAN AND PROVINCIAL LEGAL ASSOCIATION.

A Report of the very interesting proceedings on Wednesday, when this Society was formally established, will be found in its proper place.

We are pleased to see that the name originally suggested has been changed for a more general and less invidious one. Such was not the intention of the proposers, but certainly the title at first assumed suggested the idea of an association of the Profession against the public: moreover it had the sound of exclusiveness, and gave occasion to enemies to say that it was but a second edition of the very mischief it was intended to remdey.

These objections have been entirely removed by the judicious substitution of a larger and more expressive name. The very design of the Society was to unite the provincial with the metropolitan lawyers for the protection of their common interests and the purification of the Profession. Accordingly, in the government of the Society the provinces are to have an equal share, and the monopoly that hitherto has consulted the interests of a few great London offices at the expense of all the rest of the Profession, will in the new society be impracticable. We shall not find this Association countenancing Chancery compensation Jobs, or employing its influence for the private advantage of its officers. There will be more chance now of the real welfare of the whole Profession being preferred to the interests of a few, and of the true objects of such a society being carried out with zeal and efficiency.

But not the least advantage we anticipate from the new Association is the stir it will make in the Law Institution. The fact is not denied that it has grown indolent and careless; certain it is that it has failed to fulfil the hopes originally formed of it, and, like all sleepy sentinels, it has proved more a hindrance than a help, for they who might otherwise have been watchful have slumbered in peace, relying upon the vigilance of their watch. The result is seen in the present state of the Profession; the monstrous compensation job is proof how the best institutions may be perverted if a jealous eye be not kept upon them. Although the new Society professes not to be a rival of the old one, it cannot fail to stimulate it to activity, to infuse into it some fresh blood, and a new and more liberal spirit. The establishment will not be permitted to exist for the benefit of two or three individuals, nor will jobbing henceforth have the sanction of a charter.

If the Legal Association do no more than this, it will be entitled to the thanks and support of the Profession; but we anticipate from it many more services when it shall have received, as soon we trust it will, the cordial co-operation of the Law Institution in the good work to which it is devoted.

THE ADVERTISING COUNSEL.

The publication of his advertisement, and the comments which we felt it to be our duty to make upon it, have elicited from Mr. George Farren, Chancery barrister, the following epistle:—

Oct. 28, 1844.

Mr. Editor,—Certainly you have given a prominent situation to my name, in page 63, column 3, of your Law Times. Surely it is you that are adver-

[illegible] my name, and establishing for me a notoriety [illegible] or not, be harmful, as future events may [illegible].

Out of courtesy to you, and the influence you possess, I write this note, but am advised by my friends, in consultation, to pay your informant no further deference. However, I certainly do make no scruples in professing that it is understood by all who attend my chambers that no fees are expected or taken by me for consultations or conferences, nor fees for clerk on such occasions in general; but, mind, for this reason, viz. because I do not estimate my humble services as warranting it, and because the Masters do not allow such fees when a solicitor's bill of costs is taxed in Chancery by party and party taxation.

Your obedient servant,
GEORGE FARREN,
Chancery Barrister.

N.B. Ought not your informant to have acted thus, viz. attended at my chambers, with the newspaper or printed advertisement you speak of, and on the pretended purpose of business? for then his reception would have convinced him and you as to whether he was justified in making you a medium of such an article.

The advertisement alluded to seems to require at any rate, unusually large fees, and few counsel would be justified in refusing them, if he measured by the present course of honorary emolument.

I now ask each of your numerous readers to communicate to you if any one of them ever knew or ever heard of my doing business as the advertisement you speak of points out, and I now leave the subject for you to deal with as you may think best, and shall not consider myself justified in prosecuting the matter further, unless you absolutely force me to do so.

G F

The first remark we have to make on this unique composition is its disingenuous tone. By the expressions in the postscript—"the advertisement alluded to seems to require at any rate, unusually large fees"—"I now ask your numerous readers to communicate to you if any one of them ever knew, or ever heard, of my doing business as the advertisement you speak of points out,"—he would have it implied that he does not acknowledge as his the paper in our possession. But if so, why does he apologize for it and vindicate its language? why does he not at once indignantly repudiate it, and demand that the imputation upon his professional character be removed by an explicit contradiction? He only does not this because he cannot.

We doubt not that Mr FARREN tells us truly that he estimates his services at their true worth when he asks no fees for consultation or clerk, and we confess that we should be surprised at his ever having done any "business as the advertisement points out." But that is no defence to our charge, which is, 1st, that he has advertised at all, 2nd, that he has advertised to give advice gratis, 3rd, that he has advertised to act as counsel without the intervention of an attorney, 4th, that he has advertised a scale of fees different from that established by the rules of the Bar.

To all these offences he has pleaded guilty and as he expresses no regret, nor makes the slightest apology for the great insult and injury he has offered to the Profession, the duty of all his fellows is plain. The Bar will shun him, of course, the Solicitors will give him no countenance, and the Benchers of the Inn of which he is so unworthy a member may rebuke him, if they will not, or cannot, remove from their society so grievous a blot upon its respectability.

THE LAWS OF FRANCE.

No. II.

In France foreign manufacturers cannot obtain damages for the counterfeit of their stamps and labels bearing their signature.

An important decision was given a short time since respecting the rights of foreign manufacturers, upon the appeal of Messrs Gueland and Amabet, and other perfumers in Paris, against Messrs Rowland and Son, perfumers in England.

The house of Rowland and Son manufacture and export to Europe India and America, large quantities of a cosmetic known under the name of Macassar Oil. Messrs Gueland and other perfumers, in Paris, manufactured also what they called Macassar Oil, and imitated the wrappers and labels of Rowland and Son. The English house brought an action against them before the Tribunal de Commerce, and damages were awarded.

Messrs Gueland and others appealed; but the Cour Royale of Paris, by its decree of the 28th Nov. 1840, confirmed the judgment of the Tribunal de Commerce.

These decisions were grounded upon the following reasons:—

That the name of a tradesman is property which the laws of all countries should cause to be respected, that to the name is annexed a commercial reputation, which becomes family property; that a foreigner bringing into France either a business or manufactured goods ought to be protected equally as natives; that good faith and equity belong to all countries; that the French courts ought not to allow purchasers to be deceived by speculations reprobated by good faith and equity; and finally, that if it were true that French tradespeople in England were exposed to similar frauds, yet nevertheless true and faithful justice should be rendered to foreigners placing themselves under the protection of France, in order to claim and obtain the same protection for French citizens residing abroad.

Messrs Gueland and other perfumers asserting, however, that the law had been wrongly applied, appealed to the Court of Cassation, and after mature deliberation, the Civil Chamber of that Court gave a judgment on the 14th August, 1844, annulling the decree of the Cour Royale of Paris.

This judgment is too important not to be given in full:—

"According to Art. 11 of the Civil Code, thus worded:—A foreigner shall enjoy in France the same civil rights as those which are or shall be granted to Frenchmen according to the treaties with the country to which the foreigner belongs.

"According to Art 1 of the law of 28th July, 1824, thus worded:—Whoever has put to or made appear on manufactured articles, either by adding or suppressing or any alteration whatsoever, the name of a manufacturer who did not manufacture them shall be punished by the penalties attached to Art 423 of the Penal Code, in addition to damages, if they are awarded.

"According to Art 18 of the law of the 22nd Germinal year 11 thus worded:—No one can bring an action for the counterfeit of his mark unless he has previously made it legally known by the deposit of a copy at the register of the Tribunal of Commerce in the capital or principal town to which his manufactory belongs.

"Inasmuch as the object of the disputed judgment was to grant to the plaintiffs reparation for the damage occasioned them by the apposition of the name of Rowland and Son to the commercial products sold by the defendants,

"Inasmuch as this action was not legally authorized either by general or by special right,

"Inasmuch as the special legislation which admits of an action for reparation of damage caused by the apposition on manufactured articles of the name of a manufacturer who did not manufacture them, is the law of the 28th July combined with the law of the 22nd Germinal, year 11, that these laws do not intimate that the benefit of them may be applied to foreigners not admitted to enjoy the civil rights of France.

"Inasmuch as the civil rights of foreigners in France are ruled by Art 11 of the Civil Code,

"Inasmuch as, according to Art 11 and 13 of the Civil Code, foreigners not admitted to the enjoyment of the civil rights by the king's authority only enjoy in France the civil rights which are reciprocally granted to Frenchmen by the treaty with the nation to which the foreigners belong,

"Inasmuch as exceptions to this general rule are only made in cases especially provided for by an express law, and that no express law gives the right of action to foreign manufacturers for reparation of commercial damage caused by the use of their name,

"Inasmuch as it is by no means alleged that Rowland and Son had, by the king's authority, been admitted to the enjoyment of the civil rights of France,

"Inasmuch as no treaty between France and England reciprocally admits manufacturers of both countries to exercise in each their rights of action on account of the use of their names,

"Inasmuch as Bonneret,(a) a French subject, would be entitled to complain of the use of the name of Rowland and Son only so far as these last had legally transmitted him a right to that effect, and that Rowland and Son could not transmit to Bonneret the right of action in the French courts, since they were not themselves invested with this right,

"From thence it follows that the disputed judgment, so far as it pronounces a condemnation against the defendants for the use of the name of Rowland and Son, has undoubtedly violated the above-mentioned laws,

"Annul and make void the said judgment."

(a) This said Bonneret had been a party in the action as consignee of the goods of Rowland and Son.

This judgment was, in our opinion, dictated by a narrow apprehension of the tenets of the law, and is in opposition to the tendencies of the whole of our legislation, which for upwards of fifty years has been endeavouring to assimilate foreigners to natives with regard to the exercise of civil rights; and indeed there is no country where foreigners enjoy so many rights as in France, and this judgment is an isolated case, and will not form a precedent.(5)

The Court of Cassation, which you are aware only pronounces upon the application of the law, has referred the suit to the Cour Royale of Rouen, where it is now pending. If this Court shall decide as the Cour Royale of Paris, interpreting the law in a liberal sense, and if this decree is the subject of another appeal, the case will be tried before all the united chambers of the Court of Cassation; on that occasion they will sit in their red robes, and the attorney-general, M. Dupin, will give his opinion.

It has often happened that the united chambers have decided differently from a single chamber. These solemn decrees form authorities in our jurisprudence, and all the courts and tribunals are compelled to submit to them.

At all events, until this point is settled, or until between the two countries there is a reciprocal understanding as to the mutual enjoyment of the property of a manufacturer's marks, we recommend all manufacturers of both countries to appoint abroad a confidential person—a fictitious partner, who would be able, availing himself of his right as a native, to bring an action for damages in cases of counterfeit.

N. A. TREITT,
Avocat à la Cour Royale.

LECTURES ON MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.

BY ALFRED S. TAYLOR.

Delivered at Guy's Hospital, 1844.

LECTURE V.

WE now pass on to the consideration of poisons individually, and first we will take up the class of irritants. The irritant poisons are divided into two kinds, the non-metallic and the metallic, and of these we will first consider the non-metallic, beginning with the mineral acids, of which the sulphuric, nitric, and muriatic acids are the principal. These are both corrosive and irritant poisons, being corrosive in the concentrated state, and irritant in the diluted state. Muriatic acid differs very little in its operation on the system from the sulphuric and nitric acids; indeed, they all produce effects so similar on the body, that we may describe the symptoms together. When either of these acids is swallowed, the first symptom is a violent burning and a disagreeable taste, acute pain in the fauces and œsophagus, extending to the stomach and bowels, and this pain is observed to be increased by pressure, or by any action that affects the muscular system. Muscular exertion, or even the simple act of deglutition, the swallowing of water or any substance, is accompanied by intense pain; and in the case of nitric acid, gaseous matter is evolved from the mouth, and the abdomen swells from the decomposition of the organic tissues, and the evolution of gaseous matter. The stomach is rendered so irritable that whatever is swallowed is instantly vomited, and the vomited matters have a peculiar appearance. In the case of sulphuric acid the liquid is of dark brownish-black colour, something like dark coffee-grounds; in the case of nitric acid it is of a yellow-green hue. In the vomited matters there are flakes or shreds of membrane derived from the lining membrane of the œsophagus, which comes away in patches. If the vomited matter fall on a limestone pavement, there is effervescence; if on coloured articles of dress, the colour changes, and is often destroyed. Indigo is not affected by sulphuric acid, but it is destroyed by nitric acid. There is in the case of poisoning by mineral acids extreme soreness of the mouth, arising from the excoriation of the mucous membrane. If diluted vitriolic acid is taken, the matters vomited will not be so dark, and they do not corrode bodies on which they fall. There is, too, very great difficulty in respiration, and the person who has taken the poison breathes with great difficulty; the pulse is frequently irregular and scarcely perceptible; the countenance is anxious, the eyes glazed, fixed, and often redder than usual; the surface of the body is cold, and there is a clammy perspiration on the skin, and convulsive motions of the muscles of the face and the lips, arising from the sympathetic action of the poison on the nervous system. The bowels are sometimes relaxed, and often constipated. A very common peculiarity in these cases is, that the intellectual faculties are clear till the last moment of life; the person is conscious of all around him, and he dies, generally, very suddenly. The inside of the mouth is often found corrugated. You might suppose, in the case of sulphuric acid, that it would be brown, but that is not always the case. We often find that the epithelium peels off, and the skin is found of a brownish colour, as in the case of nitric acid. Spots arising from the acid are commonly seen on the lips, the face, or the neck, in the case of suicide; if the individual spills a quantity of the acid, the colour will expose its nature;—if nitric acid, they will be yellow; if sulphuric acid, brown. Another circumstance in poisoning by mineral acids is this, that the symptoms they produce are immediate—they come on instantaneously. With most other irritants, a certain time elapses before the symptoms appear. Another fact to notice is, that no disease that occurs suddenly in the human system bears any resemblance to poisoning by mineral acids; no disease known to come on suddenly at all resembles poisoning by sulphuric acid; and besides, no disease produces such well-marked symptoms in an instant. It is rather important to attend to this fact—i. e. the occurrence of the symptoms immediately, and not gradually, as in some other cases of poisoning. The following case of murder by sulphuric acid occurred in Scotland in 1830. Jean Aitkin, or Humphreys, was tried at the Aberdeen September Circuit, in that year, for the murder of her husband, by poisoning him with sulphuric acid, which she poured down his throat as he lay asleep in bed. It was proved by Dr. Christison that the deceased died from the effects of the poison, the administration of which took place in the following manner. The parties frequently quarrelled, and were both addicted to habits of intoxication. On the night in question, some friends had passed the evening with them drinking. They went away about twelve o'clock at night, and soon after this, the deceased went to bed, perfectly in health, and soon after fell asleep. The only persons in the house at the time were the prisoner and a servant-maid, and the street-door was locked, so that no other person could have access. The prisoner left the servant's room on her stocking soles, a thing unusual for her; and when she returned, in about twenty minutes, she told the servant that her husband was roaring mad with drink. The girl, upon going to him, found him lying upon his back, declaring he was all roasting. The prisoner at first shewed an unwillingness to send for a medical man, but at length did so. When the deceased left the guests at twelve, there were only two glasses on the table in the room; but when the neighbours came in after the alarm there were three; and the third was proved to have come from a room above stairs, of which the prisoner had the key. The glass contained, it was supposed, sulphuric acid. In the room where the deceased was lying was a phial which had contained sulphuric acid, but was then nearly empty. The deceased complained of a burning pain in the throat and stomach, and expired in great agony. He evidently died from the effects of sulphuric acid, large quantities of which were detected on his shirt, on the blanket and bed-cover, and a little on the prisoner's bed-gown and handkerchief; but not a trace of the poison could be found in the stomach or intestines of the deceased, though sulphuric acid is a poison so easily detected. It was quite impossible that the man could have taken it himself, for he was asleep at the time, and it was quite impossible he could have received it at the time he was drinking with his friends, as was alleged, for the symptoms produced by mineral acids come on suddenly, and cannot be suspended; and as he had not taken any thing else after his friends left, it was clear the poison must have been poured down his throat while asleep, the administration of which was rendered easy by the practice the deceased had of sleeping on his back with his mouth wide open. After the alarm was given, the door was found fastened, just as when he went to bed; therefore it was clear it could not have been administered by anybody but the servant or the wife, and no suspicion attached to the servant.

The facts connected with poisoning by the mineral acids were here noticed, and these, with the whole of the circumstances, led to the conclusion that the wife gave it, and she was convicted and executed. Suppose it had been arsenic, it might have been given by the wife after his friends left, or by his friends while they were with him. One very singular circumstantial point connected with this case was, that some sulphuric acid was found on the bed-gown of the wife, shewing that she must have administered it while she was undressed. It commonly takes place that the clothes exhibit marks of sulphuric acid if it be highly concentrated. In a case of that kind where the poison is in the ordinary state, the stomach is corroded, the parietes are soft, and give way sometimes under the effect of the gaseous distension. On which do the dangerous effects of these mineral acids depend? Is it on the quantity taken, or the strength? It is not so much on the quantity as on the concentration of the acids; the more concentrated they are, the more dangerous are they to life, so that it is rather the strength of the acid to which we must look than the proportions swallowed. In one case one drachm of strong sulphuric acid destroyed life in seven days; but had this been very much diluted, the person might have escaped. Persons do recover in a very extraordinary way; a person has been known to recover after taking six drachms of oil of vitriol; but it appears in this case the stomach was filled with food. This is a very rare case of recovery, after taking so much of a powerful substance like sulphuric acid. The general rule is, that the strength has more influence in producing fatal results than the quantity. Sometimes death takes place from secondary causes, as from fever or irritation, after a lapse of some days, or the effects of the acid on the lining membrane or fauces, after the lapse of many months. A person may die at a considerable period of time after swallowing sulphuric acid. Dr. Wilson met with a case where the person died forty-five weeks after having taken this acid. Now what is the cause of death in these protracted cases? On examining the œsophagus you see the manner in which it is acted upon, and that the result of the corrosive action is to produce inflammation of the structure. In some subjects the matters vomited appear to be a complete cast of the œsophagus, the epithelium being peeled completely off. In the case recorded by Dr. Wilson, the patient, during a violent fit of coughing, brought up a large piece of sloughy membrane, which was found to consist of the inner coats of the œsophagus, much thickened, and very firm in texture. Its length was eight or nine inches, and its width that of the œsophagus; it was of a cylindrical form, and pervious throughout its whole extent.

You may find on these occasions that the following question will be put to you:—Will sulphuric acid kill a person without entering the stomach? This may undoubtedly occur, and it takes place chiefly in young subjects. When a quantity of the poison is swallowed, it acts on the posterior parts of the larynx and the trachea, affecting the rima glottidis and producing suffocation, from which the child dies. Then, again, persons may die from the effects of mineral acids even after the lapse of many years.

Now, with respect to the post mortem appearances: when we examine the body of a person who has died from sulphuric acid, the lining membrane of the stomach and intestines is generally more or less inflamed in patches; where death takes place from the effects of the concentrated poison, the stomach, if not perforated, is found collapsed and contracted, and on laying it open, the contents are commonly found of a dark brown or black colour, and of a tarry consistency, arising from the carbonizing action of the sulphuric acid on the blood and mucus. There is another point to which I must call your attention: that portions of the stomach are broken down, or softened in patches. The same effect we have noticed takes place with regard to the œsophagus. These patches are often acid, and when washed out, the membranes are more or less inflamed beneath, and the coats are softened and readily break down under the finger. Sometimes, however, they are hard and corrugated. The lining membrane of the mouth and œsophagus is white, softened, corroded, and strips off in shreds. Strong sulphuric acid produces the effects of nitric acid, with the exception of the yellow tinge, and it is the same with the muriatic, though the tinge is of a yellow or greenish colour. The mineral acids are not always to be found in the stomach, even when taken in a large quantity. This is owing to their ready expulsion by vomiting. Some doubt has arisen, sometimes, as to whether the poison might not have been introduced after death, to simulate suicide or murder. This is an erroneous notion, because in the case of poisoning during life the mucous membrane is entirely destroyed, accompanied with more or less effect on the surrounding structures, while in the case of introducing poison after death, there is found merely a local action; the substance acts on no other part except that on which it is directly applied, producing, if very recently after death, a slight charring. We do not commonly find that sulphuric acid chars the cold and dead animal structures unless we apply heat to it.

(5) The law on patents voted during the last session, and modifying the previous one voted 1791, has placed foreigners on the same footing as Frenchmen.

With regard to antidotes in a case of poisoning by sulphuric acid, the best plan is to administer water holding in suspension chalk or magnesia, as speedily as possible. The carbonates are not to be recommended, because when administered the carbonic acid evolved has the effect of distending the stomach to a very great degree, and, supposing the poison to have been taken in a highly concentrated state, and the stomach softened, it may determine the perforation of the organ; therefore it is desirable to mix up whiting in a small quantity of magnesia and water. In many cases the administration of barley-water, or starch, is useful; even common flour mixed up in a thick paste, has been exhibited: all these things combine with the acid, and thus cut off its action on the mucous membrane. The administration of a strong solution of yellow soap has been found, from its alkaline quality, as well as its oily nature, to tend considerably to counteract the effects of the mineral acid. Of all remedies, calcined magnesia is the best.

Sulphate of indigo, which is nothing more than sulphuric acid mixed with colouring matter, has been taken for the purpose of suicide. In cases where it is taken, the matters vomited are of a bluish tint, and among them we find coloured shreds of mucous membrane. One remarkable result observed to arise from the action of sulphate of indigo is, that the colouring matter is absorbed, and passes off with the urine. Cases of this kind can present no difficulty. A question has arisen as to whether the mineral acids act by absorption. Now, it does not appear that they do. In the first place, it is difficult to conceive how the absorbents can take up a strong acid and carry it to the blood-vessels; and in the next place we find that dilution, which always facilitates absorption, generally retards the action of these acids. Thus, if we dilute sulphuric acid with a very large quantity of water, we disarm it of its power and diminish its effects, if we do not altogether destroy them. In the case of oxalic acid, which acts by absorption, the administration of much water is attended with dangerous consequences, and unless it be removed it spreads over the larger surface of the intestines. Dilution retards, and does not accelerate, the action of mineral acids. One fact, however, is worthy of notice, that the blood, in cases of poisoning, has been sometimes found coagulated. In one or two cases coagula have been taken from the heart, the aorta, and the large blood-vessels, but here does not seem to be any reason for believing that these coagula result from the action of a portion of sulphuric acid absorbed. In analyzing these coagula taken from persons who have been killed by sulphuric acid, I have never found a trace of that acid present in them. It does not appear that the coagulation is produced by the action of any acid absorbed, because in all cases in which sulphuric acid is combined with the albumen, it is easily separated and detected by boiling the substance in water.

We now proceed to the consideration of the chemical process required for the analysis of sulphuric acid. Our analysis may be directed, for medico-legal purposes, to three forms or conditions in which the acid is found:—1st, as it exists in the pure state; 2nd, as it exists in all liquids, when mixed with organic matters, as with articles of food, or the contents of the stomach; 3rd, as it is found on articles of clothing. We will first take the substance in its pure state. It may come before us in the shape of oil of vitriol of commerce. Now the properties by which the concentrated oil of vitriol are identified are, 1st, it carbonizes organic matters, either by contact, or by the application of a very slight degree of heat. Any dry organic substance, the moment it is introduced into the acid, becomes charred, that is to say, it loses oxygen and hydrogen as water, and carbon becomes free. 2nd. When the highly-concentrated acid is boiled with copper-cuttings, mercury, and some other metals, it produces sulphurous acid gas, which is immediately evolved, and is known by its odour, its acid reaction, and by its action on iodic acid. 3rd. When we mix oil of vitriol with an equal bulk of water, a very great heat is evolved, the temperature being from 160° to 170°.

In the diluted state there is no such action. In order to test it in the diluted state, the best substance we can employ for this purpose is the soluble salt of barytes, chloride of barium, or the nitrate of barytes. Having ascertained by test-paper that the solution is acid, we add to a portion of it a few drops of nitric acid, and then a solution of nitrate of barytes. If sulphuric acid be present, a dense white precipitate of sulphate of barytes will fall down, which is insoluble in all acids and alkalies. By decomposing this with charcoal, we get sulphuret of barium; unless we do this, we cannot infer that the substance precipitated by the test is sulphuric acid. To determine whether it is a sulphuret that is produced by the decomposition above mentioned, we moisten a piece of filtering paper with solution of acetate of lead, and suspend it over the charred precipitate, having previously added to it a little dilute muriatic acid. Immediately on the mixing of the two substances, a gas is given out (sulphuretted hydrogen), which has the property of rendering the salt of lead of a brown colour, while there is evolved a very offensive odour. Thus we establish the poison to be sulphuric acid beyond all dispute.

The delicacy of the test is such, that if a solution contains the smallest possible quantity of the acid, it will be precipitated; and half a grain of sulphate of barytes, which will yield sufficient evidence, is equal to one-third of a grain of oil of vitriol. Now, are there any other acids affected by this test? There are several—sulphurous acid, selenic acid, and iodic acid. Selenic acid is scarcely known in England, and is a very rare substance. Sulphurous acid is immediately known by its odour of burning sulphur, and there can be no doubt about the nature of the substance. Iodic, or fluo-silicic acid, precipitates the salt of barytes when it is quite pure; but when first added there is no precipitate. The fluo-silicate of barytes is precipitated by this very powerful acid, but the precipitation is very slow; it is very like diluted sulphuric acid. This acid is very easily mistaken for sulphuric acid. We do not, however, find the precipitate to yield the same results on calcining it with charcoal. There is a salt met with in commerce, by which we are very liable to be deceived in our experiments; it may be pronounced to be sulphuric acid, as it possesses all the properties of that acid; but it is nothing more than a common solution of alum. If we evaporate a portion of this liquid, there will be a saline residue if it be a solution of alum, otherwise not; for sulphuric acid should be entirely dissipated by heat, or should leave only the faintest trace of sulphate of lead. The quantity of free sulphuric acid present might be erroneously estimated, in consequence of some simple medicinal substance (as Epsom salt) being mixed with it; but the presence of this may be determined by evaporation, and the free sulphuric acid separated by warming the liquid, and adding finely powdered carbonate of barytes until effervescence ceases. The precipitate formed would be a sulphate of barytes, and would represent only the free sulphuric acid present. But there is another source of error to which we are exposed, and many of these errors are not referred to in the way they ought to be by toxicologists. Any acid mixed with a common sulphate employed in medicine might be mistaken for free sulphuric acid; as, for example, a small quantity of citric acid, acetic acid, or tartaric acid mixed with Epsom salts, or sulphate of magnesia. In a case like this, we can easily detect the real acid present by evaporation, and thus ascertain of what the substance is compounded. Such a mixture may be always suspected to exist where any saline residue is left on evaporating it. In such a case carbonate of barytes would not separate the free acid, for it might form a soluble barytic salt with the extraneous acid, and this, by reacting on the sulphate of magnesia, would precipitate the sulphuric acid of that salt, and thus lead to error. In order to extract from the solution the foreign acid, concentrate the acid liquid and sulphate by evaporation, and then mix it with its bulk of alcohol. This will dissolve the free acid and leave the sulphate, which may be afterwards washed with alcohol until all traces of acidity are then lost.

We now pass on to the consideration of sulphuric acid in the second condition, that in which we have to examine it. It may be presented to us in articles of diet,—porter, coffee, and tea; and here the process for its detection is substantially the same,—the liquid being rendered clear by filtration previously to adding the test. If it is presented to us in the vomited matters, as in the contents of the stomach, the liquid is in general dark-coloured, and mixed with a large quantity of mucus; the first point, therefore, is, to separate from it all insoluble matter, such as shreds of mucus; and then having determined its acidity, add the test of barytes. The sulphate of barytes thus obtained, if mixed with organic matter, may be purified by mixing with it strong nitric acid; but this is not commonly the case, as the reduction of the precipitate of charcoal may be equally well performed with the impure as with the pure sulphate. Some common liquids generally contain a portion of sulphuric acid, or a sulphate, such as vinegar or porter; but the acid is in very minute proportion; therefore, if there be an abundant precipitate, there can be no doubt that free sulphuric acid has been added to them. Should the liquid be thick and viscid like gruel, it may be diluted with water, and then boiled with the addition of a little acetic acid. The matters vomited from the stomach will generally be found highly acid; but it may sometimes happen that the liquids from the stomach of a person who has taken sulphuric acid may be quite neutral. In such a case as this, should we say that no sulphuric acid was given? Surely not. If, in testing the neutral liquid by the barytic salt, there be a precipitate, sulphuric acid can be present only in the state of a sulphate; if this precipitate be abundant, it cannot be due to the presence of minute traces of sulphate in the gastric and salivary secretions; but still it would be improper to infer from this chemical fact alone, that sulphuric acid had been swallowed, since it is well known that some saline sulphates, such as those of magnesia and soda, are often administered in large quantities medicinally; and it might be fairly objected to this evidence, that the precipitate was due to one of those salts being present in the stomach. It will be necessary to examine the mouth, the fauces, and œsophagus; for if the individual has taken sulphuric acid, there will be found traces of its action on all these parts, whereas, if he took simply a sulphate, there would be no action on these parts. Then you may be asked the question, is not this salt of barytes precipitated by many soluble salts met with in common life? and the answer is, that it is. It is precipitated by the carbonates, the phosphates, the borates, the tartrates, and the oxalates; but every one of these precipitates is soluble in nitric acid, whereas sulphate of barytes is insoluble in that acid. Perhaps there is one exception to this remark, in the fact that the fluo-silicate of barytes is insoluble in nitric acid. Now, supposing you find no sulphuric acid in the contents of the stomach, then the corroded parts of the stomach and the fauces are to be boiled in water, filtered, and the tests applied. In many cases no poison is found in the body, or only a very small quantity. We have had many cases in this hospital of poisoning by sulphuric acid, in which we have not been able to detect any trace of the poison in the body. This shews the effect of treatment. In cases of this kind what are we to do? We must proceed to examine the clothes, the furniture, and all articles about the room, or around the person of the deceased, on which it may have fallen, and here we generally find some evidence of it. Dr. Christison, by his excellent knowledge of the subject, and his extraordinary acuteness, was able to bring out the whole of a case of poisoning—the case of Humphreys, already mentioned. He found not a trace of sulphuric acid in the stomach or fauces, and there was a want of chemical evidence. He examined the dresses of the parties all over, and found them rather damp; he boiled them in water, and detected sulphuric acid in the dress of the man, and also of the woman, and this made up for what might have been a serious deficiency in the evidence. There is a condition in which sulphuric acid is met with, combined with other matter, and that is the sulphate of indigo; but poisoning by this substance is very rare. In the case of a child who swallowed some sulphate of indigo, the contents of the stomach, and the urine, were tinged with blue, and this appearance, which it constantly presents, is one of the means of detecting these cases of poisoning. It is the only vegetable blue not affected by acid, and it is tested in the same way as sulphuric acid.

Now we may be called upon to analyze sulphuric acid in articles of clothing, and here we may detect it when all other means fail. If the acid is strong, it produces a sort of deep brown colour upon black cloth. It often happens that oil of vitriol is thrown upon persons for the purpose of seriously injuring them; this is an offence against the law which was at one time very prevalent. It does not produce any immediate change on the cloth on which it is thrown, but in a short time a brownish colour, mixed with red, appears, which becomes of a still lighter brown, and the cloth appears crumpled up as if scorched or burned. If it stands for a few days, a further change ensues; the stain in the centre is brown, and of a deep red colour around. The part always remains damp, for the sulphuric acid is a fixed acid, and absorbs water from the air. The common diluted vitriol does not produce this effect, but it gives a red or reddish brown colour to cloth. In consequence of sulphuric acid being fixed and remaining on the cloth, it may be detected after a very considerable period of time. Dr. Christison says, after a period of several weeks, but it may be discovered after many years. In January 1831 a small quantity of this acid was spilled on a black cloth dress; it has been exposed in an open jar to the air for upwards of thirteen years. The cloth has gone down to a black pasty mass, something like tar, in which a large quantity of sulphuric acid can be detected. In a case of poisoning that occurred in the year 1832, the acid was partly spilled on a dress of printed cotton: this has been likewise exposed for twelve years, and the organic substance is completely corroded, and reduced to a kind of humid powder, but sulphuric acid is still easily detected in it. It may be sometimes necessary to determine the quantity of sulphuric acid present in a particular liquid. In order to settle this point, a portion of the liquid may be measured off, and the whole of the sulphuric acid present may be precipitated by the salt of barytes. The sulphate of barytes should be rendered pure by boiling it in nitric acid, then washed, dried, and weighed. For every 100 grains of dried sulphate obtained, we must allow about forty-one and a half grains of common oil of vitriol to have been present; and so on in the same proportion for any other quantity. If we thus obtain the weight of the sulphuric acid present, it is very easy, from its known specific gravity, to calculate the quantity by measure.

THE CRITIC.

A Practical Treatise on the several Counts and Pleas allowed to be pleaded together in Civil Proceedings, under the Statute 4 Anne, c. 16, and the New Rules of Hilary Term, 4 Wm. 4, and other Rules and Statutes. By Henry Macnamara, Esq. of Lincoln's-inn, Special Pleader. London, 1844. Benning.

Some time since, we had occasion to notice with warm commendation a Treatise upon Nullities and Irregularities in Pleading, from the pen of Mr. Macnamara; and we expressed a hope that ere long we should meet him again in that branch of the Profession to which he has evidently devoted much profound study—the difficult principles and practice of Pleading. The well-deserved success of the former volume has led to the publication of the present one, which is likewise devoted to a single branch of his science, but one of extreme importance, and a familiar acquaintance with which is essential to the pleader. He has accomplished this task in the same clear, well-arranged, and practical manner as characterized his former production; so that the precise information sought may be readily found when required, and the student will gather from its perusal a store of knowledge which is nowhere beside collected in so accessible and intelligible a shape.

Mr. Macnamara observes in his preface, that the practice relating to several counts and pleas has been formed within ten years. Since the rules of 4 Wm. 4, no branch of common law practice has been so frequently called into use. The numerous decisions upon those rules may now be deemed to have elucidated them; and few cases could arise to which some or one of these decisions would not be applicable.

The time, then, has arrived for their collection and methodical arrangement; and this work, so much wanted by the Profession, has been successfully performed by Mr. Macnamara.

He divides his treatise into two parts, and each part into two chapters. The first chapter contains the history of this branch of practice, the second, such general rules as seemed to be deducible from the decided cases. The first chapter of the second part gives the practical mode of obtaining an order and rule to plead or add several matters; of rescinding such order and of striking out counts, &c., and the results of pleading several counts and pleas as regards costs; the imposition of terms; proof at the trial; signing judgment, &c. The second chapter sets forth alphabetically instances in civil proceedings of the counts and pleas which have been allowed or disallowed. In this chapter he has further given the most important and recent cases as to the evidence that may be offered under certain pleas, for it is a reason for disallowing pleas, that they set forth facts which may be given in evidence under other pleas in the record.

As of more general interest to our readers, and more easily severable from the context, we extract the succinct history of this branch of pleading, recommending all who desire acquaintance with the practice to seek it where it will be found complete, in Mr. Macnamara's volume:—

At a very early period in the history of pleading, the plaintiff in an action was not allowed to state more than one cause of action, nor was the defendant permitted to allege more than one ground of defence.(a) This course of proceeding was more in accordance with the simplicity of vivâ voce pleading than with the artificial system which at present exists, and which has gradually adapted itself to the complicated affairs of a commercial and highly civilized country.

By an ancient relaxation of practice, the use of several counts was permitted to the plaintiff. (b) Not so, however, with pleas; the defendant was bound to make his selection of several defences which he might have, and to rely on one answer alone. And even in regard to counts, the semblance of a distinct cause of action was and still is preserved by the introduction of the word "other" in every count succeeding the first. (Deer v. Ivey, 12 L. J., Q.B., N. S. 132, per Parke, B.)

As the defendant was confined to one plea, and as the rule against duplicity prevented him from setting forth several defences in that one plea, much injustice was found to be caused in practice, and the defendant in many instances was prevented from going into the real merits of his answer to the claim; in addition to this evil it was a cause of perplexed and inartificial pleading, the defendant endeavouring to crowd as many reasons and facts as he could into his plea, however intricate, repugnant, and contradictory he made it by so doing. (Eunomus, 207.)

This rigour towards the defendant was deemed, we are told, a great reproach to our law, and as such was cast upon the Courts at Westminster by the civilians, who said it was forcing a man to fight with one hand tied behind him; (c) and they urged the maxim of their own favourite law, "Pluribus defensionibus uti permittitur." (Dig. l. 44, t. 1, s. 5.)

At length, to remedy this defect, the statute 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, was passed, whereby it was enacted that "any defendant or tenant in any action or suit, or any plaintiff in replevin in any Court of record, might, with leave of the Court, plead as many several matters thereto as he might think necessary for his defence."

In the words of the learned author of Eunomus, "the legislature have enabled the defendant, as it were, to open as many trenches against the enemy as the nature of his ground will permit. By these means the fort indeed is sometimes rendered impregnable, but sometimes the siege is only protracted." (P. 207.)

The leave of the Court was required by this statute in order to prevent inconsistent and contradictory pleas from being put upon the record, and at first the courts were strict upon this point.(c) But afterwards this enactment was treated as a remedial law (Steel v. Pindar, Barnes, 347), and the defendant, with very few exceptions, was allowed to plead as many different matters as he pleased, however inconsistent they might be. (Jackson v. Warwick, Barnes, 361.)

The Crown not being named in the Act was not bound by it, and therefore informations in the nature of a quo warranto were not within its operation (Attorney-General v. Allgood, Parker, 1), but by the next statute on the subject (32 Geo. 3, c. 58) a defendant to any such proceeding for the exercise of any office or franchise in any city or town corporate may plead that he had actually taken upon himself such office six years or more before the exhibiting such information, which plea may be pleaded singly or together with such plea as he might have lawfully pleaded before that Act, or such several pleas as the Court on motion should allow.(d)

And for the same reason, a defendant was not allowed under the statute of Anne to plead several matters to a declaration in prohibition, but by the stat. 1 Wm. 4, c. 21, declarations in prohibition shall be expressed to be on behalf of the real party, and not, as heretofore, on behalf of the party and the Crown, and therefore, the reason being removed, the defendant may now plead several pleas in prohibition. (Hall v. Maule, 4 A. & E. 283.)

The privilege of pleading several counts and pleas, however, in course of time, was much abused, and the same cause of action or defence was stated in every imaginable shape and form, chiefly with a view to avoid a variance between the allegation and the proof. This naturally caused prolixity and expense.

The Common Law Commissioners had pointed out the nature and extent of the inconvenience resulting from this state of the law. "The multiplication of counts and pleas," they say, "has long been considered as one of the chief abuses in the system of pleading. . . . . Records containing from ten to fifteen special counts or pleas are by no means rare, and fail to excite remark. Of these the greater proportion, and frequently the whole, relate to the same substantial cause of action or defence. . . . . The length of a count or plea is very uncertain, but cannot be stated on an average at less than four law folios, and at that length the addition of each count or plea is an addition of 4s. to the taxed costs on the draft. . . . . With respect to pleas it is certain the practice is not older than the 4 Anne, c. 16, and though it has been of much longer duration with respect to counts, yet the precedents from the time of Queen Elizabeth to that of King William and Queen Mary shew that in the use of several counts the pleader was at that period incomparably more sparing than at present; and the still existing rule, which requires each count always to set forth a cause of action ostensibly different from the preceding (even when in fact the same), combines with other reasons in support of the opinion that at an antecedent era one count only upon each cause of action was allowed."

They then state the principal reason for the necessity of several counts and pleas to be the state of the law on the subject of variances. In accordance with their views, the stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, provided for the amendment of variances between the proof and allegation in matters not material to the merits of the case, and by the mis-statement of which the opposite party cannot have been prejudiced in the conduct of his action or defence, and it also has provided for variances not material to the merits of the case, but which may have prejudiced the opposite party. By this statute also the judges were empowered to make rules altering the mode of pleading, and, in pursuance of such authority, the Regulæ Generales of Hilary Term, 4 Wm. 4, after reciting that by the mode of pleading thereinafter prescribed, the several disputed facts material to the merits of the case would before the trial be brought to the notice of parties more distinctly than before, and by the Act of Wm. 4, the powers of amendment at the trial in cases of variance in particulars not material to the merits of the case were greatly enlarged, declared that "several counts shall not be allowed, unless a distinct subject-matter of complaint is intended to be established in respect of each; nor shall several pleas or avowries or cognizances be allowed unless a distinct ground of answer or defence is intended to be established in respect of each."

These rules have the force of an Act of Parliament, being made under the authority of one, and therefore they deprive the Courts of any discretion as to the allowance of several counts or pleas, which are clearly opposed to them. (Bastard v. Smith, 1 N. & P. 242.)

Thus then a summary review of the history of this branch of our law shews that the modern practice is an approximation to the ancient system of pleading, from which custom and statute law had sanctioned such wide deviations.

That great advantages have accrued from these modern alterations few, I believe, will deny; but in order that adequate benefit may be derived from them, it is absolutely necessary that the powers of amendment now given by the statute of William the Fourth should be exercised with liberality, and it may be found to be advisable to invest the judges with more extensive powers for this purpose, than they at present possess. The pleader is frequently placed in a position of much difficulty by being confined to only one statement of the complaint or defence, and in many instances great injustice will be inflicted on a party to a cause by first tying him down to one statement, and by then taking advantage of his being so tied down.

(b) But as late as the time of Charles the Second it seems to have been the general practice to adopt only one count. See instances in "A concise View of Pleading," by J. Chitty, p. 16 (1834), and Report of Common Law Commissioners.

(c) Boote's Suit at Law, p. 169.

(d) This Act does not extend to any but corporate officers, and a port-reeve appointed at a court-leet was held not to be within it, although he was also returning officer of members of Parliament: Rex v. Richardson, 9 East, 469.

The exercise of the power of amendment should be correlative with the alteration as to several counts and pleas.

"In the present state of the rules of pleading I think," observes Mr. Justice Bosanquet (Cholmondeley v. Payne, 4 Scott, 422), "it behoves the judges to be very liberal in allowing amendments under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42." Where an amendment would be refused at the trial, the party should still be allowed to guard against the variance by setting forth his case, so as to meet the proofs in one form or another, as it was chiefly on the ground of such amendment being allowed, that the rules confining him to one count or plea were promulgated. But in practice it is found that the power of amendment is not commensurate with the restrictions imposed on pleadings by the new rules. (Per Maule, J. Temple v. Keiley, 1 M. & G. 906.)

EXTRAORDINARY DEPRECIATION OF THEATRICAL PROPERTY.—On Thursday, at one o'clock, a sale by auction was proceeded with by Mr. G. Robins of the interest of the late Hon. D. Kinnaird in the property respectively of the Theatres Royal Drury-lane and Covent-garden, by direction of the executors, the deceased having been for many years one of the most active of the Drury-lane Theatre committee. The room, at the Auction Mart, where the sale took place, was well attended by several of the corps dramatique. The first lot put up consisted of an annuity or rent-charge in the Theatre Royal Covent-garden, and which originally cost 500*l.* with a free admission to any part of the theatre except the private boxes, the interest of which had been reduced from 25*l.* a year to 12*l.* 10s. which sum was paid the 16th ult. The auctioneer observed that there was one entertainment that the shareholders would be prevented from having a free admission to, as the proprietors did not consider the representation he alluded to a dramatic entertainment. This was the exhibition of the Anti-Corn-Law League. They would, however, have something more agreeable in the course of the season, which would be more acceptable than the rubbish that body afforded. (Loud laughter.) The auctioneer then stated that the Anti-Corn Law League had engaged to give 3,000 guineas for the next season, and that M. Laurent had taken the theatre, in which he would give a great variety of entertainments, he having obtained the services of about 200 performers of the first eminence in Europe. On the 20th of December there would be other extraordinary entertainments. The offer for the lot commenced at 50 guineas, and was knocked down at 105 guineas. The next lot was a 500*l.* renter's share in Drury-lane Theatre, with a free admission, and transferable annually. The renters originally received 2s. 6d. per night of performance, but which is reduced to 1s. 3d. The share was knocked down for 100 guineas. Mr. Robins observed that he had received 6*l.* and 4*l.* per cent. on a share, but that since they had been rather shy of paying a dividend. (Laughter.) The next three lots consisted of fifteen subscription shares (five in each lot) of 100*l.* each, in the same theatre, entitling the purchaser to attend the annual meetings and partake of any dividend that in a future day will accrue and all the arrears. They went for five guineas each lot, this being the only offer. The last lot comprised five similar shares in the same theatre, and an admission (quite distinct from the shares) for any one person's life. The auctioneer said, that he had often sold an admission for fifty guineas. Twenty guineas were first offered, and twenty-eight guineas taken.

DARTMOOR.—About 5,000 acres of this extensive common have been purchased by a company, who have already fenced and drained part of it, and calculate on letting the whole at 10s. per acre. Hitherto the land has been waste.—Devizes Gazette.

IMPORTANT SALE.—We understand that the Duke of Devonshire has announced his intention of disposing of his extensive estates in the neighbourhood of Ripon, situated at Merton-le-Moor, Rainton, and Baldersby, by private contract, in one purchase, and that the several occupants of the respective farms have received notice of his Grace's intention. It is confidently asserted, that ample recompense will be made to each of the tenants for the improvements they have made on the estate.—Leeds Mercury.

PROSPECTUS OF THE VERULAM SOCIETY.

This Society has been established by the Legal Profession for the purpose of supplying to the members useful Practical Reports and Text-Books at moderate prices.

Any person is admitted a member on payment of an entrance-fee of 10s. 6d.

The amount of subscription is at the option of the member, but it must not be less than 1*l.* 1s. per annum.

The subscription is thus applied:—It is placed to the member's credit as cash received on account in part payment for the publications he may purchase. Every member will be expected to order to that amount in the course of the year; and when his purchases exceed the amount of the subscription paid, the balance due to be transmitted with the order.

It is one of the advantages of the Society, that members may have all or any of the publications at the members' prices, or any one or more series of the Practical Reports.

It should be expressly understood that the members will incur no risks or responsibilities whatever. The difficulties of the Law of Partnership have been entirely avoided by the following arrangement. The books and reports are issued by the Publisher of the LAW TIMES, who undertakes to bring them out on his single responsibility, as his own publications, contracting only to supply them to the members at the Society's prices; and he will not publish any work for the use of the Society unless it be previously ordered by a sufficient number of the members to secure him against loss. It is further agreed that the prices shall be reduced in proportion to the number of orders. By this plan there will be secured to the members a supply of Practical Books and Reports at the lowest prices at which they can possibly be produced, without involving them in any of the risks of partnership.

The publications of the Society commenced with a series of useful

PRACTICAL REPORTS,

Of which Ten Parts have already appeared, comprising—

I. MAGISTRATES' CASES, by A. BITTLESTON and J. C. SYMONS, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, or sewn into Part I., containing all the Cases of Easter and Trinity Terms last.

II. REAL PROPERTY AND CONVEYANCING CASES in all the Courts, by R. G. WELFORD, G. GOLDSMITH, J. MACAULEY, G. T. ALLNUTT, H. BAKER, J. C. SYMONS, T. W. SAUNDERS, H. T. ATKINSON, W. PATERSON, H. B. ASPINALL, and H. MILLS, Esquires, Barristers-at-Law, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, or sewn, forming Part I.

III. CRIMINAL LAW CASES, before all the Judges, in the Central Criminal Court and on Circuit, reported by various Barristers, whose names are appended to their reports as authorities, and edited by EDWARD W. COX, Esq. Barrister at-Law. Nos. 1 and 2.

IV. REGISTRATION APPEALS and ELECTION CASES, by EDWARD W. COX and H. TINDAL ATKINSON, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law. No. 1. (No. 2 will appear immediately after the decisions of this Term.)

V. PRACTICE CASES, by J. C. SYMONS, H. B. ASPINALL, H. MILLS, H. TINDAL ATKINSON, W. PATERSON, and T. W. SAUNDERS, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law. (No. 1 is in the press.)

These Reports are published in numbers of 32 pages each, handsomely printed in large octavo, and stamped for transmission to the members by post, without cost or trouble to them. Their price is 1s. 1d. for each number. They are made up into parts and sewn in a wrapper, price 4s. for each Part. Part I. of Magistrates' Cases, and Part I. of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases, are now ready. Each series is complete in itself. The charge to the public is for the numbers 1s. 7d. and for the Parts 6s. each.

TEXT-BOOKS.

A series of Text-Books is designed, of which the first portion will consist of useful practical Treatises, for ready reference in the office, on the following subjects:—

I. The PRACTICE of the COURTS of COMMON LAW.
II. The PRACTICE of the COURTS of EQUITY.
III. The PRACTICE of the MAGISTRATES' COURTS—1st, QUARTER SESSIONS; 2nd, PETTY SESSIONS.
IV. The PRACTICE of the COURTS of INSOLVENCY AND BANKRUPTCY.
V. The PRACTICE of the COUNTY COURTS and LOCAL COURTS.
VI. The PRACTICE of the CRIMINAL LAW.
VII. The PRACTICE of CONVEYANCING.
VIII. The PACTICE of WILLS and ADMINISTRATIONS.
IX. The PRACTICE of the LAW of VENDORS and PURCHASERS.
X. The PRACTICE of ELECTIONS.
XI. The MISCELLANEOUS PRACTICE of an ATTORNEY'S OFFICE, arranged alphabetically.

It is the design of these treatises to give to the Lawyer full information what he is TO DO in the conduct of his Practice. All the FORMS likely to be required in the business therein described will be appended to or incorporated with each Treatise.

Persons desirous of joining are requested to forward their names, addresses, and order for such of the Reports now publishing as they may wish to take, with the entrance-fee and subscription, to Mr. CROCKFORD, Publisher, at the OFFICES of the VERULAM SOCIETY, 29, Essex-street, Strand, London.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Saturday, Nov. 2.

OLDFIELD v. COBBETT.

Vexatious litigation—Leave to move—Practice.

Cobbett in person applied to the Court for leave to make a motion in this suit; he said he understood that his lordship had prohibited him from doing so without special leave.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I made no such order. What I did was to stay proceedings on any motion until I had communicated with the other side; and I made that order to put a stop to very harassing proceedings which were manifest injustice. You are at liberty to give such notice, and make such motion as you may be advised; but I offer neither counsel nor direction in the course you are to pursue.

FRISBY v. STAFFORD.

Monday, Nov. 4.

Jurisdiction—Practice—Petitions.

Where an interlocutory order by the Vice-Chancellor dismissing a petition is appealed from, and another petition in the same matter has been presented at the Rolls by other parties in the cause, the Lord Chancellor will not hear the appeal until the petition at the Rolls has been heard and decided.

Tinney, with whom was Wakefield, moved to discharge an order of the Vice-Chancellor of England, dismissing a petition in this cause. The cause was heard in 1830, and in 1833 an order was made directing certain inquiries before the Master, and the sale of some canal shares, and the petition had been presented, praying that such order might be varied. The other side had also presented a cross-petition at the Rolls, which was set down for argument. It was now also asked that the Rolls petition and this application might be heard together in this Court.

Koe, Teed, James Parker, and Freeling for various parties.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The Rolls petition may be heard first. The Master of the Rolls may hold that the order made in 1833 was erroneous, or that circumstances have occurred since which induced him to say that that order ought not to be carried out. I will not hear this application until the petition at the Rolls had been decided. I cannot say that this petition shall not be heard by the Master of the Rolls. It would be proper to mention the circumstances to the Master of the Rolls.

ANDREWS v. WALTON.

Prisoner's attendance on reference before the Master.

In this case the plaintiff, who is a prisoner in the Queen's Prison for contempt, had procured an order for a reference to the Master, and that he should be brought up to the Master's office to attend such reference. But the reference was likely to occupy more than one day, and the registrar declined to insert in the order a direction that the plaintiff should be brought up from day to day.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If the reference will occupy several days, the plaintiff is entitled to have an order to be brought up from day to day to attend. Let the order be so drawn up.

The following day Teed, for the plaintiff, stated that there was still some difficulty as to naming the days of attendance in the order, when his lordship directed that after one attendance the Master should indorse on the order the next day appointed for proceeding with the reference.

MALCOLM v. SCOTT.

Lien—Varying instructions received contemporaneously.

This was an appeal from a decision of Vice-Chancellor Wigram, which was argued in this court upwards of twelve months ago. The plaintiff claimed a lien for 10,000*l.* on the ship Forfarshire, and moved for an injunction to restrain its disposal by the defendants, the owners; the Vice-Chancellor, conceiving the lien not proved, had refused the injunction, and the plaintiff then moved in this court by way of appeal.

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It appeared that the house of Scott and Co. of Calcutta were indebted to the plaintiff Malcolm, and that he pressed for payment of a portion of his debt. Scott and Co. had despatched a ship called the Forfarshire to Canton for a cargo of tea, and the question raised at present between the parties is, whether the defendants have given the plaintiff a lien on the ship and cargo as a security for his debt. It was the intention of the defendants that the ship should be sold on her arrival in this country, and they wrote to Adam Scott, their agent in London, giving him instructions to that effect, and directing him to let Malcolm have a portion of the proceeds in discharge of his demand against them, which demand, it seems, arose out of a claim on a former partnership, and was the capital of the plaintiff in that partnership. Three letters were written, two in December 1841, and one in January 1842. In the letters of December the defendants direct Adam Scott to sell the vessel, and pay 10,000*l.* to the plaintiff; but in the letter of January there also occurs this passage:—"You are to understand that the direction to pay Malcolm the 10,000*l.* is only conditional, and depends on the advices you may receive by the next packet." These three letters arrived by the same mail, and, although written at different periods, must be looked at, and treated as, one set of instructions. It is quite clear, therefore, that they gave the plaintiff no lien, for they left the payment to the plaintiff dependent on a future order, to be sent by the defendants to their agent. On the 21st of January the defendants wrote another letter to Adam Scott, which was received in March. In that letter they complain that the plaintiff had sent an agent to Calcutta, in order to harass them by disputing their accounts, and they then use this language:—"It was our earnest desire to give Mr. Malcolm a portion of his demand against us; but since he seems determined to dispute the accuracy of our accounts, we shall not pay him anything. We desired you to make this payment with all needful despatch, but if he intends to give us trouble, we must combat him with his own weapons." The letter concluded by directing the sum of 10,000*l.* to be raised on the Forfarshire, and sent out to Calcutta with all reasonable despatch. This, beyond doubt, puts an end to all claim of lien under the instructions given to the agent of the defendants. But then the principal reliance of the plaintiff's counsel, in the course of the argument, is placed on the correspondence between Malcolm and the house in Calcutta. I have read that correspondence with attention, and I find it amounts to nothing more than a statement of the circumstances under which the defendants, as debtors, proposed, and hoped to relieve themselves from the claims of their creditor. Their obvious meaning was that the payment should be made when the Forfarshire was sold. They carry the matter no further, and create no lien in favour of the plaintiff. This is the case, if those letters are read in connection with the correspondence between the defendants and Adam Scott, who was specially directed to make the payments depend on instructions from Calcutta. As the case, therefore, stands at present, the claim of lien resting solely on the correspondence between the parties, I am of opinion that it does not establish such a claim, and I agree with the Vice-Chancellor that the application for the injunction must be dismissed, with costs.

DALLIMORE v. OGILVIE.

Practice—17th order of 1828—Dismissal of bill for want of prosecution—Discretion of the Court—Negotiation—Costs.

Where a plaintiff has filed a replication he is bound, under the 17th order of the 3rd of April, 1828, as amended in 1841, if he requires a commission for examining witnesses, to obtain and serve an order for such commission within three weeks: and a plaintiff who obtains and serves such an order, though he may afterwards abandon it, is held to be a person requiring a commission within the terms of the order. But where a plaintiff, having obtained and served an order for a commission, takes no further step until after the second term following that in which he obtained the order, the Court will not dismiss the bill for want of prosecution, if the plaintiff abstained from proceeding under a fair expectation that pending negotiations for the settlement of the suit would prove successful.

Quære, whether the plaintiff should not in such case pay the costs.

Walker and Collins moved to discharge an order of the Vice-Chancellor of England, which directed the plaintiff's bill to be dismissed for want of prosecution, with costs.

The plaintiff, George Dallimore, had made a mortgage for 3,000*l.* to his brother, Thomas Dallimore. Previous to the death of Thomas Dallimore, he made a voluntary settlement of this mortgage-money upon his wife and children. Shortly before the death of Thomas, the plaintiff gave him two promissory notes, one for 100*l.* and the other for 500*l.* in part payment of the mortgage debt. The 500*l.* note was not paid when due, and remained unpaid at the death of Thomas, who by his will appointed his wife and Haydon his executors. The widow had married the defendant Ogilvie, and an action had been brought and judgment recovered against George Dallimore upon the 500*l.* He then filed the present bill against Ogilvie and wife. Haydon, the other executor of Thomas Dallimore, and the children of Mrs. Ogilvie by her first marriage to have the 500*l.* recovered on the note applied in part discharge of the mortgage debt. The plaintiff filed a replication on the 4th of Nov. 1843, and within three weeks obtained and served an order for a commission to examine witnesses, but took no further steps to obtain a commission before the notice of motion to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution. It appeared that some negotiations for the settlement of the suit had terminated in October 1843, but were renewed early in the January, at the earnest solicitation of Mrs. Ogilvie and her children. The defendant Ogilvie, who was confined for debt in Wilton gaol, consented to the negotiation, provided it was brought to some conclusion by the 2nd of March, 1844. No terms could be arranged by that time; but the efforts of Mrs. Ogilvie and Wilfred Dallimore, one of her sons, to effect an arrangement, were still continued. On the 18th of May, Ogilvie gave notice of this motion to dismiss the bill. By the terms of the 17th order—"Where the plaintiff files a replication without having been served with a notice of motion to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution, he shall serve the subpœna to rejoin, and in case he requires a commission to examine witnesses, shall obtain and serve an order for such commission within three weeks from the filing of the replication; and such commission shall at the latest be returnable on the first return of the second term then next following; and the plaintiff shall give his rules to produce witnesses and pass publication at the latest in the same term, and shall set down his cause for hearing and duly serve the subpœna to hear judgment returnable in the succeeding term; and if the plaintiff shall make default herein, then, upon application by the defendant upon notice of motion, the plaintiff's bill shall stand dismissed out of court with costs, unless the Court shall make special order to the contrary." And it has been held, that this order applies only to cases in which the plaintiff requires a commission to examine witnesses, and that in other cases the old practice prevails. Some difference had existed in the different branches of the court as to the effect of a plaintiff obtaining and serving an order for a commission, and not proceeding to obtain a commission. The Master of the Rolls had held such a plaintiff to be a person requiring a commission within the terms of the seventeenth order, and that therefore all the rest of the order applied to him, though he might afterwards abandon, or not act upon his order for a commission. (Rayson v. Lees, 1 Keen, 15.) On the other hand, the Vice-Chancellor of England had held that a party might abandon an order for a commission at any time, and that by such abandonment the case would be taken out of the operation of the seventeenth order. The practice had, however, been settled by the decision in Lewis v. Hinton in July last, reported in the Jurist and 3 LAW TIMES, No. 465. That order was made after the petition of appeal in this case had been presented, and it was now asked that the plaintiff might be allowed to go on with the suit as was permitted in Lewis v. Hinton.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Do you mean that if there is a question to be tried I am to retain the cause? I presume there is a question to be tried. Am I to enter into the merits of the cause to decide this motion? If there is anything connected with the irregularity, such as mistake or negotiation, I may retain the cause. I cannot go further into the merits than to learn that there is a fair question to be tried. I take it as admitted that there is such a question to be tried.

Walker.—The negotiations had not terminated at the time of the notice of motion.

Cooper and Simpson, for the respondents.—The defendants contended that the plaintiff had been guilty of negligence, and that his bill was properly dismissed for want of prosecution.

The LORD CHANCELLOR (without hearing a reply). —The plaintiff has precluded himself by obtaining an order for a commission; the circumstance of obtaining such an order, and not proceeding with it, is provided for by the seventeenth order. In the Rolls, the decisions have been uniform from 1828. It appears that a strong and urgent application was made to the plaintiff by the wife of the defendant Ogilvie and her children, and in consequence he recalled the instructions to proceed which he had given to his solicitor. The only difficulty in the way of an arrangement was as to the payment of Mr. Physic's costs. Are not these circumstances such as to justify the Court in refusing to dismiss the bill? Here the plaintiff was acting bonâ fide; he had suspended in consequence of earnest solicitations. The plaintiff may have until the last return day of next Hilary Term for a commission.

Cooper asked for costs.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It is an application to the discretion of the Court. I think the plaintiff ought to pay the costs. He has a decision of the Vice-Chancellor against him.

Walker.—The practice of Lord Cottenham was not to make any order as to costs.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I will consider as to the costs.

Tuesday, Nov. 5.

Re FRANK, a Lunatic.

Costs in lunacy—Apportionment.

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Under an order in this matter, Robert Copeland's debt was directed to be paid out of the moneys received upon the policies effected upon the lunatic's life, which was in effect out of the mortgaged property. That is not inconsistent with the settlement. That property might have been charged with the remainder of the debt, but he had directed it to be paid out of the money advanced by Mr. Day, not describing on what fund it should be ultimately charged. It appears that what remains is inadequate to pay the costs which have been incurred under the order of the 15th of July, 1831. It is now asked that the Court should direct payment of the general costs in the lunacy out of the money advanced by Day, which is out of the general estate of the lunatic, and that the estate should be re-imbursed out of the policies. That is not inconsistent with the order of the 9th of April, 1813. If these funds are not sufficient, the latter costs must be paid by the petitioners out of the policies, before payment over of the money to the person entitled under the settlement. There must be a reference to the Master to inquire how much had been paid out of Mr. Day's money towards Copeland's debt. Reserve the consideration of the costs of the petition.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Tuesday, June 4.

YOUDE v. JONES.

Marriage articles—Deed—Construction of—Description of parcels—General words.

Upon an intended marriage (which was afterwards solemnized) between T. Y. and S. E., certain articles, in 1773, were entered into, by which it was agreed that several estates in fee simple, to which S. E., the intended wife, was entitled, situate in the counties of Montgomery and Denbigh, describing the hereditaments, but not including in the description that an estate called P. M. should be settled as therein mentioned in tail, with an ultimate remainder to T. Y. in fee. There was issue of the marriage, T. W. Y., the eldest son; E. Y., a second son (the plaintiff); and two daughters. No settlement was made.

In 1802, two recoveries were suffered by the husband and wife and T. W. Y. who had come of age. The description of the property in the deed, creating the tenant to the præcipe, was sufficiently extensive to include the estate of P. M.; but the object of the recoveries, as stated in the instrument, was, for barring, docking, and extinguishing all remainders and reversions thereupon expectant and depending of and in the several capital and other messuages, &c. therein mentioned, and for resettling, limiting, conveying, and assuring the same to such uses therein mentioned, and in default thereof upon such provisoes, &c. as the said hereditaments and premises were, and stood limited to immediately before the execution of the then present indenture, by virtue of the said marriage articles, or upon such and so many of them as should be then existing and capable of taking effect.

E. Y., the second son of the marriage, upon the death of his brother, T. W. Y., without issue, and of his mother, S. Y., claimed P. M. as remainder-man in tail.

Held, that, in construing the deed of 1802, the articles of 1773 ought not to be referred to, there not having been any actual limitation of the estates by these articles, and that P. M. was not included in the deed and recovery of 1802.

By articles of agreement, dated 18th October, 1773, and made on the marriage of T. Youde and Sarah Edwards, it was agreed that the capital messuage, or tenement, &c. of her the said S. Edwards, commonly called Clockfan, and all other her real estates in the county of Montgomery, and all that other capital messuage or tenement, with the lands, &c. thereunto belonging, called Rhydomen, with all other the messuages, tenements, &c. of her the said S. Edwards, situate in the hundred of Ruthin, in the county of Denbigh (but not including therein a capital mansion belonging to her called Plas Madoc, with its appurtenances, in the parish of Ruabon, in the said county of Denbigh), should be settled upon the said T. Youde and Sarah, his intended wife, during their lives, and the life of the longest liver of them; and from and after the decease of the survivor of them to the use of the first and other sons of the marriage severally and successively in tail; and for default of such issue, to the uses of the first and other daughters of the marriage; and in default of such issue, to the same uses as to the issue of the said Sarah Edwards by any after-taken husband; and for default of issue generally, of the said S. Edwards, remainder to the use of the said T. Youde in fee.

There was issue of the marriage, T. W. Youde, who attained the age of twenty-one years, another son, Edward Youde, the plaintiff, and two daughters.

No settlement was made in pursuance of the above articles, but in the year 1802 there were two common recoveries suffered by E. Youde and Sarah, his wife, and their eldest son, T. W. Youde. The description of the property in the deed creating the tenant to the præcipe was sufficiently ample to include the estate of Plas Madoc, the object of the recovery, as stated in the instrument, being for "barring, docking, and extinguishing all estates tail, and remainders and reversions thereupon expectant and depending, of and in the several capital and other messuages, tenements, farms, mills, lands, tithes, and hereditaments of them the said T. Youde and Sarah, his wife, and T. W. Youde, or any or either of them, situate, lying, and being in the several parishes of Llangerrig, Llanidloes, Ruabon, Llanynys, Llanfwrog, Ruthin, and Wrexham, or elsewhere, in the several counties of Montgomery and Denbigh, and all those three fourth parts or shares of the tithe of corn, grain, and pulse, arising in the township of Christionydd Kenrick, in the said county of Denbigh; all which hereditaments and premises were theretofore the estate and inheritance of the said Sarah, the wife of the said T. Youde, and for resettling and assuring the same hereditaments and premises to such uses, &c. thereinafter declared;" and it was declared that such recovery, when suffered, should enure to such uses as the said T. Youde, Sarah Youde, and T. W. Youde should appoint, together with other powers of appointment to the several parties therein mentioned, and in default of such several appointments, upon such powers, provisoes, limitations, and agreements, as the said hereditaments were and stood limited to immediately before the execution of the then present indenture by virtue of the articles of settlement made previous to and in contemplation of the marriage of the said T. Youde and Sarah, his wife, or upon such and so many of them as should be then existing, undetermined, and capable of taking effect.

T. Youde died, and by indentures of lease and release of 21st and 22nd Dec. 1809, S. Youde and T. W. Youde (by virtue of the indenture of the 2nd April, 1802, and the common recoveries suffered pursuant thereto, and all other powers enabling them in that behalf) appointed all the said estates (except Plas Madoc, which was reserved to the said S. Youde, and her assigns during her life) to trustees for one thousand years, upon the trusts therein mentioned, and subject thereto to the use of T. W. Youde, his heirs and assigns for ever. T. W. Youde by his will devised all his real estates to trustees upon certain trusts, and died in 1821, without issue. Sarah Youde died in 1838, having by her will devised estate Plas Madoc to her daughters.

Edward Youde, the second son, upon the death of his mother, S. Y., claimed Plas Madoc as remainder-man in tail, and commenced the present suit, when, upon the original hearing of the cause in 1842, a case was made and sent for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench upon the questions following: First, Whether under the indentures of the 1st and 2nd of April, 1802, and the recoveries pursuant thereto, Sarah Youde was entitled to any and what estate in the hereditaments at Plas Madoc, and whether Edward Youde was entitled to any and what estate in the said hereditaments? Secondly, Whether under the indentures of 21st and 22nd Dec. 1809, T. W. Youde took any and what estate in the same hereditaments at Plas Madoc? And accordingly the case being argued before the Queen's Bench in Michaelmas Term, 1843, on the 8th February following Lord Denman delivered the unanimous opinion of the Court to the effect that the case turned exclusively upon the conveyance of 1802, whereby Plas Madoc was imported into the settlement, and because subject to the uses thereby declared, and that the settlement was referred to, not for a description of the property, but for a statement of the uses, and that therefore on the death of T. W. Y. the eldest son without issue, E. Y. had an estate tail, who was consequently entitled to estate Plas Madoc in tail under the deed and recovery of 1802.

The cause was now argued upon further directions.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I am really very sorry that I cannot accede to the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench. By the rules of law you are bound to take the words as you find them, and you are not at liberty, merely for the sake of giving effect to the deed, to interpret those words in a manner which the words themselves will not admit of. [His Honour here alluded to the Bill recently brought into Parliament, giving power to construe a deed according to the meaning of parties, although contrary to their expressions, as an authority against the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench.] That the judges to whom the case was directed have taken the right view of what the parties intended, I readily admit; and I am only sorry that under my present view of the case as it now stands, the real intention of the parties cannot be accomplished without having the legal question first disposed of; because if the state of things were such as to render a further application to a court of law unnecessary, I, for one, should be very glad, but must confess, with sorrow, that the decision at which they arrived appears so clearly to be not right, that I feel I should not be acting justly myself were I to give up my own opinion upon the subject and not have recourse to the further assistance which the constitution of this Court permits me. By the articles of agreement in 1773, strictly speaking, there was really no limitation of the estates whatever—and this agreement forms no limitation at law—because the estate which the husband had, and the estate which the intended wife had in the tenements respectively, remained in them just in the same manner after as before the execution of the articles, although I must admit that in the contemplation of a court of equity the estates were equitably bound by the agreement, and that this Court would have no hesitation in compelling a conveyance by the husband and wife of the estates vested in them to the uses and upon the trusts expressed in the articles of 1773. It would seem that in 1801 there was what is usually denominated a resettlement of the husband's estate, and then this instrument of 1802, the intention of which is quite manifest, was prepared, its object being to include certain estates belonging to the wife. Now I have no doubt that at this time it was not the intention of the parties in any degree to affect the husband's estates, which had been the subject of resettlement by the deed of 1801; but when I observe in this instrument the expression that the husband and the wife and their eldest son did grant, bargain, and sell, all and singular the hereditaments of the three, or any or either of them, it is impossible not to conclude that so far as the deeds operate at law, the estates of the husband were affected by these foolish words, although, I have no doubt, contrary to the intention of the parties themselves. Now it is not the province of a court of law to carry into effect the intention of parties in any other manner than what is consistent with the expressions to be found in the deed executed by the parties, and I only throw out this remark to shew the negligence and want of thought with which the instrument of 1802 was prepared. The deed goes on to describe what it was the parties granted, in such a manner that had not the parishes been mentioned, the words, "or elsewhere, in the several counties of Montgomery and Denbigh," must of necessity have carried all the wife's lands in question. The parties have, in fact, used general terms, which describe both the wife's tenements and the husband's. And it appears to me that there is one nominative case which governs the whole string of limitations, and being once given, it is a complete sentence from beginning to the termination of the uses. Then follow the uses, viz. "as the same hereditaments and premises are and stand limited to immediately before the execution of these presents by virtue of the articles or settlement made previous to and in contemplation of the marriage." But, in point of fact, the "said hereditaments and premises" did not in any sense of the word stand limited by the articles of 1773 immediately before the execution of these presents. It is perfectly clear that, by virtue of the articles of 1773, and the subsequent recovery and settlement of 1801, the estates of the husband were limited in a certain manner, but those of the wife were not subject to any limitation whatever. It seems to be quite clear that one set of uses were intended to be expressed. And it is unnecessary to repeat my former observation that in contemplation of law, and in strictness, no uses were declared of the hereditaments by the articles of 1773, and my opinion is, that it is the duty of a court of law to construe the words as they appear upon the instrument, and if the words are plain and unambiguous, to adopt a plain and unambiguous construction. But, instead of so doing, the Court of Queen's Bench have adopted a mode of construction which would be very consistent for a Court of Equity to put upon an instrument in a case where the simple question arose as to what was the intention of the parties. I am exceedingly sorry that the parties must undergo the additional expense of taking the opinion of another Court of Law, but I do feel so strongly that the Court of Queen's Bench is wrong with respect to the legal construction of the deed itself, although right as regards the intention of the parties, that I am compelled to ask the opinion of another Court of Law. This I leave to the option of the parties.

The case sent to the Court of Exchequer.

NOTE.—In the case of Cockran v. Cockran, reported 4 Law T. p. 49, the Reporter cannot ascertain the date of the will, it not being stated in the brief, but it was certainly before the year 1838.

ROLLS COURT.

Saturday, Nov. 2.

STANLEY v. BOND.

A decree in an injunction suit having been obtained against a defendant, he went abroad, and the plaintiff being unable to obtain payment of the costs, got an order nisi, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, for a distringas on stock standing in the defendant's name; the solicitor of the defendant then paid the costs of the suit, but refused those of the order, &c.: on motion, the defendant was ordered to pay the latter.

This was a suit instituted to restrain the defendant from proceeding at law to obtain payment of certain bills of exchange; and the injunction having been obtained, the costs amounted to nearly 300*l.* The defendant, after the institution of the suit, had gone abroad, and the bill was taken pro confesso against him. The plaintiff being unable to take out personal process against him, and having heard that 6,600*l.* Three and a Half per Cent. Annuities, were standing in his name in the Bank of England, obtained an order nisi under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, to restrain the Bank from transferring the stock. The defendant's solicitor then paid the costs of the suit, which the plaintiff, however, would only receive without prejudice to his right to the costs of the order, which the defendant's solicitor refused to pay. The defendant then gave notice that he would move for an injunction to prevent the plaintiff from proceeding to make the order absolute, and give the payment of the costs as a ground. The plaintiff then gave notice of a motion, which he afterwards abandoned, and declared his intention of moving to make the order absolute. The motion now came on to be heard.

Kindersley and Wright, for the plaintiff.

Toller, for the defendant.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The defendant was out of the jurisdiction, and no personal process could be put in force against him; it was not unreasonable, therefore, to attach the stock in the bank, even without giving notice to the defendant's solicitor; the law of courtesy was not so very stringent. As to the objection that the distringas was put on all the stock, when a small portion would have answered, it seems to be answered by the statement that the bank in attaching any part will restrain all from being transferred. That is very likely to be so. The defendant must pay the costs of the order and of this motion.

REED v. O'BRIEN.

An answer to a bill being sent from abroad by a messenger, who left it with the porter at the office of the Records and Writs, and an application to take the bill pro confesso for want of an answer being made, the Court refused to make any order, but by consent the answer was afterwards received upon terms.

In this cause an answer was sent from abroad by the post, and arrived here directed to the Office of the Records and Writs. A motion was made upon the 5th of July last (3 Law T. 319) to take the bill pro confesso for want of an answer, and a counter-motion to have the answer so sent filed, or that a new commission should issue. A new commission was accordingly granted, and the answer taken under it was sent to this country by a messenger, who left it on the 9th of September last in charge of the porter at the office of the Clerk of Records and Writs, the office not being then open. A motion was now made to take the bill pro confesso against the defendant for want of an answer.

Turner for the motion.

Kindersley, contrà.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I shall make no order if the plaintiff is so very absurd as to refuse the answer because of this accident. Let it stand over for the parties to consider. Accordingly,

Tuesday, Nov. 5.—The plaintiff having consented to take the answer upon terms, his Lordship ordered it to be so taken, and gave the plaintiff the costs of the defendant's motion for the commission in July, but no more.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Tuesday, Nov. 5.

GIBSON v. STEWARD.

Practice—Benefit of demurrer saved until the hearing—Unnecessary defendant.

A prayer for general relief held to include a prayer for an account.

A director and the secretary of a public company (either of whom sufficiently represented the company) were joined as defendants in a suit; discovery being sought against both generally, a demurrer was put in to the bill, and the Court, under the circumstances, reserved the benefit of the demurrer until the hearing.

This was a suit for the specific performance of an agreement, dated the 31st of January, 1839, entered into with the plaintiff by four of the originators and directors of the North of England Mining Company, by which it was agreed that the plaintiff should be employed as coal-fitter to the company for the term of fourteen years. The plaintiff continued to be employed in that capacity until the 1st of October, 1841, when he was discharged. On the 1st of January, 1842, the plaintiff commenced an action against the company for the breach of covenant, and shortly afterwards, Harrod, who was the secretary and represented the company, filed a bill against Gibson (the plaintiff) and others, praying the delivery up of the agreement, and for an account of all the plaintiff's transactions in his capacity of coal-fitter to the company. The present bill was filed against Steward as one of the directors of the company, and in whose name the action had been brought, and against Harrod, who was the secretary of the company, and as such made capable by the company's Act of Parliament of representing the company in actions and suits, and who was the plaintiff in the suit commenced against the present plaintiff. To this bill separate demurrers were filed by the two defendants, and the grounds upon which they were supported were the nature of the agreement, the nature of the action, the nature of the previous suit, and the joinder of the two defendants.

Russell and Bates, for the demurrers.

Wigram and Anderson, for the bill, were not heard.

The cases of Kimberley v. Jennings (6 Sim. 340); Lowndes v. Davies (6 Sim. 468); and Palk v. Lord Clinton (12 Ves. 48) were cited.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This is a bill praying general relief in respect of transactions which were connected with the employment of the plaintiff as a coal fitter by a company represented by the defendants. Supposing the agreement under which that employment was undertaken to be of legal or equitable validity, there seems fair ground for contending that the parties are entitled to an account. Supposing the equitable validity to exist, independent of any question of specific performance, I think the prayer for general relief will include a prayer for an account, if an account should appear to be necessary. There is, however, that upon this bill from which it appears that these transactions are already the subject of a suit in this court. Every one conversant with the practice of this court knows that a cross bill is capable of being maintained upon much less grounds than another bill. An action has also been brought by the present plaintiff in respect of matters covered by that bill. Independently, then, of another point, to which I shall allude immediately, it would be far too much to allow the demurrer in the present stage. Another question raised, however, is upon the joinder of the present defendants. There being a right to sue either a director or the secretary of this company, they are both brought here. There is no statement upon this contained in the bill, even as to the expediency for the purpose of discovery; but considering the right the plaintiff had to make either of these persons a defendant, and that without any such specific statement as I before alluded to, discovery is sought against both the defendants, one of these defendants being the plaintiff in the equity suit, and the other a party in the action; considering, too, that this Court has control over the costs, in case the expense should be unnecessarily increased, I think it would be too much to interfere in the present stage of the cause. I am disposed, therefore, to make an order to save the benefit of the demurrers until the hearing of the cause, the plaintiff, in the meantime, proceeding as he may be advised in the suit, and amending or not amending his bill.

ROCKE v. COOKE.

Statute of Limitations—Lunacy—Practice.

A B in 1823, brought an action for a simple contract debt against a person who was shortly afterwards found a lunatic. A bill being filed by the committee to restrain the prosecution of the action, an injunction for that purpose was, without the consent of A B, issued, he being allowed to prove under the lunacy before the Master. His claim, however, was never allowed, and in 1843 the lunatic died, and A B then filed a bill against the executors of the lunatic, to which a demurrer was put in, on the ground of the length of time which had elapsed since the debt was contracted. The Court overruled the demurrer, without prejudice to any question that might be made at the hearing, reserving the costs.

This was a bill for an account filed by a simple contract creditor of the late Sir Gregory Page Turner. The plaintiff's demand originated in some bills to a large amount given by Sir G. P. Turner in the years 1821 and 1822. The plaintiff, during the life of Sir G. P. Turner, had brought an action against him for the amount of his debt, but Sir G. P. Turner having subsequently been found, by a commission de lunatico inquirendo, to have been a lunatic since the 1st of July, 1823, a bill was, on the 22nd of June, 1825, filed by his committee in his name against the present plaintiff, to have the above-mentioned bills delivered up, and the action brought upon them restrained. In that suit an order was, with the consent of the present plaintiff, made for restraining the continuance of the action, he being allowed to go in before the Master and establish his claim under the lunacy. The claim, however, was never allowed, and the Master made his report as to the debts on the 9th of August 1828. Sir G. P. Turner remained a lunatic until his death, which happened on the 6th of March 1843. He had, however, made a will in 1840, which contained a direction for the payment of his just debts, and this will was duly proved. On the 5th of February 1841, the present bill was filed, and a demurrer was put in to it on the ground of the claim being barred by lapse of time.

Wigram and Freeling, for the demurrer, cited Pulteney v. Warren (6 Ves. 73); Fyson v. Pole (3 Y. & C. Exch. Ca. 266), and Ex parte M'Dougal (12 Ves. 384).

Russell and Glasse, for the bill, were not heard.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—It does not appear to me that I ought, for the present purpose, to infer that, so far as the lunacy is concerned, the plaintiff is precluded from establishing his claim from the length of time which has elapsed. I think, notwithstanding the lapse of time, I ought, upon this record, to infer that if Sir G. P. Turner were alive, and the lunacy had continued, and supposing that the debt might not then have been already established, it was competent for the plaintiff to go before the Master and establish his claim. Assuming that to be so, there was at the time of the death of Sir G. P. Turner a demand for which there was a remedy open. I must then see, before I allow this demurrer, that this remedy is still open. I am not bound to know the particular rules and practice in lunacy, and I am not sure that the course of practice is so fixed as to preclude the person intrusted by the Crown with the administration in lunacy from departing from it. I have no means of ascertaining whether the plaintiff has now the opportunity of proceeding in the lunacy to establish his claim. If he has not, the remedy which existed at the death of Sir G. P. Turner does not now exist, and if he cannot have the remedy for which the action was stayed, is he now to be precluded, the alleged debtor being dead, from suing his executors? I think it would be dangerous and imprudent on the present record, and in this case to say so, by allowing the demurrer. I, therefore, shall allow this cause to go on, and I propose to overrule the demurrer, without prejudice to any question that may be made at the hearing of the cause, reserving the costs.

SAMMONDS v. GREEN.

Practice—24th Order of 26th August, 1841.

An affidavit of a person proving that on a certain day he sent a parcel to A B in the country, containing a copy of the bill, accompanied by an affidavit by N B that he received on the following day such a parcel, and that he served the copy he received, was held not sufficient proof of the service.

Speed, in this case, applied, pursuant to the 24th Order of the 26th August, 1841, for leave to enter in the Six Clerks' Office a memorandum of the service of a copy of the bill upon one of the defendants. To support his application he read two affidavits, the first by a person who deposed to his having, on a certain day, inclosed a true copy of the bill in a parcel, and sent it by the Great Western Railway to another person residing in the country; the second by the person to whom the parcel was directed, deposing that he had received such a parcel on the following day, and that he had served the copy inclosed in it upon the defendant.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR considered that the evidence was not sufficient, it not being proved that no other parcel had been sent by the first deponent.

BRISTOWE v. WOOD.

Vendor and purchaser—Specific performance—Costs. Where a vendor had entered into a covenant for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, not to erect certain buildings upon a piece of land contracted to be sold, and neither in the agreement for sale of the land nor the abstract of title was any notice taken of the covenant, the Court held that the purchaser was not bound to complete his contract.

Unnecessary evidence having been gone into on both sides, and some untenable exceptions having been taken to a title in a suit for specific performance of a contract for the purchase of land, the Court, though it gave judgment for the defendant, would not allow him his costs of the evidence or the costs occasioned by the untenable exceptions.

This was a suit instituted for the purpose of compelling a specific performance of an agreement entered into by the defendant for the purchase of some land from the plaintiff, part of a piece of land called the New Hey, situated near Liverpool. A reference to the Master as to the title having been made, he, on the 1st of July 1844, reported that a good title could be made, and that such title was shewn before the filing of the bill. To this report the defendant filed exceptions, which now came on for argument. The principal objection to the title was the following:— By a memorandum indorsed on an indenture of the 16th of May, 1832 (which was the deed of conveyance to the plaintiff), it appeared that by indentures of the 16th and 17th of November, 1833, a part of the piece of land called the New Hey was conveyed by the plaintiff to one Henry Jenkins in fee, and that in this conveyance were contained mutual covenants on the part of the plaintiff and Jenkins, for themselves, their heirs, executors, and administrators, not to erect certain buildings on their respective portions of the piece of land called the New Hey. The abstract having been prepared before this memorandum was made, no notice was taken of it therein. It was now argued by the defendant that this objection to the title was such that he could not be compelled to complete the purchase.

Russell and Rudall, for the exception.

Wigram and Smythe, for the plaintiff, relied principally upon Keppell v. Bailey (2 Myl. & Keen. 517).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR considered this title to be too doubtful to force upon the purchaser. He thought that if the purchaser had taken this title from the plaintiff, he would have taken it under circumstances of great risk and danger. It was too weighty and too serious a question, whether he would be liable under the covenant, taking, as he would do, with notice of it, for the Court to be justified in forcing the title upon him. He would, therefore, neither overrule nor allow the exception, but would make a declaration, that the title was too doubtful to force upon the purchaser.

The question of costs was then argued, and it appeared that the second and third exceptions were untenable, and that a great quantity of evidence had been entered into with regard to them, and that much unnecessary evidence on the whole case had been gone into on both sides.

Wigram and Smythe, for the plaintiff.

Russell and Rudall, for the defendant, cited Williams v. Edwards (2 Sim.) and Vancouver v. Bliss (11 Ves. 458.)

Wigram, in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In considering this question of costs, the plaintiff is entitled not to have it forgotten that the Master has thought his title good; and, on the other hand, the defendant is entitled not to have it forgotten that the main objection or difficulty must be taken, for every purpose of litigation, to have been known to the plaintiff, and that it was not disclosed in the agreement or the abstract, though I am perfectly satisfied that no injustice was intended by the plaintiff. On the whole, however, the plaintiff has failed; and, therefore, subject to what I am about to say, the plaintiff must pay the costs. Looking at the evidence in the cause and the considerable quantity of superfluous evidence—I think that justice will be done by my directing that, as to the costs of the evidence up to the hearing, there shall be none on either side. The costs in the Master's office must abide the usual result, except as to the second and third exceptions. So far, then, as the costs in the Master's office have been increased by the discussion of the second and third exceptions, let there be no costs on either side. Dismiss the bill, with costs, except as I have mentioned.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

WOODS v. WOODS.

Production of counsel's opinion—Privilege.

The opinion given by counsel, upon a case submitted for the purposes of a suit, is privileged from the usual order for the production of papers admitted to be in a defendant's possession by his answer.

This was a motion for the production of papers admitted by the defendant in the suit to be in his possession. Amongst the papers was a case submitted to counsel, and the opinion thereon; the defendant was willing to produce the case, but insisted that he was entitled by privilege to withhold the opinion.

His HONOUR said, that primâ facie the plaintiff would be entitled to its production, but if it could be considered as a privileged document, the defendant must be allowed to retain it in his possession. In the case of Lord Walsingham v. Goodriche (3 Hare, 122) he had stated, and he saw no reason now to change his opinion, that, as long as the law rendered it necessary not to act without professional advice, it could not be otherwise than that the privilege usually allowed to professional communications ought to be respected and maintained. In the present case, the opinion was taken, doubtless, for the purpose of aiding the plaintiffs in instituting proceedings in this court, and was given upon a consideration of those differences which have since become the subject of litigation. There can be no doubt that an opinion, taken at that time and with that view, would be privileged; and his opinion was, that it retained its privilege pendente lite. Motion refused.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Saturday, Nov. 2.

FLIGHT v. NICHOLSON, Clerk.

Application to set aside proceedings, and plead a plea of forgery.

Platt, Q. C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the proceedings should not be set aside in this action, and defendant allowed to plead a plea of forgery. The defendant had accepted two bills, one on the 14th November, 1843, for 250*l.* and another in October, for 60*l.* In March 1844, the defendant received a letter from an attorney called Boucher, demanding payment for a bill, but mentioning neither the name of the party nor the date. A writ and declaration were served. In May last an execution was put in; the fieri facias was, however, subsequently withdrawn, and a writ de bonis ecclesiasticis issued. The defendant then discovered that the bill he had drawn in November was in the hands of a person named Denge, but that the bill on which the action was brought was dated October 1813, drawn for 250*l.*, and that it consequently was a forgery; the defendant never having in that month accepted any such bill.

By the COURT.—The application is late; the letter of the attorney appears to have been in March, and the declaration also would have shewn the date.

Platt.—The defendant never saw the declaration.

By the COURT.—But his attorney must have known it.

Platt.—He had no attorney. Rule to shew cause.

REG. v. CLEASBY.

Appointment of collector of money for support of bastard children—Practice on moving for rules to bring up judgments.

Pashley moved for rule to set aside verdict, or for a new trial.

The defendant had been indicted for disobeying an order of magistrates for the payment of the maintenance of a bastard child, of which he was the putative father. This order had been made by the mere entry of a minute by the guardians at one of their board meetings in 1843, that one Anthony Carter should be appointed to collect this and other like moneys, for the support of bastard children; but there was no power to indict a person for disobeying such order, and not paying such sum, inasmuch as the collector had not been appointed by a deed under seal. (Arnold v. The Mayor of Poole, 2 Dowl. N.S. 574; 12 Law Jour. N.S. 97.)

DENMAN, C. J.—You had better not enter into these matters at present. When the judgment is brought up, it will be early enough to do so. We do not usually enter into particulars on moving for a rule. Rule to shew cause.

WOOD v. DRAKE.

Sale of goods on eve of execution.

Humfrey moved to set aside the verdict obtained in this action on the ground of misdirection by the learned judge (Coltman, J.) who tried the cause. In October 1843, one Phillips had execution issued against him by one Norton for a debt of 200*l*, when the plaintiff lent Phillips 123*l.* to enable him to pay the debt. This loan Phillips was unable to pay, but assigned over a public-house and furniture in it, which formed the matter of the action on a subsequent execution. The learned judge directed the jury that a preference thus given to one creditor, if in the contemplation of a pending execution, was fraudulent, on which ground of misdirection the motion was made. Rule to shew cause.

REG. v. ARCHDEACON OF COVENTRY.

Mandamus to compel the admission of churchwardens.

Mellor applied for a peremptory mandamus to compel the Archdeacon of Coventry to swear in and admit to their offices Messrs. Sutton and Bagshawe, who had been respectively and duly elected in vestry assembled, churchwardens for the township of Thurlaston, being a part of the parish of Dunchurch, in the county of Warwick, which had always had churchwardens, who acted for that township, which comprised one-third of the entire parish, and in which it had always been customary to lay separate rates.

It was submitted that the duty of the archdeacon being purely ministerial, and he was bound to comply with the act of the vestry.

DENMAN, C. J.—Has he assigned a reason?

Mellor.—None.

DENMAN, C. J.—Then take the rule for the mandamus, absolute in the first instance, but not peremptory, so that a return may be made to it. Rule absolute.

Monday, Nov. 4.

New Trials.

RICHARDS v. SIMONDS.

This was an action of trespass for taking plaintiff's cow. Pleas—1st, not guilty; 2nd, that the cow was not the cow of the plaintiff. The case was tried at the last assizes for Cornwall, and a verdict found for the defendant.

Butt now moved, pursuant to leave given at the trial, for a rule to shew cause why this verdict should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendant, on the ground that the defence set up at the trial was not admissible under the pleadings. Rule nisi.

REG. on the Prosecution of OSBORN MYLNE v. THE CORPORATION OF MANCHESTER.

In this case mandamus had issued commanding the defendants to award compensation to Mr. Mylne, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 111, for the loss of the office of clerk to the justices of petty sessions for the borough of Manchester, from which office he had been removed some time since, on the borough obtaining a charter under the Municipal Corporations Act. The proceedings under the mandamus went down for trial at the last Lancaster Assize, when a verdict was found for the Crown.

Kelly, Q. C. now moved for a rule to shew cause why this verdict should not be set aside and a verdict entered for the defendants, on two grounds; 1st, that Mr. Mylne was not such an officer as was contemplated by the Act which awarded the compensation (5 & 6 Vict. c. 111); 2nd, that, even if he was such an officer, he had not sustained any loss. Rule nisi.

BARNETT v. DUNCAN.

This was an action brought against the defendant for an injury to plaintiff's reversion in a house in Buckingham-street by darkening the windows.

Platt, Q. C. now moved for a rule for a nonsuit, on the ground that, as it was shewn at the trial that there was an outstanding term in the executors or administrators of one Donalson, deceased, which did not expire until after action brought, the immediate reversion was not in the plaintiff, and therefore he was not entitled to maintain his action. Case cited: Green v. Cole (3 Williams' Saunders, 251, n. 7). Rule nisi.

NEW TRIAL PAPER.

CLIFTON v. HOOPER.

Where a sheriff neglects to arrest a party against whom he has a writ of final process, when he has it in his power so to do, an action lies against him. SEMBLE, that the party bringing the action is only entitled to nominal damages, unless the jury find that he has sustained loss by the non-arrest.

This was an action against the sheriff of Middlesex for not arresting a party against whom the plaintiff in the present action had obtained final judgment, and issued execution. At the trial the jury found a special verdict, that the sheriff might have arrested the party; but that the plaintiff had not sustained any damage by reason of the non-arrest.

Kennedy now shewed cause against a rule obtained by Warren, which was to enter a verdict for the plaintiff either with nominal damages or for the whole debt, and contended that, as the jury had found that the plaintiff had not sustained any damage, the verdict must be for the defendant; he further contended, that the jury had only found that the sheriff might have arrested the party, but had not found that he ought to have arrested him; it might be, therefore, that he was a privileged person, who might have immediately regained his liberty by a judge's order, and so the plaintiff would not have gained any thing by the arrest; that it was not like a case of an escape after an arrest on final process, as in that case the debt would be discharged, which was not the case here.

Cases cited: Williams v. Mostyn (4 M. & W. 145); Jones v. Pope (1 Saun. 38, n. 2); Brown v. Jarvis (1 M. & W. 709); Barker v. Green (2 Bing. 317); Plank v. Anderson (5 Term Re. 37, 2 Leon. 87); Lewis v. Moreland (2 B. & Ad. 66).

Warren, in support of his rule.—The jury have found that the sheriff could have arrested; therefore, as the plaintiff has lost a right, there must be damage, and he is at least entitled to nominal damages. This he contended on the broad principle laid down in Marzetti v. Williams (1 B. & Ad. 415), the words of Buller, J. (5 Term R. 40), and other cases there cited. But he further contended that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the whole debt.

By the COURT.—We are of opinion that the rule must be made absolute to enter the verdict for the plaintiff. Williams v. Mostyn is an authority in point for the plaintiff as to that part of the case; then the question arises as to the amount of damages, and in this we can only be guided by the finding of the jury; they have found that there is no loss, and so, therefore, it must stand.

Rule absolute to enter a verdict for the plaintiff with nominal damages.

Warren then said, that as the effect of the above entry would be to deprive the plaintiff of his costs, he hoped the Court would certify nunc pro tunc for costs.

By the COURT.—We have no power to do that.

Tuesday, Nov. 5.

DOE dem. BLAYNEY v. SAVAGE and ANOTHER.

Title—Fraud—Forgery.

Talfourd, Serjt. (with whom was Gray), moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, or for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against the evidence. The title under which the defendants held the property in question, which consisted of a farm of 870 acres, with house, &c. near Pershore, had passed under a number of assignments, and a deed fifty years old was impeached at the trial of the cause, on the ground of forgery. The lessor of the plaintiff claimed as the heir-at-law of the trustee of sale under the will of one Mary Phillips, made in 1791; and the root of the defendant's title was the deed sought to be impeached. It was left to the jury whether this deed was forged, and also whether it had been obtained by fraud. The jury found that there was no forgery, but that the deed was obtained by fraud. It was contended that the judge was not justified in putting the fraud to the jury, and also, that though some suspicious circumstances attended the defendant's title, here was no sufficient evidence of fraud. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE MAYOR AND CORPORATION OF DOVER.

Practice—Amendment of defective rules.

M. D. Hill (with whom was A. J. Stephens) applied for leave to amend a rule for a writ of certiorari to bring up certain orders made by the borough council of Dover for the payment of expenses of watching, lighting, &c. The rule was to call for the payments instead of the orders whereby the payments were made. Notice had been given not to appear to this defective order.

Kelly, Q.C. (with whom was Crompton), opposed the amendment on the ground that, in the first place, the pretext for the rule was frivolous, inasmuch as it purported to be that one of the three councillors by whom the orders were signed had died before the payments were made. In the next place, the writ would bring up above 200 orders since 1839; and, in the third place, though the rule was obtained on the 10th of June, the notice of amendment was served only on the 29th October last.

Hill, in reply.—The rule as restricted by the learned judge who granted it would only bring up the orders payable under one bond from June 1, 1843, to June 4, 1844. We apply simply to amend a technical error.

DENMAN, C. J.—We understand that the rule was sent to the counsel when drawn up, to see whether it was what he wished. We should be sorry to tie up the hands of the Court in every case, but in this instance we cannot interfere. The entire fault is with the party who neglected to see that the rule was rightly drawn up. It cannot be permitted that the practice should obtain of amending rules when they do not happen to suit the purpose of the parties who obtain them. The proper course in such case is to give notice that they will move to discharge the rule with costs, and then to bring forward a new motion for another rule. We ought by no means to encourage these applications for amending rules which are defective, owing to the neglect of the parties themselves. We cannot sanction so great a waste of the time of the Court.

Rule discharged with costs.

BURGESS v. BLACKWALL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Chilton, Q.C. moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff on the first count.

This cause was tried before Rolfe, B. on the ground that the contract on which the plaintiff declared in the count for work and labour as a secretary to the defendants, was a mere minute of proceedings, and was not to be completed within a year, being therefore required to be in writing (Snelling v. Lord Huntingfield, 1 C. M. & Ros. 20); and by the Act of the company no contract in writing was valid unless signed by three directors. On this ground the verdict was sought to be set aside. Rule nisi.

DE PREES v. LITTLEWOOD.

Order for goods to be made to be in writing.

Jervis, Q. C. moved to set aside the verdict.

This was an action of assumpsit, to recover, on the common count for goods sold, the value of plated glass made by agreement, and to be paid for with bills at three months, on delivery. The ground for setting aside the verdict against the defendant was, that the plaintiff should have declared specially on the agreement, and that the goods not being ready made, the agreement should have been in writing. (Atkinson v Bell, 8 B. & Cr. 277.) Rule to shew cause.

HOPKINS v. WALLER.

Assault—Parish officer.

Whateley, Q C. moved to enter a verdict for the defendant in this action.

The defendant was a parish officer of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, and had been indicted for an assault on the plaintiff. A vestry had been held on the subject of a church-rate, and a scrutiny had been taken. The defendant was acting in his functions as parish officer. Rule nisi.

WEBSTER v. WILSON.

Right of the mayor to hire a room for taking the votes of the burgesses at an election, and to exclude the public.

Knowles, Q. C. moved to set aside the verdict in this action, on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict, though really for the plaintiff, was ordered to be entered for the defendant by the Lord Chief Baron, who tried the cause. The defendant was the Mayor of Kendal, who, at the annual election in 1843 of town councillors, had a partner who was a candidate. There being a contest, the defendant hired a small room for a polling-booth, on which defendant stuck up a notice making it private, and a sort of close borough. The plaintiff, who was a burgess, accompanied a voter, who tendered his vote, into the middle of this room. The defendant, who was presiding there as mayor, ordered the plaintiff to quit the room, which he refused to do, whereupon the defendant left his chair of office, and proceeded, vi et armis, to put his own edict into execution. The learned judge told the jury that the mayor had a right to hire the room and make it private, and that if they thought his arrangement reasonable as to the size of the room, for the conduct of the business of the day, to find a verdict in his favour. The jury found that the arrangements were not proper, and that the plaintiff had a right to be in the room. The Lord Chief Baron directed the verdict to be entered for the defendant. Knowles contended that, under 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, sec. 4, the mayor had no right to make it a close court, the burgesses having a right openly to assemble. By the 33rd section the same direction is given where the borough is divided into wards; and by the 34th the right is given to the burgesses to question the votes given, and, therefore, the mayor could have no right to exclude them. The mayor could have no greater authority than a justice of the peace, who would be liable in trespass for such an act. (Daubney v. Cooper, 10 B. & Cr. 237.) All persons had a right to enter the room, remaining quietly there, without taking a part in the proceedings. (Collier v. Hicks, 2 B. & Adol. 663; Spilbury v. Micklethwaite, 1 Taunt.) Rule nisi.

PORTMAN v. WRIGHT.

Forged bills of exchange.

Martin, Q. C. moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff on the second plea to the second count in this action, which was brought to recover the amount of six bills. The jury found for the defendant on the other issues, on the ground that five of the bills were forgeries. The motion was first to set aside the verdict on the ground of the improper reception in evidence of an acknowledgment of notice of dishonour signed by one Sarah Wright, who was proved to be dead. (Doe dem. Paleshall v. Turford (3 B. & Adol. 890).

Martin also moved as to the sixth bill, to set the verdict aside on the ground that the name of Joseph Wright had been put to the bill, although he was not at Liverpool at the time it purported to be drawn; and there were affidavits to shew that the name of Joseph Wright had been fraudulently substituted for that of William Wright, over the door of an inn, and that a person called Turner signed the bills for Portman the plaintiff.

Rule nisi on both motions.

REG. v. BESSÉ.

Habeas corpus—Convention Act with France for the arrest of fugitive criminals—Form of warrant.

Chambers moved that the return to the habeas corpus be read, and the prisoner discharged, on the ground that the warrant whereby he was in custody was informal and defective. The warrant was read. It was issued in virtue of the recent convention between France and England for the arrest of criminal fugitives in either country from the other. It declared that by the said warrant B. was committed to custody till "he shall be discharged by due course of law," and described the prisoner as arrested for a crime committed in France, but did not say that he was a native of that country.

E. James shewed cause against the rule, and proposed to read affidavits to shew that Bessé was a subject of France, and therefore disentitled to the writ of habeas corpus.

Chambers objected to any affidavit being used; the proper course was, to make a return to the writ.

E. James.—How could it be shewn that a person was an alien enemy but by an affidavit to that effect? It is therefore the right course.

DENMAN, C. J.—But is not the warrant itself defective? It does not mention the requisition by which the committal took place. The Act requires the party to be arrested and kept in custody "until delivered, pursuant to such requisition as aforesaid, from the foreign country." Here the warrant says, "till discharged by due course of law," but we are bound by the requisition which is not mentioned.

James submitted that the creditors could detain the party in custody until the requisition should come from the foreign country. Here, in fact, there had been the requisition from the foreign country; on that there had been a warrant from the Secretary of State, which was necessary to set the magistrate in motion. But the writ of habeas corpus could only lie according to 31 Charles 2, which is confined to the king's subjects charged with crimes, and cannot be held to apply to this case, which is the crime of fraudulent bankruptcy committed in France, and one unknown to the law of this country. Where a person was committed for treason done in Scotland, he was held not to be within the Habeas Corpus Act, because he could not be tried here for that crime committed in Scotland (Rex v. M'Intosh, 1 Strange, 312) The writ is not under the 36 Geo. 3, c. 100, for it merely affects civil suits.

By the COURT.—Is the writ not issued at common law?

James—If the case in Strange decides that it cannot issue under the statute, it could not at common law. There has been no case at common law since the statute.

DENMAN, C J—Then are our gaolers to be gaolers for the King of the French, without reference to the Convention Act?

James.—I do not hold so broadly as that. The writ is rightly drawn in directing the prisoner to be held in custody till discharged by due course of law. (Goff's case 3 M. & Sel. 203) This means till delivered up to justice.

DENMAN, C J.—In fact, that our gaolers are to keep the prisoner for the gaolers of France?

WIGHTMAN, J.—What was the case cited by Mr. Chambers to me at chambers?

James. Marsh's case (2 Wm. Bl. 805). It decides that a prisoner committed by the authority of an Act of Parliament, concluding, "till he shall be discharged by due course of law, is ill." It should be till he conform to the requisites of the statute.

WIGHTMAN, J.—What do you say to that judgment?

James contended next, that if the present commitment was deemed informal, the court would grant his application to recommit the prisoner upon the facts alleged in the depositions, in which a case was proved within the provisions of the Act of Convention.

COLERIDGE, J.—You now put the warrant out of the question, and assume that, proprio vigore, we have power to commit.

James.—I submit that the Court has power to commit de novo upon its own warrant.

DENMAN, C. J.—We much regret that this warrant should have been so defectively drawn up, and that this, being the first case under a statute of so much importance to all nations, should have this termination; but it is quite clear that we have no power to retain the prisoner. The warrant cannot be maintained. We are called upon to act upon a crime unknown to our law, and a crime only in another country. We cannot do this. Then we are asked to remand the prisoner as a person accused of a crime. But we know nothing of this crime, except from the warrant, and we find it defective in most important respects. We have no power, but under this statute, and if its provisions are not complied with, we have no power at all. If we had the power we are asked to use, there would have been no need for the regulation or the Convention Act. The prisoner is discharged. Let it be understood that the writ of habeas corpus was issued at common law; a right coeval with the law itself, and so declared in the Bill of Rights. The statutes merely facilitate the means of effecting it.

Prisoner discharged.

DOE dem JOHN LEQUEUX v. HARRISON.
Feigned issue—Non admittance of heir as copyholder.
Gurney moved to enter a nonsuit in this action, which was an issue directed to inform the conscience of the Court touching the admission of the lessor of the plaintiff to certain copyhold property, to which it was objected that he was not the heir, there having been a devise of the property in question to the "London Annuity Society," in which the testator's words were, "I give for ever the whole of my property to the London Annuity Society of which I was formerly a member." It was agreed that an action of ejectment should be brought against the lord of the manor, and that it and the non admittance of Lequeux should be waived. The non admittance of the society however had been objected and it was submitted that the waiver must be taken to apply to both.
Rule nisi.

JOHNSTON v. HILL.
Second particulars of demand.
E. James moved to set aside nonsuit, and enter a verdict for 8*l.* for the plaintiff.
This was an action tried at Guildhall for goods sold and delivered, and the question was, whether the proof was consistent with the demand. The sum of 49*l.* had been demanded according to the particulars of demand, and subsequent particulars had been afterwards delivered, which was not an abandonment of the former particulars though it had been so held, but left a balance of 8*l.* due to the plaintiff upon which ground the motion was made.
Rule nisi.

NEW TRIALS.
ATTWOOD v. JOLIFFE and ANOTHER.
This was an action brought against the defendants who are magistrates, for the false imprisonment of the plaintiff. At the trial before Mr. Justice Wightman, at the last assizes for Somerset, the conviction-order, on which the warrant of commitment had been made, was held to be bad, and a verdict taken by consent, for the plaintiff damages 10*l.* with leave to the defendants to move to set aside that verdict: there were also objections to the commitment, which were not gone into at the trial.
Crowder, Q.C. now moved accordingly and contended that the conviction was good, but even if it was not, it was supported by a good commitment which was sufficient to protect the magistrates.

REG. v. THE LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER RAILWAY COMPANY.
This was an indictment preferred against the Liverpool and Manchester Railway Company for a nuisance for erecting four pillars on the public highway. A verdict was found for the Crown.
Wortley, Q.C. now moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a new trial had, or the judgment of abatement confined to one issue, on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against evidence.
Case cited: R. v. Sharp (1 Carrow & Oliver, 33).
The Court directed that it be turned into a special case.

DE MEDINA v. GROVE, WEYMOUTH, and RIGGIN.
This was an action brought against the defendants for issuing execution against the plaintiff, and arresting him on a certain judgment for a larger sum than it was alleged was due on it at the time the defendant was arrested, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff against the defendants Grove and Weymouth,—damages 250*l.*
Watson, Q.C. now moved to set aside the verdict as against Grove, and to enter a verdict for the defendant, or to arrest the judgment, or to reduce the damages to nominal damages, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence, and that the damages were excessive.
Case cited: Saxon v. Castle (6 A. & E. 652).

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Saturday, Nov. 2.
SCHWANFELDER v. LEIAGE.
Practice—Cause tried in absence of defendant's counsel.
Chadwick Jones, Serjt. moved for a new trial, on payment of costs, on an affidavit of defendant and of the clerk to defendant's attorney, which stated that counsel had been instructed for the defence, but that the cause was tried before the under-sheriff for Middlesex, in absence of such counsel, although the under-sheriff was informed of counsel being so instructed, and that the defendant, who was present, was not allowed to address the jury in his defence; that the usual hour for the sitting of the Sheriff's Court is 10 o'clock, and that the defendant's counsel was in attendance at a quarter past 10 o'clock, but the cause was then concluded.

FOWLER v. RUSSELL.
Malicious prosecution—Probable cause—Direction of the judge.
Channell, Serjt. moved on behalf of the defendant for a nonsuit or a new trial, on the ground of misdirection of the learned judge.
The declaration was for maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause, preferring a charge, before a magistrate, against the plaintiff, of having stolen a pair of steps belonging to the defendant.
Plea, not guilty.
At the trial before Lord Denman, at the last Warwickshire assizes, the defendant, at the end of the plaintiff's case, contended that there was no evidence of want of reasonable or probable cause, and it was for the judge to determine whether there was such evidence or not. His lordship, however, left it to the jury, but gave the defendant leave to move the Court if the Court should be of opinion that it was a question for the judge to determine, and ought not to have been left to the jury.
Panton v. Williams (2 Q. B. 169) was cited.
It appeared that the postea was indorsed to the effect that leave was reserved if the Court should be of opinion that there was no evidence of want of reasonable or probable cause, which made it doubtful, therefore, as to the question upon which leave was reserved. Rule nisi.

BATHAM v. HORN.

Practice—Writ of trial—Teste antedated.

Quære, if a party is liable on an account stated with the agent of an unknown principal.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a new trial in this cause, which had been tried before the Secondary, on the ground of misdirection, of the verdict being against evidence, and on account of an irregularity in the writ of trial.

The 1st count of the declaration was on a bill of exchange drawn by the defendant, and indorsed to the plaintiff, the 2nd count was on an account stated. Amongst other pleas, the defendant pleaded to the 1st count, a traverse of the notice of dishonour, and to the 2nd count, non assumpsit The jury found for the defendant on the issue joined on the 1st count, and for the plaintiff on the account stated

There was evidence given at the trial of an admission of the debt, made by the defendant in a conversation with one Dickinson, who applied for payment of the bill, but the defendant did not at the time know that Dickinson was the agent of the plaintiff, there was, however, evidence of a subsequent conversation, in which the defendant confirmed this admission, but this occurred after the action had been brought The misdirection on the part of the Secondary, as contended by the defendant, was, that he did not tell the jury that there was no evidence of an account stated, but left the case to them, saying that the effect of their finding was merely a question of costs

The irregularity was, that the writ of trial was tested the 20th June, although the issue was not entered until the 26th of June On this point 2 Chit Arch 294, and Blissell v Tenant (1 Bing N C 168) were referred to

The COURT said that they would grant a rule to shew cause on the last ground (which was as to the irregularity) but not on the others, that as to the conversation between the defendant and Dickinson in which there was evidence of an account stated, the Court neither assumed nor denied the proposition to be law that an agent cannot state an account if the principal is unknown, but that as the defendant had afterwards, when he knew for whom Dickinson was agent adopted the admission made by him in the former conversation, the jury were at liberty to consider them both together, and to draw from them the conclusion they did Rule nisi accordingly

JOHNSTON and OTHERS v NICHOLS

Guarantee—Consideration Variance

Channell, Serjt moved, pursuant to leave reserved at the trial, for a rule to shew cause why the verdict which had been found for the plaintiffs in this cause, should not be set aside, and a nonsuit entered

The declaration was upon a guarantee contained in the following letter from the defendant to the plaintiffs dated 1st June, 1843 —"As you are about to enter into transactions in business with Messrs Claridge and Brothers, with whom you have had dealings in the course of which Messrs Claridge and Co may from time to time become largely indebted to you, in consideration of your doing so, I agree to be responsible for, and to guarantee the payment of, such sums which that firm, whether consisting of its present members or not, now is or may at any time be indebted to you, so that I may not be called upon for more than 2,000*l*" The declaration, after alleging three particular debts due at the time of giving the guarantee, for money lent, money paid, and goods sold, stated the consideration for the defendant's promise to be in consideration that the plaintiffs would continue such dealings

It was objected on behalf of the defendant, either that that there was no consideration for the guarantee, or that there was a variance between the proof and the consideration laid in the declaration

The cases cited were Wood v Benson (2 C & J 94), and Raikes and Another v Todd (8 Ad & Ell 846).

BLACKHAM v PUGH

Libel—Privileged communication—Direction of judge

Shee, Serjt. moved, on behalf of the defendant, for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection of the learned judge, and of the verdict being against evidence.

The declaration was in case for a libel contained in a letter from the defendant's solicitors, written at the defendant's direction, to Mr. Southey, the auctioneer, who had been employed by the plaintiff to sell his stock in trade as a currier, in which letter notice was given to the auctioneer not to part with the proceeds of such sale, as the plaintiff had committed an act of bankruptcy, and the defendant was a creditor of the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded, amongst other pleas, not guilty, and a plea of justification, alleging that the plaintiff had absented himself from his place of business with the intent to delay the defendant, to being his creditor, and had thereby committed an act of bankruptcy.

The cause was tried before Parke, B. at the last Surrey assizes, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, damages 50*l*.

The notice to the auctioneer, the defendant contended, was a privileged communication; but the learned judge, at the trial, ruled otherwise. This, it was now submitted, was a misdirection, inasmuch as the question ought to have been left to the jury.

The cases of Fairman v Ives (5 B. & Ald. 642), Woodward v Lander (6 C. & P 548); Shepley v Todhunter (7 C & P 680); and M'Dougall v. Claridge (1 Camp 267) were cited

Upon the issue on the plea of justification, there was evidence at the trial of a conversation between the plaintiff and a witness, who was called, as to the intent of plaintiff in absenting himself from his place of business, and it was now submitted that the learned judge should have told the jury that, unless they disbelieved the witness, it was clear an act of bankruptcy had been committed

The COURT, however said that there appeared to be other evidence besides the admission made by the plaintiff in the conversation with the witness there was evidence of his selling his goods and leaving the premises, and it was proper, therefore, that the whole should be left to the jury, as it had been, and upon this point a rule was refused, but upon the other a rule nisi was granted

Shee, Serjt moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict, which had been found for the defendant, should not be entered for the plaintiff for 25*l* pursuant to leave given at the trial

The action was for dismissing the plaintiff, who was a yearly servant of the defendant, in the course of the year without a cause

The action was tried before Cresswell J at the sittings after last Trinity Term, when the learned judge thought that there was no evidence of the plaintiff being discharged by the defendant, but gave leave to move if the Court should think there was

The sale had taken place by private contract, and not by auction The sum of 6*l* 4s was claimed for the auctioneer's charge of valuing the goods, but which it was submitted the sheriff had no right to deduct from the proceeds according to the cases of Slater v Hames (7 M & W 413), and Phillips v Viscount Canterbury (11 M & W 619) Rule nisi

HODDING v SITCHFIELD

Where the amount of the demand and the costs indorsed on a writ are paid after the fourth day to the plaintiff's attorney's clerk, who receives it in ignorance that further costs have been incurred, the Court will not rescind an order made by a judge at chambers, staying proceedings in the action, unless the amount paid be returned to the defendant

Murphy, Serjt moved for a rule to shew cause why an order of Cresswell, J made on the 26th June staying proceedings in this cause, should not be rescinded A writ had been served on the defendant bearing the usual indorsement of the amount of the debt sued for and the costs The writ was served on the 7th June, and on the 13th six days after, the defendant's wife went to the plaintiff's attorney's office and paid to his clerk the debt and costs, which he received not knowing at the time that any further costs had been incurred When the plaintiff's attorney came home, he wrote to the defendant, disclaiming his clerk's authority and stating that, after the fourth day a special pleader had been employed and further costs incurred, and which, if not paid the action would be continued (Bowditch v Slaney 2 Bing N C 142)

TINDAL, C J —In that case there was only an offer to pay Here the money was not paid back again by the attorney, so as to place the parties in the same position as before the payment If there has been a mistake on one side, there has been a mistake on both Rule refused

WILMOT v WILLIAMS

Where it is shewn that a letter containing a bank post bill has been received by a witness and he states at the trial he did not read the letter, the contents of the letter are not evidence in the cause

An allegation in a declaration on a bill of exchange in an action by indorsee against the drawer stating that when the bill became due it was presented "to him," although a particular place for presentment is described, is a sufficient allegation of presentment

Pyles, Serjt moved for a rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be had in this case, on the ground of the improper rejection of evidence, as also on the ground of a variance. The action had been brought by the indorsee of a bill of exchange against the indorser. The bill was directed to one Cottingham, to pay to the order of the defendant 185*l*., and then indorsed to George Rose Innis, and by him indorsed to the plaintiff. The declaration stated that the acceptor had not paid the said bill when it became due, although the same was presented to him, and it was alleged the variance arose on the two last words. The pleas were—

1st. Failure of presentment.

2nd. No notice of dishonour.

3rd. That an agreement had been made between George Rose Innis, who was then the holder of the bill, the defendant, and the drawer, to take a new bill for 100*l* and a bank post-bill for 87*l* in satisfaction of the original bill, the subject of the present action.

It was shewn that a letter had reached the hands of the clerk of George Rose Innis, containing the bank post-bill for 87*l*, and it was further shewn that the bill had reached the hands of the latter, but on Innis swearing he had never read the letter, the learned judge refused, at the trial, to allow it to be received as evidence The next point was, that in an action against the drawer of a bill of exchange, the stat 1 & 2 Geo 4, c 78, does not apply, being confined to the case of actions against acceptors and this being the case of a drawer, the bill should have been presented at the place described in the bill, presented to him is not sufficient Rule refused.

BENTLEY v FLEMING

Verdict against evidence—Irregularity in recording verdict

Sir T Wilde, Serjt moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict in this case, which had passed for the plaintiff should not be set aside, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence, and on the further ground of a miscarriage on the trial with respect to the verdict Three question had been left to the jury, the judge had retired, and when the jury came in, the associate put the question, "Do you find for the plaintiff or the defendant?" On which the jury said "for the plaintiff" It was insisted by the counsel for the plaintiff, that no further questions could be asked, and the associate refused to ask any further question There is an affidavit of the foreman of the jury, and a written paper made at the time by the jury, stating the issues really found by the jury, namely, the two first for the plaintiff and the last for the defendant Rule nisi.

WILLIAMSON v PAGE

Evidence Commission to examine witnesses

Channell Serjt moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict which had been found for the plaintiff should not be set aside and a new trial had, on the ground of improper rejection of evidence

The cause was tried at the last Liverpool assizes, before Cresswell, J when a verdict was found for the plaintiff for 2 l

It appeared that there had been at the instance of the plaintiff, a commission sent abroad to examine witnesses, under which the commissioners were authorized to put or cause to be put, additional questions when they should consider it necessary and proper, such additional questions being put into writing and returned with the answers to the same. Under the commission the plaintiff had exhibited interrogatories in chief, and the defendant six cross interrogatories

The commissioners returned the answers to the questions in chief, and to such three of the defendant's cross interrogatories as the defendant required to be answered, and to additional questions which the commissioners said they had put at the defendant's request At the trial, upon the defendant's counsel requiring the answers to these additional questions to be read, the learned judge refused, on the ground that the commissioners had power only to put such question as might be necessary to elucidate answers to the interrogatories exhibited, but not to originate fresh ones Rule nisi.

MAUGHAN v. EDE.

Construction of covenant to make a road.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict in this cause should not be set aside, and a new trial had on the ground of misdirection.

The action was on covenant to recover from defendant a moiety of expenses of keeping a certain road in repair. As a condition precedent to the liability of defendant, the plaintiff by his covenant was bound to make a good carriage road and footpath upon a piece of ground of forty-two feet wide, which had been staked out and conveyed to a trustee for that purpose.

The plaintiff had made two footpaths, leaving only the intervening space for the road, which he had accordingly made. The defendant contended, that there should have been a road occupying the whole forty-two feet wide.

On the issue which raised the question, whether the plaintiff had made a road according to the deed of covenant, the learned judge left it to the jury to say whether a good carriage road had been made. This, it was submitted, was a misdirection; but

The COURT thought that it was not necessary that the whole space allotted should be made a road of, and that the covenant, on the part of the plaintiff, had been virtually performed, by making the road and footpath on both sides, as had been done. Rule refused.

CALMADY v. ROWE and ANOTHER.

A grant of wreck to the lord of a manor is strong evidence of a grant of the sea-shore between high and low water-mark.

Channell, Serjt. moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection.

The declaration was in trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close, being part of the sea-shore between high and low water-mark of the manor of Langdon, in the county of Devon. The pleas were, not guilty, a traverse of the plaintiff's possession, and that this close was the close of the Queen, with a justification by the defendants as her servants. The cause was tried at the last Exeter assizes before Pattison, J. when a verdict was found for the plaintiff with nominal damages. It was objected to the learned judge's summing up, that he had treated the defendants as wrong-doers, and had not required the same proof of the plaintiff's right to the close as if the cause had been between the lord of the manor and the Crown; that the learned judge had attached too much importance to the grant of wreck contained in a charter of Queen Elizabeth dated 1564, which had been put in evidence by the plaintiff, and under which passed the reversion in fee of the manor in respect of which the close was claimed: and that as to the evidence which had been given by the plaintiff of his tenants having been in the habit of taking sand and sea-weed from the sea-shore in question, the learned judge should have adverted to the rights of tenants and owners of lands in Devon to fetch sea-weed for manure, by virtue of 7 James 1, c. 18, and directed the jury accordingly.

The COURT thought that the inference from the evidence was, that the right of soil between high and low water-mark was in the lord of the manor, and that the defendants were primâ facie wrong-doers, and therefore properly treated as such. The grant of the wreck was almost conclusive evidence that with it the sea-shore was included. As to the statute of James, the grant of the manor by Queen Elizabeth, being prior, could not be affected by it, since there was nothing in the statute of James to take away previously existing rights. Rule refused.

Parol evidence to explain a written contract—Meaning of the word "building."

Byles, Serjt. moved, pursuant to leave reserved at the trial, to set aside the verdict which had been found for the plaintiffs, and to enter the same for the defendant.

The action was brought to recover for work done by the plaintiffs under a written agreement with the defendant, dated Oct. 26, 1843, by which the plaintiffs were to win stones and burn lime for the purpose of building sixty cottages at a colliery of the defendant, for the price of 1s. 4d. per superficial yard.

The questions were, what was the construction of this agreement, particularly as to the meaning of the words "building" and "superficial yard?" and also whether parol evidence might be admitted to explain these words?

The cause was tried before Cresswell, J. at the last Durham assizes, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, leave being reserved to enter a verdict for the defendant if the Court should be of opinion that the defendant was so entitled upon the true construction of the agreement without reference to any extrinsic evidence, or if the Court should think that parol evidence was admissible, and that the defendant was so entitled upon the construction of the agreement as explained by certain tenders for work which had been previously thereto made by the plaintiffs. Rule nisi.

Evidence—Effect of admission under notice to admit documents pursuant to 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42.

Byles, Serj. moved to set aside the verdict which had been found for the plaintiff, on the ground of the improper admission by the learned judge of evidence on the part of the plaintiff.

The action was brought against the defendants as the acceptors of a bill of exchange for 121*l.* 10s. and as drawers of a bill of exchange for 62*l.* 13s. and for money lent.

The defendants were part owners of a gale in the Forest of Dean. The bill for 121*l.* 10s. was directed to the New Bridge Coal Company, and purported to be accepted "For the New Bridge Coal Company—Henry Bishop." The bill for 62*l.* 13s. was drawn by one William Bishop, and indorsed—"For the New Bridge Coal Company—Wm. Bishop."

The plaintiff, at the trial, before Tindal, C. J. at the last Gloucester Assizes, gave in evidence an admission by the defendants, under a judge's order, of the documents described in a notice to admit, delivered pursuant to 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 15. In this notice the bill for 121*l.* 10s. was described as accepted by Henry Bishop for the New Bridge Coal Company, and the learned judge was of opinion that evidence was, therefore, not required of the authority of Bishop to accept for the company.

In evidence of the money lent, an admission of receipt of money by Francis Bishop, one of the part owners, was received as evidence against the others; this, also, was now objected to. Rule nisi.

Kinglake, Serjt. applied to the Court for leave to enter an appeal under the following circumstances. The case for the decision of the Court had been drawn up by the revising barrister in his own handwriting, and signed by the attorneys for the appellant and the respondent; before, however, the signature of the barrister was attached, he died. The 6 Vict. c. 18, s. 42, it was submitted, was merely directory. [TINDAL, C. J.—Are the facts agreed to by both parties?] Perhaps the Court will allow time to obtain affidavits from all parties.

BOROUGH OF WENLOCK.

JOHN HINTON, Appellant; THE TOWN CLERK OF WENLOCK, Respondent.

Construction of 65th section of the Registration Act—The Court will not remit the case to the revising barrister for the insertion of a fact which he has refused to state.

Keating applied, on behalf of the appellant, for a rule to shew cause why the case should not be sent back to the revising barrister for the insertion of a material fact which had been omitted. It was admitted that the revising barrister had stated facts sufficient to enable the Court to give judgment, but as it appeared upon affidavit that the revising barrister had expressly refused to insert what was deposed to be material, although requested to do so, the Court was asked, under the 65th section of the Registration Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 18), to remit the case for such insertion.

The COURT, however, said that the 65th section of the Registration Act applied only to a case in which the Court should be of opinion, upon the hearing, that the statement was not sufficient to enable them to give judgment, when the Court might send it back. The Court had only to give their judgment upon the facts as stated by the revising barrister. The party aggrieved might perhaps have a remedy by mandamus if the revising barrister improperly refused to insert what was material, but the Court would not, therefore, remit the case. Application refused.

Copyright Act.

Plaintiff had declared against the defendant for pirating "La Sonnambula," an opera which plaintiff had introduced into England from Milan in 1831. The action indorsee v. indorser of a bill of exchange, and non-acceptance pleaded.

The plaintiff proved that the name of the defendant written as acceptor of the bill was in defendant's handwriting, but the words "payable at Messrs. A. and Co." followed in a different handwriting. There was no evidence as to when this was done. On this the plaintiff was nonsuited. (Calvert v. Baker, 4 M. & W. 478.) Rule nisi.

DOE dem. ROBERTS v. PARRY.

Elegit.

The sheriff's inquisition on an elegit by judgment, recovered since 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 11, need not set out the land with metes and bounds.

This case had been tried before Coleridge, J. at the last circuit. Verdict for plaintiff.

Jervis, Q. C. moved, pursuant to leave reserved at the trial, for a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside and entered for the defendant, or limited to one messuage and 25 acres; or why a new trial should not be had.

The lessor of plaintiff was tenant by elegit by judgment recovered since 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 11, authorizing the delivery of all the lands of a judgment debtor.

The sheriff's inquisition had not set out the lands delivered by metes and bounds, but mentioned the land by name, and with a misdescription of the number of acres.

The jury at the trial, however, found the identity of the lands delivered under the elegit with the lands now sought to be recovered.

Jervis argued, that as the sheriff was before bound to set out a moiety, which was all that heretofore was delivered, he was now bound to set out the metes and bounds to that which he was now to deliver, viz. the whole.

But the Court thought the reason for setting out the land with metes and bounds had expired, now that all was to be delivered. Rule refused.

LAWRENCE v. GALLOUIN.

New trial.

This case was tried at Monmouth, before Atcherley, Serjt. at the last assizes, and verdict was obtained by the plaintiff for 73*l*. 13s. 6d.

Godson, Q. C. now moved for a new trial as to the whole amount, or for verdict to be reduced to 61*l*. 1s. 5d. on the ground that the verdict as to the 73*l*. 13s. 6d. was against evidence, and as to the excess, that there was misdirection.

The action was for goods sold and delivered, and for money paid to defendant's use. The defendant had employed one Stonehouse, of Newport, to ship coal to defendant's correspondents abroad, not as an agent to go between the defendant and any other person, but as one acting on his own account, but the defendant knew that Stonehouse did not himself supply the coal. The plaintiff contended, by Stonehouse's evidence, that this practice had been altered in the case of a particular shipment by means of one Daly, whom the defendant had sent to Newport, but Daly himself was not produced. As to the 12*l*. 12s. (the difference between 61*l*. 1s. 5d. and 73*l*. 13s. 6d.), Stonehouse, as defendant's agent, had advanced this sum to the captain of a vessel that had taken a former shipment, but not having included it in his accounts at the proper time, whereby the defendant had lost his opportunity of deducting it from the freight, defendant had refused to pay Stonehouse; the plaintiff, however, paid Stonehouse, and sought to recover it by this action. Rule nisi.

PITTS v. BECKETT.

New trial—Evidence.

This case was tried at Liverpool before Cresswell, J. at the last assizes. Verdict for defendant.

Knowles, Q. C. moved, by leave reserved, to enter verdict for plaintiff for 149*l*. or for new trial.

The action was for goods sold and delivered. Plea, general issue.

The defendant had employed a broker to buy for him a quantity of wool, to be delivered in good condition, and the same broker was employed by the plaintiff to sell the wool in question. The broker made an entry of a sale of the wool in question by plaintiff to defendant. This entry was an impression taken by him into his memorandum-book of a sold note, which he he sent to the plaintiff, and which said nothing as to the condition that the wool was to be delivered in good condition. The broker did not send a bought note to the defendant. The wool was sent to defendant at Birmingham, and, not being in good condition, was returned.

Under these circumstances, Knowles urged that the sold note containing all the requisites of a contract under the Statute of Frauds, the plaintiff was entitled to recover; but the Court thought that the evidence shewed (the broker was himself examined) that the broker had been employed to buy wool to be delivered in good condition. He was not the defendant's agent to make such a contract as he had made.

POLLOCK, C. B. said the effect of admitting evidence that the authority was not pursued, is not admitting evidence to vary a written agreement. Cur. adv. vult.

Note.—In the above case, Knowles, Q. C. said, the evidence as to the conditions under which the wool was to be delivered had not been adduced at the trial as evidence that the broker's authority had not been pursued. From what I could gather when the rule was applied for, Cresswell, J. at the trial seemed to have considered that the sold note had not been written by the broker as agent—making a memorandum in that character—of the contract (no bought note had been delivered), and that the memorandum in the book was nothing.

FOLLET v. FORREST and OTHERS.

Judgment non obstante—Replevin.

This case was heard before Cresswell, J. at Lancaster, at the last assizes. Verdict for defendant.

Martin, Q.C. pursuant to leave reserved, moved for a rule to shew cause why verdict should not be set aside, and verdict for three guineas entered for the plaintiff, or why there should not be judgment non obstante veredicto.

This was an action of replevin. The defendant avowed distraining on the plaintiff to recover as rent a sum which, by terms of tenancy between them, was to be recoverable as rent on breach of condition. Among other pleas, the plaintiff set out an unsealed lease, whereby it was stipulated that if plaintiff sold hay off the premises, defendant might distrain as for rent.

Martin submitted that a right of distress could be founded on such a condition. It was an introduction of hypothecation into English law—a prospective lien on property not in the creditor's possession. Rule nisi.

WATSON v. BOVILL.

Liability of messenger in the Courts of Bankruptcy for detaining a witness in custody by order of the Commissioner.

This case was tried at Northampton before Coltman, J. at the last assizes. Verdict for plaintiff, 10*l*. 10s. damages.

Humfrey moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to enter verdict for defendant. The defendant was messenger in Commissioner Daniell's Court of Bankruptcy at Birmingham. He had apprehended the plaintiff under a warrant from the commissioner to bring him before the commissioner to give evidence, and had, by commissioner's order, detained him in custody, after he had given evidence, because he would not pay the fees attendant on his apprehension. Humfrey urged that the messenger could not be liable, nor was an action against him the proper mode of trying the commissioner's right to order his detainer. He cited in illustration the cases Painter v. Liverpool Gas Company (3 A. & E. 433), and Andrews v. Morris (1 Q.B. 3). Rule nisi.

CHOUNDES v. BROWN.

Arrest of judgment.

This case was tried at Huntingdon before Williams, J. at the last assizes, and plaintiff obtained a verdict for 196*l*. 14s. 4d.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why judgment should not be arrested on the first count. The action was assumpsit, with a special count for use and occupation, and the money counts. The special count was in consideration that plaintiff had let the premises to defendant, defendant had promised to use the same in a tenantlike, husbandlike, and proper manner.

No previous request was alleged, nor was the nature of the premises, whether the same consisted of arable land or houses, or what, at all described.

Byles, Serjt. submitted that a past consideration would support no promise but what the law would imply, and that in this case the statement of the premises was not sufficient to shew aught from which the law would imply a promise. Rule nisi.

Monday, Nov. 4.

ASHMORE v. BRAMALL.

New trial—Judgment non obstante.

This case was tried before Denman, C. J. Verdict for defendant.

Whitehurst moved, pursuant to leave given at the trial, for a rule calling on the defendant to shew cause why the verdict should not be entered for the plaintiff for 45*l*. 5s. 5d., also, why judgment should not be entered non obstante veredicto.

The action was on a promissory note, dated 11th Nov. 1842, for 60*l*. with lawful interest. The material plea was, that the defendant had given the note as surety, upon the terms of a contemporaneous written agreement, that the note should be cancelled as soon as the principal debtor, or any one else, should pay 60*l*. to the plaintiffs, on account of certain shares which such debtor held in a Building Society whereof the plaintiff was trustee; that the debtor had paid 52*l*. and that the defendant had, before the suit, tendered 8*l*.

Replication traversed the payment of the 52*l*.

The facts were, that the 52*l*. had been paid before the making of the note.

Whitehurst submitted that there had been misdirection in construing the agreement to refer to by-gone instead of prospective payments; and that as the plea did not cover the interest, plaintiff was entitled to judgment non obstante. Rule nisi.

M'INTIRE v. MILLER and OTHERS.

New trial.

This case was tried at Guildhall, before Pollock, C.B. Verdict for the plaintiff.

Martin moved, pursuant to leave reserved, for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why verdict should not be entered for the defendant, or a new trial had.

It was an action by the secretary of the United Legal Insurance Company, against certain members of the Marylebone Joint Stock Bank. The Marylebone Joint Stock Bank were indebted to the United Legal Insurance; and, proceedings being threatened, Mr. Walker, a director of the Marylebone Bank, and liable, jointly with the rest of that company, advanced the money due to the United Legal Insurance Company, upon four of the directors of that company executing a deed whereby the debt was assigned to a Mr. Richards. Mr. Richards was produced at the trial, and swore he knew nothing about his name having been used.

The question was whether this transaction supported the plea of payment. Pollock, C. B. at the trial thought that the employment of Richards's name was merely colourable, and the true question was, whether a co-debtor could go to his creditor and arrange with him, so that, on payment of the amount of the joint debt, he, the co-debtor, might employ the creditor's name in a suit against the party who was before jointly liable with him: that this was a question for the Court to decide.

Martin said the facts should have gone to the jury as evidence in support of a plea of payment.

PARKE, B. did not think that the facts would support a plea of payment. It was a very usual thing for a surety not to pay the debt, but to take an assignment of it, and then put the creditors' remedies in suit.

Martin contended that it violated a rule of law; it enabled a party to be plaintiff and defendant. The surety was in a different position from a principal co-debtor. Rule nisi.

NORTONSTRONG v. PITT.

This case, in which Martin, Q. C. also moved, was tried before the same judge, on the same day as the last case, and raised the same point, with this addition, that the plaintiff had been willing to give evidence, and had been tendered in evidence by the defendant, but the Lord Chief Baron had refused to admit him. (Morden v. Williamson and Another, 1 Taunt. 378.) Rule nisi.

BENBOW v. JONES.
Nonsuit.

This case had been tried before Atcherley, Serjt. at Worcester. Verdict for plaintiff for 45*l*.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved, pursuant to leave reserved, for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why verdict should not be set aside, and a nonsuit entered, on the ground of misdirection.

The defendant was secretary to a certain race, which was proposed to be run upon certain written terms; among them, that no horse should be ridden by any professional jockey, and that all disputes should be decided by the steward, and that an umpire should be appointed to decide as to the winner. Before the race, the proposed rider of the plaintiff's horse had been objected to on the ground that he was a professional jockey. Nevertheless, on the morning of the race, the same rider presented himself on the plaintiff's horse, and took up his position with the others who were to race. The umpire notified that the others were to consider the plaintiff's horse as out of the race. The race was run, and plaintiff's horse came in first. The umpire ordered the secretary to give the money to the owner of the second horse, and he had done so.

The misdirection complained of was that the learned judge had left it to the jury to say there was no decision by the umpire in favour of the second horse, he not having called the parties regularly before him, and examined witnesses; at any rate, said Talfourd, there had been no decision in favour of the plaintiff.

Talfourd moved also on another ground, viz. that by the terms of the race all disputes were to be submitted to the steward; but the Court said this prospective submission did not preclude resort to this court. Rule granted on the first ground only.

DOE dem. BOYD v. INGLEBY.
Question as to construction of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 15.

This case had been tried before Coleridge, J. Verdict for plaintiff.

Jervis moved, pursuant to leave, for rule calling on plaintiff to shew cause why verdict should not be entered for defendant; the Court to draw the same conclusions from evidence as a jury. The demise in the ejectment had been laid 12th April, 1841, whereas the title of the lessor of the plaintiff had only commenced on the 12th May, 1841, by writ of possession in an antecedent ejectment.

Jervis also submitted that there had been no sufficient petitioning creditor's debt to make out a title in this case under a bankruptcy, since the requisite amount was made up by debts due to several partnerships, whilst on strict construction of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 15, the section did not extend to that case; it extended to persons - not partnerships.

Rule granted.

CLARK v. GEES and OTHERS.
New trial.

This case was tried before Pollock, C. B. at York, at the last assizes.

W. H. Watson, Q. C. moved for a rule to shew cause why nonsuit should not be set aside, and new trial had, or verdict entered for plaintiff.

The plaintiff was a carpenter, and brought his action for a balance of account in respect of extras, over and above the work to be done in the specification of work which had been entered into between the parties, and which specification provided that the extra work should be approved of by the defendant's architect, who was also to settle the prices.

Watson submitted that because the defendant's own architect was to settle the prices, it never could have been intended that his approbation was to be a condition precedent; it was trusting too much; but the Court thought it was a condition precedent; it had not been complied with, and so— Rule refused.

GEACH v. INGALL.
New trial. Right to begin.

This case was tried at Warwick, before Denman, C.J. Verdict for plaintiff.

Humfrey moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground that the learned judge had misdecided that the plaintiff was entitled to begin, and also on the ground of misdirection.

The action was by the assignees of Scott, to recover the amount of a life-policy of insurance.

The question as to the right to begin arose on the seventh plea, which was, "that a certain thing averred by the plaintiff in his declaration was not true in this, that Scott, at the time of making the policy, was in good health." Verification, but the replication to this was a similiter.

Humfrey said Lord Denman laid down at the trial that plaintiff should begin in every case where there are unliquidated damages. And he (Humfrey) wished the Court in this case to decide whether misdirection as to the right to begin, and it was always spoken of as the right to begin, did not entitle the party to a new trial.

PARKE, B.—The Court will only grant new trial on that ground where manifest injustice is done. Could the objection be taken by a bill of exceptions? If it could not, then it was with the discretion of the Court to grant a new trial or not.

The misdirection complained of was, that the learned judge had left it to the jury to say whether Scott had ever before effecting the policy had a disorder that tended to shorten life; whereas he should have left it to them, whether he had not denied that he had ever had spitting of blood, of which there was evidence, and by which means he had not been subjected to as stringent an examination as he otherwise would have been. Rule granted.

WILSON and WIFE v. Executors of HARROW.
Leave to amend.

Addison moved for leave to amend a plea.

The action was on a promissory note given to the plaintiff's wife dum sola.

Among other pleas, there was a plea of no consideration, which did not state the circumstances under which it was given. Leave granted.

There was a demurrer as to this plea. Upon other pleas issues in fact were joined.

Application for leave to amend had been made at Chambers, and refused, on the ground that the plaintiff had been delayed in proceeding to trial on the issues in fact, in consequence of the plea of no consideration having been framed to catch a demurrer.

Addison was about to detail the circumstances of the case, but the Court

Granted a rule to shew cause.

CLARK v. ROYSTON.
New trial.

This case was tried at York at the last assizes. Verdict for plaintiff on the first count.

Hugh Hill moved, pursuant to leave, for a rule to shew cause why verdict should not be entered for defendant on the ground of variance.

The declaration was in assumpsit on a special contract, which stated that, in consideration the plaintiff would give up land on which he had spread manure, defendant promised to become tenant, and to pay according to the custom of the country.

Plaintiff put in a written contract, which contained a memorandum that the defendant should leave the land in the same state, or pay for the manure at a valuation.

Defendant proved that by custom of the country the manure should be paid for on entry, and so argued that there was variance.

Rule to shew cause granted.

NORTON v. SWEENEY.
Evidence.

Evidence that plaintiff had handed defendant a note, without proof of the value of such note, is good evidence of money lent to the extent of 5l. the lowest English current note.

This case had been tried before the sheriff. Verdict for plaintiff 5*l*.

Best moved, pursuant to leave, for a rule to shew cause why verdict should not be entered for defendant, or why new trial should not be had.

He handed the sheriff's notes to the Court.

The action was in debt for money lent.

The defendant had borrowed money of the plaintiff on a race-course; the evidence was, that he had handed a note for the payment of money to the plaintiff, but what note, or what amount, did not appear.

The sheriff held that this was good evidence of money lent to the extent of 5*l*. the lowest English current note; and so thought the Court.

Best then said that the sheriff had prevented him from addressing the jury, which he was desirous of doing, and moved for a new trial on this ground.

It appeared, however, that Best had acquiesced in what the sheriff did, though his acquiescence had been reluctant. Rule refused.

UTHWATT v. ELKINS, LYMES, PAVIOR, KEMP, and TOMKINS.
New trial.

This case had been tried before Williams, J. at Huntingdon at the last assizes. Verdict for plaintiff.

Gunning moved, pursuant to leave, for rule calling on plaintiff to shew cause why a nonsuit should not be entered.

This was an action for use and occupation.

The two first-named defendants were surveyors of highways; the third was churchwarden and also an overseer of the poor; and the fourth and fifth were overseers of the poor of a certain parish. The land had been let to them by an unsealed instrument nominatim, with their official description, and the limitation was to them, their executors, administrators, and assigns, and successors in office.

The ground of the motion was, that though the churchwardens and overseers were a quasi corporation to take land for the use of the poor, under 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, ss. 12, 13, and 17; yet the surveyors of highways were not. That therefore they took in moieties as tenants in common. (Co. Litt. sec. 297, p. 190, a.) Another ground of motion was, that in two receipts, which were produced at the trial, the receipt was for rent on the behalf of the "overseers." But PARKE, B. said, You can't make out a second demise from the receipts.

Rule granted on first ground.

MILLS v. GROFF.
New trial.

This case was tried before Williams, J. at the last assizes for Suffolk. Verdict for defendant.

Palmer moved for a rule calling on defendant to shew cause why a new trial should not be had on the ground of misdirection.

This was an action of trespass for breaking into plaintiff's house, and turning him out of possession. The question turned on the sufficiency of a notice to quit. The learned judge had directed the jury to find for the defendant if they found that a certain notice, then produced, had been given. The notice was dated the 17th June, 1840; it was served on the 18th; it required the plaintiff to deliver up possession on the 11th of October next, or on such other day thereafter as should be six months before the day when his tenancy would expire.

Palmer said this notice was bad for uncertainty as to the day from which the six months were to commence. It should have been to give up on a named day, or at the expiration of the six months which would then next expire with the expiration of the tenancy. Rule to shew cause granted.

Re WILLIAM WHITCHURCH.
New trial.

—— moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the plaintiff's bill of costs should not be referred in the usual way for taxation.

The plaintiff had brought an action for costs, and had recovered them by writ of execution.

Rule granted.

BERKEY and ANOTHER v. FLETCHER.
New trial.

This case had been tried before the Recorder of Chester, who has a palatinate jurisdiction. Verdict for plaintiff, with nominal damages.

Jervis, Q. C. moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence, and for misdirection. Rule granted.

CROOKE v. WILSON and OTHERS.
Principal and agent.

This case had been tried at Lancaster, before Cresswell, J. at the last assizes. Verdict for plaintiff for 15s.

Martin, Q. C. moved, pursuant to leave, for a rule calling on defendant to shew cause why the damages should not be increased to 4*l*.

It was an action for distraining more rent than was due.

The object of the application was to get the damages above 40s.

The ground of the motion was, that the defendant's agent (to whom the collection of rent and the keeping of divers houses in repair, among them the plaintiff's house, was intrusted by the defendant, who was landlord thereof) had ordered sewerage work to be done, and had authorized the plaintiff to pay for beer to the workmen, promising that the amount so paid should be deducted out of the rent. No rent was due at the time of the authority thus given. The plaintiff had paid for the beer; nevertheless the distress had been made without the promised allowance.

The COURT, however, thought that the case was parallel to that of the agent borrowing money; that, authority like that of the agent, was no authority to borrow money, nor to get others to pay for beer. It might have been different if there had been any rent due. Rule refused.

Tuesday, Nov. 5.

BROWN v. NEWCASTLE AND DARLINGTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Is lessee entitled to sue for penalties for non-construction of road in pursuance of a Railway Act, which directs the penalty to be paid to the "owner" of the interrupted road?

Knowles, Q. C. moved to set side the verdict for the defendant, on the ground of misdirection.

This was an action of debt for penalties under the said company's Act, for the non-construction within the time specified of a road in substitution of one which had been rendered impassable in the formation of the above railway.

Pleas—Not guilty, and leave and license.

The Act required such substituted road to be made upon the old one (if a private road) being rendered "impassable for the person entitled to the use thereof," but gave the penalties in such case "to the owner thereof." It appeared that the plaintiff was lessee of lands to which was attached the use of the obstructed road. At the trial, before Cresswell, J. Mr. Wortley submitted that the plaintiff was not "owner," and therefore should be nonsuited. The case, however, went to the jury. They could not agree, and Cresswell, J. then directed them to find a verdict for defendant, which was done.

The declaration described the plaintiff "as possessed of certain lands, and by reason thereof entitled," &c.; but did not state that he was "owner thereof." Lister v. Lobley (7 A. & E. 124) was cited. After some discussion as to the meaning of the term, the rule was granted, but a special case was recommended. Rule nisi.

CHAPMAN, P.O. of North Shields Banking Company, v. ANNETTE.

Effect of admission of debt as proof of notice of dishonour.

Watson, Q. C. moved to set aside verdict for defendant, and to enter verdict for plaintiff, pursuant to leave reserved.

This was an action by the indorsee of a bill of exchange against the drawer, upon dishonour by the acceptor.

The material plea was denial of notice.

It appeared that neither of the two agents of the bank, whose duty it was to give notice of dishonoured bills, could state that he gave due notice; but a few days after the bill was dishonoured the defendant admitted the debt to one of the said agents, wished the bill to be renewed, and promised to pay it. A verdict was found for the defendant.

Watson now argued that such a promise to pay would entitle the plaintiff to a verdict, or at least that it should have been left to the jury to infer notice from it. It was suggested that the defendant might have had notice from the acceptor, and that this would be sufficient (Roshier v. Kieran, 4 Campb. 87; Chapman v. Keane, 3 Ad. & E. 193); but Parke, B. doubted this. As to the effect of the admission, Lundie v. Robertson (7 East, 231) was cited. Rule granted.

ECCLES v. HARVEY.

Admissibility of Lloyd's List—Evidence of underwriters as to amount of premium.

Martin, Q.C. moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff in this cause: 1st, as being against evidence; 2nd, for admission of improper evidence; 3rd, for rejection of evidence. It was an action upon a policy of insurance, effected upon the ship Caledonia, for a total loss, and was tried at the last Liverpool assizes.

Plea—That the policy was effected by fraud.

It involved a number of facts and dates, but the principal question was, whether the underwriter had knowledge of the day of sailing. To shew that he had, Lloyd's List was put in evidence, and also the contents of a New York paper mentioned in the said List as having been received. The jury wished to return a verdict "for the plaintiff, on the presumption that defendant, as an underwriter, had the means of learning" the necessary facts. This the learned judge refused to receive, and a verdict was then found for the plaintiff.

Martin now cited, as to the concealment of material facts, Rickards v. Murdock (10 B. & C. 527), and argued the inadmissibility of the above evidence, and that proof of knowledge was necessary, and not merely the possession of the means of knowledge. The opinions of underwriters as to the proper amount of premium had been rejected at the trial. On this point he cited Chapman v. Walton (10 Bing. 57); Rickards v. Murdock, (10 B. & C. 527); Campbell v. Rickards (5 B. & Ad. 840); Berthon v. Loughman (2 Stark. 258). Rule granted on all the points.

AMPHLETT v. GARBUTT.

Right of surviving assignee to sue, and mode of stating the contract under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 65.

Godson, Q. C. moved to set aside the nonsuit in this case, and for leave to enter the verdict for the plaintiff for 760*l.* or 76*l.*

This was an action brought by one assignee of an insolvent against the defendant, upon a contract of purchase entered into by him with the plaintiff and a co-assignee, who was subsequently, but before the action, removed by order of the Court under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 65.

The plaintiff sued as assignee, and the promise was laid to him as assignee. There was also a count upon the account stated.

Pleas—Non assumpsit, and denial that plaintiff was assignee.

There was no evidence of any promise or account stated with the plaintiff singly.

PARKE, B.—You have the right to sue under the Act, but the contract is misstated.

Godson said leave to amend had been refused at the trial.

By the COURT.—The declaration is clearly framed wrongly. As to the first issue, the rule must be refused; but as to the other issue, it will be granted, as you are entitled to the costs of that issue. Rule accordingly.

Re ROSE v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Jurisdiction of Court of Exchequer.

Jervis, Q.C. applied for a rule to shew cause why the bill of Mr. Rose should not be referred to the proper officer of this court.

The bill was for proceedings under the company's Act, 6 Wm. 4, c. 38, the 9th and 10th sections of which regulated the proceedings thereon.

The practice had been for the equity side of the court to exercise those powers, and the question was, whether, since the 5 Vict. c. 5, transferring the equity jurisdiction, the Court had any power. Under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, it would be taxable by the Master of the Rolls. Rule nisi.

WATSON v. WHITMORE.

Practice as to setting aside verdicts.

Whitehurst, Q.C. moved to set aside the verdict for the defendant in this case, for misdirection.

It was an action brought against the official assignee of the Birmingham Bankruptcy Court for improperly causing a summons and warrant to be issued against the plaintiff, under which he was brought up before the commissioner.

Pleas—Not guilty, and a traverse of an allegation about the nature of the dispute, which was held to be immaterial.

Coltman, J. had directed the jury to find for the defendant, as there was reasonable and probable cause.

Whitehurst did not then draw his attention to the second issue. He now went into the facts at length, and in the course of the argument stated that Lord Denman had at the last assizes left the question and probable cause to the jury.

POLLOCK, C. B.—The commissioners should be very careful how they allow these summonses to be issued; but here there was reasonable and probable cause on the part of the official assignee, although I do not say that the warrant would have been issued had the commissioner known the facts. The question of reasonable and probable cause upon admitted facts is clearly for the judge's decision. Then as to the second issue, it seems immaterial to the merits, and applications of this kind are a substitution for a bill of exceptions (although also at the discretion of the Court), and on a misdirection unobjected to, a bill of exceptions would not lie. This Court will not interfere with the verdict merely for the purpose of costs in such a case. Rule refused.

WHITMORE, Assignee, v. BLACK.

Rights of assignees.

Humfrey moved to set aside the verdict for the defendant, pursuant to leave reserved, and to enter it for the plaintiff; the amount of damages to be referred.

It was an action of trover tried before Pollock, C.B. on July 3rd. The defendant had put in an execution after the fiat, and upon notice the sheriff applied under the Interpleader Act. An action was directed, and the goods ordered to be sold. The defendant did not continue the action; the amount that the goods sold for had been paid to the assignees, but they now sought to recover the value at the time of seizure. Humfrey had at the trial sought to establish the identity of position between the assignees and a third party whose goods are tortiously seized and sold, who is clearly entitled to receive the value of the goods at the time of seizure; citing Glasspoole v Young (9 B. & C. 697); Clark v. Nicholson (1 C. M. & R. 726).

POLLOCK, C.B. ruled that there was a difference, for although in matter of right the assignees might be allowed to recover such difference, yet as a matter of experience and practice, the fact that they were bound to sell made a distinction between the two cases. The Court agreed with this view, and the rule was refused. Rule refused.

SMITH v. LLOYD.

Peremptory undertaking discharged on account of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96.

Atherton moved for a rule nisi why the plaintiff in this case should not be discharged from his peremptory undertaking, or a stet processus entered, on an affidavit that the action was brought prior to the late Insolvent Act, with the intention of arresting the defendant, and that he had no then or now any goods or chattels. Rule granted.

CHARINGTON v. JOHNSON.

Surplus of distress.

O'Malley moved to set aside the nonsuit in this case, and for a new trial, for misdirection.

It was an action for money had and received against the surveyor of highways, to recover the overplus of a distress made by him. It was tried at Cambridge before Alderson, B. at the last assizes. The questions were, whether a demand could be made without an authority in writing from the plaintiff; and whether it was an action within the protecting clause of the Highway Act. On the first ground the judge nonsuited the plaintiff, and was also inclined to think that it was within the Act.

Authorities cited: 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 4; 27 Geo. 2, c. 20; Moyse v. Corksedge (Willes, 636). Rule granted.

REDMAN v. WILSON.

Tomlinson moved in arrest of judgment or for a new trial for misdirection.

It was an action on a policy of insurance, effected upon the Lord Wellington from London to Sierra Leone and back. The loss alleged was by perils of the sea. The point intended to be raised was, that the words of the declaration did not include the cause of the loss of the vessel, which was the negligence of those employed in loading her at Sierra Leone, and that to hold the underwriters liable in this case would be to extend the cases, which have already gone far enough.

Cases cited: Barber v. Phillips (5 B. & A. 161); Devaux v. J. Ansen (5 B. N. C. 519); Dixon v. Sadler (5 M. & W. 405). Rule nisi.

BROWN v. FULLARTON.

May a writ be amended to save the Statute of Limitations?

In this case a motion was made to amend the writ of summons and subsequent proceedings by adding the name of the assignee, upon an affidavit that the action would be barred without the amendment was allowed. An application had been made to Pollock, C. B. at chambers, but he had refused, thinking that the very reason why the amendment should not be allowed; following Roberts v. Bate (6 A. & E. 778), rather than Eccles v. Cole (1 Dowl. N. S. 34).

Pollock, C. B. had referred to the Court for argument. Rule nisi.

SINCLAIR v. SINCLAIR.

New trial.

Jervis, Q. C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict in this case should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground of improper reception of evidence. The action was tried before Rolfe, B. at the last assizes, and was brought to recover wages. Pleas—Non assumpsit, and a set-off. One of the witnesses examined on the part of the plaintiff was stated in the declaration to be the prochein ami of the plaintiff, and he is clearly an incompetent witness, either before or since the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, he not only being named on the record, but liable to costs. (1 Strange, 505.) [ROLFE, B.- Being named on the record must mean being a party. The merely being named is not enough, or the attorney by whom the plaintiff appears would be incompetent.] Here the party has an interest in the suit in the form of costs. Rule nisi.

BISS v. ARKILL.

New trial.

Whateley, Q.C. moved to enter a nonsuit, in pursuance of leave reserved at the trial, which took place at Worcester before Atcherley, Serjt. The action was brought to recover a forfeit of 10*l.* under an agreement for a steeple-chase, for which the defendant's horse was entered by a previous owner. The plaintiff's horse was the winner. There was evidence that, by the rules of steeple-chases, the obligations of a horse attached to his owner for the time being. It was insisted that there was no privity of contract between the parties which could support the contract at law. Rule nisi.

GEAR v. FINDEN.

Taxation of costs—Award.

Bramwell moved for a rule, calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the Master should not proceed to tax the costs in the case.

The action had been decided by the award of an arbitrator, the plaintiff had got possession of the award, and refused to produce it, and the Master refused to proceed without it.

Rule to shew cause why plaintiff should not produce the award before the Master, or the Master proceed without it.

Note. A copy of the award had been produced to the Master.

HAWKE v. BAZELEY.

Tapril moved for a rule to shew cause why the defendant should not have leave to plead several matters.

Case to stand over till Monday.

Monday.

HAWKE v. BAZELEY.

This case stood over till to-day, in order that counsel might consult whether two of the proposed pleas might not be consolidated, and then the rule was granted, with an intimation from the Court that the parties might arrange to go back to the said judge (Baron Gurney) at chambers to settle the question.

TWYFORD v. ARNFIELD.

This case was tried at the sittings of the Court, before Rolfe, B. Verdict for the plaintiff.

Knowles, C. C. moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. Rule refused.

Tuesday.

HEYWOOD v. HEYWOOD.—Crowder, Q. C. moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff in this action, tried at the last Wiltshire assizes, as against evidence. The COURT said they would confer with the learned judge who tried the cause. Cur. adv. vult.

LEDSAM v. ——.—At the suggestion of Kelly,

Q. C. the motion for a new trial in this case was fixed for Thursday week, that Alderson, B. might be present.

Ex parte C. M. Smith.— —— moved that C. M. Smith might be struck off the rolls, for the purpose of going to the Bar upon the usual affidavit.

Rule granted.

Alexander v. Pratt.

Kelly, Q. C. moved for a rule, pursuant to leave reserved, to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and enter it for the defendant. It was an action on a time policy of insurance, and the plaintiffs claimed a total loss.

Plea—Unseaworthiness.

The point turned wholly upon the construction of the pleadings, and whether certain words were material or not.

Rule granted, with leave reserved to amend if the Court should think the merits had not been decided.

Wednesday.

Verey v. Law.

Knowles moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict in this case should not be set aside and a new trial had. Rule refused.

James v. Williams.

Chilton, Q. C. moved for a rule nisi to enter up judgment non obstante veredicto on the first plea, which has passed for the defendant. Rule nisi.

Bartlett v. Diamond.

Martin, Q. C. moved for a rule nisi to enter up a verdict in this cause, tried before Rolfe, B. at the last assizes, for 1,080*l.* Rule nisi.

Kynaston v. Crouch.

Crowder, Q. C. moved for a rule nisi to shew cause why a non-suit should not be entered in this case, tried before Patteson, J. at Bristol, or the damages reduced to such a sum as the Court should direct.

Rule nisi.

Staples v. Peck.

Dundas, Q.C. moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict on the second issue, which had passed for the defendant. Rule nisi.

Harrison v. Wright.

M. D. Hill, Q.C. moved for a rule nisi for a new trial in this cause, tried before Coltman, J. at the Nottingham Assizes, on the ground of misdirection, the improper reception of evidence, and the verdict being against evidence. Cur. adv. vult.

Doe dem. William the Fourth and Others v. Roberts and Others.

Evans, Q.C. moved for a new trial. The case was tried at the last assizes at Chester, before Coleridge, J. The motion was on the grounds of a verdict against evidence, the improper admission of evidence, and misdirection.

Deferred in order to consult the judge.

Brogden v. Buxton.

Wortley, Q.C. moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, or to reduce the damages by an amount given by the jury for interest. The case was tried at the last assizes at Lancaster before Cresswell, J. and a verdict found for the plaintiff. Rule refused.

Frewd and Wife v. Powell.

Cockburn, Q.C. moved for a rule to enter a verdict for the plaintiff, upon the count for an account stated, pursuant to leave reserved by Wightman, J. at the trial. Rule nisi.

BAIL COURT.

Saturday, Nov. 2.

(Before Mr. Justice Patteson.)

Young v. Crompton.

Application to tax the amount of costs indorsed on a writ of summons.

Gray moved for a rule calling upon the plaintiff's attorney to shew cause why the order of Maule, J. should not be set aside, and why the costs indorsed on the writ of summons should not be referred to taxation, and why the attorney should not refund what should appear to be overpaid, and pay the costs of taxation, if more than a sixth should be taxed off.

The writ of summons in this case was indorsed 2*l.* 5s. for debt and 2*l.* 10s. for costs. By the defendant's affidavit it appeared that, according to an account sent in and signed by the plaintiff, the real amount of the debt was only 2*l.* 1s. 5d. which amount, together with the 2*l.* 10s. for costs, the defendant remitted within the four days to the plaintiff's attorney, who replied by letter, as follows :—

"Young against yourself.

"Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of a post-office order for the amount of debt and costs herein.

"Yours, &c.

"W. Fletcher, for J. C. Ward."

Subsequently a summons was taken out by the defendant calling upon the plaintiff's attorney to shew cause why the costs indorsed upon the writ of summons should not be referred to taxation (as in the present application). Upon the hearing before Maule, J. the plaintiff's attorney objected that, inasmuch as the amount of the debt indorsed (2*l.* 5s.) had not been paid, but only a part thereof (2*l.* 1s. 5d.), the defendant was not entitled to have the costs taxed under the rule H. T. 2 Wm. 4, r. 2, and the learned judge dismissed the summons, with costs. It was now contended that, as the plaintiff's attorney had in fact accepted the 2*l.* 1s. 5d. and acknowledged the receipt as the debt, he could not defeat the rule of H. T. 2 Wm. 4, and that if he had not intended the receipt to be as for the debt, he should have refused to have accepted the amount. Rule nisi.

Reg. v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, in the matter of the appeal between Stanley-cum-Wrenthorp, Appellants, and Alverthorp-cum-Thorns, Respondents.

Quære, whether, when the appellants do not give notice of appeal within the twenty-one days, and the pauper is not afterwards removed, they have a right, under the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 79, to enter and try their appeal against the order of removal.

Pashley moved for a mandamus, commanding the above justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal between the before-mentioned parishes. On the 29th July last an order of removal was made. On the 2nd August the order, copies of the examinations, and notice of chargeability were served. On the 23rd of August the appellants signed notice of appeal, and served same on the 24th. The pauper was not removed, and on the 25th of September grounds of appeal and notice of trial were served. At the trial, the respondents objected to the right of the appellants to appeal, they having omitted, during the running of the twenty-one days, to give notice of appeal, and the pauper in fact not having been removed that the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 79, prescribes that the appellants shall give their notice within the twenty one days after the sending of the copy, order, &c. ; and that the appellants not having done so, and no removal having in fact taken place, no right to appeal arose under this Act. nor under the 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12, which makes an actual removal the condition of a right to appeal. The justices took this view of the case, and refused to hear the appeal. It was now contended that the justices were wrong, for that the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 79, makes the sending of the copy, order, &c. the grievance against which the appellants are entitled to appeal, and that the limitation of the twenty-one days is merely to prevent the removal, and that the only effect of not having given notice of appeal within this period was that the pauper may afterwards have been removed, and this notwithstanding the giving of the notice, which not being within the twenty-one days, could not operate to restrain the removal under the order. (R. v. Justices of Suffolk, 4 Ad. & Ell. 319 ; R. v. Justices of Leicester, 6 Dowl. 633.) Rule nisi.

Reg. v. The Recorder of Bolton.

Mandamus to hear an appeal.

Cowling moved for a mandamus commanding the Recorder of Bolton to hear and determine the matter of an appeal of one Barlow against a conviction. It appeared that Barlow, who was a counterpane weaver, had been summarily convicted under the 17 Geo. 3, c. 56, s. 8, for neglecting to do up the work upon which he was employed, and sentenced to one month's imprisonment. Upon this he gave notice of appeal, and entered into recognizances to enter and try his appeal at the next sessions, and abide the judgment of the Court, whereupon he was discharged. The conviction was duly drawn up and forwarded to the court. On the 22nd of October, two days before the sessions, Barlow served a notice of abandonment. At the sessions the respondents applied to enter the appeal, but it was objected that the Court had no jurisdiction to permit this to be done, and the Recorder accordingly refused to allow the respondents to enter the appeal. Thus nothing was done, and the defendant remained at large, the convicting parties having no longer power to commit in execution of the conviction. (Rex v. Twyford and Grove, 5 Ad. & Ell. 430.)

Ex parte Marsh, Esq. Mayor of Yarmouth.

Criminal information.

Tunley v. Evans.

When a cause in the superior courts has been tried before the judge of the Sheriff's Court, the counsel who attended the trial may move for a new trial without the production of the judge's notes.

Lush moved in this case, which had been tried before the Judge of the Sheriffs' Court of London, to set aside the verdict, which had been returned for the defendant, and for a new trial, on the ground of the improper reception of evidence, of the verdict being against evidence, and misdirection.

In this case application had been made for a copy of the judge's notes of the trial, but they had been refused, on the ground that this Court never gave a copy until the rule nisi had been obtained. The learned counsel had himself attended the trial, but in one case in the Exchequer (Edes v. Britten, 9 Dowl. 245), it had been held that in all cases the notes must be produced on moving for the rule nisi.

Patteson, J.—If you were there yourself you may make the motion upon your own recollection of the facts. In the Sheriffs' Court I believe counsel invariably attend, which would form an exception to the general rule. Rule nisi.

Tuesday, Nov. 5.

Edney v. Poole.

The Court will not admit of any equivalent for actual personal service of the writ of summons.

H. Hill moved for leave to enter an appearance sec. stat. for the defendant. In this case, the party attempting to serve the writ had called at the defendent's residence whilst he was at home, with the copy writ inclosed in a letter, which he gave to the defendant's wife, with directions to give it to her husband. She took it in, and shortly afterwards returned with the copy, saying that "Mr. Poole said he was to take this (meaning the copy writ) back again." On leaving the premises he saw the defendant through the area. After referring to the various cases upon the subject of constructive service, the learned counsel thought it right to draw the attention of the Court to the case of Goggs v. Lord Huntingtower (12 M. & W. ; 2 L. T. 330), in which the Court of Exchequer had said that the judges had some to the determination of allowing no equivalent for personal service.

Patteson, J.—There was a discussion amongst the judges, and we all thought that allowing such services would be likely to create great inconvenience, and unless you can get an affidavit from the party that the copy writ was actually delivered, you will only be entitled to a distringas.

Distringas granted.

Ex parte ———.

The rule for discharging a party out of custody, where he has been taken on an attachment for not obeying a judge's order, is nisi only.

Crowder, Q.C. moved to discharge an attorney out of custody, he having been taken on an attachment for not obeying an order of Coleridge, J. for delivering his bill costs, and having complied therewith.

Patteson, J.—The rule will be nisi only, as the facts may be disputed.

Rule nisi, returnable in two days.

Motion for a certiorari to quash a coroner's inquisition, the inquest having been holden by a deputy-coroner, in the presence of the coroner himself.

Jervis, Q.C. moved for a certiorari to bring up a coroner's inquisition, with a view to quashing the same, it having been taken by the deputy coroner of a coroner of Worcestershire, the coroner himself being present, and the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83, s. 1, empowering the deputy to act only in cases of the illness or absence of the coroner. Rule granted.

Ex parte Charles Carus Wilson, Gent.

Habeas corpus to the keeper of the Queen's Prison in the island of Jersey to bring before this Court the body of a person in confinement there.

Peacock moved for a writ of habeas corpus, to be directed to John Kaudick, the keeper of the Queen's Prison, in the Island of Jersey, commanding him to bring up to this court the body of the applicant. It appeared from the affidavit on which the motion was made that on the 23rd of September last Mr. Wilson was taken into custody and lodged in the above prison by the deputy-viscount of the island ; that he demanded a copy of the warrant of commitment, upon which Kaudick, the keeper, told him he had nothing of the sort ; that some days after, Kaudick brought to the cell a paper, by which it appeared that he was condemned to pay a fine of 10*l.* and to make an apology, or in default to remain in gaol. The paper did not state why he was to pay a fine, nor what apology he was to make, or where to make it. The affidavit further stated that the applicant believed that the ground of his committal was a supposed contempt of the Royal Court of Jersey, which he believed was a court improperly constituted.

Patteson, J.—Does the writ of habeas corpus run from this court into Jersey ?

Peacock.—Yes, my lord ; the 11th section of the 31 Car. 2, c. 2, provides for its being directed, besides to every place in England and Wales and Berwick-upon-Tweed, to the islands of Jersey and Guernsey ; and the 56 Geo. 3, c. 100, contains a similar power. The applicant does not appear to be imprisoned by the judgment of any Court.

The learned counsel requested the Court to name the sum to be indorsed on the back of the writ to be paid by the prisoner as and for the expense of his being brought up, pursuant to s. 1 of 31 Car. 2.

His lordship named 5*l.* as the amount.

Writ granted.

ALLISON v. ADDY.

The rule that a motion for a new trial must be made within the four days is imperative, and where, therefore, counsel was instructed too late on the fourth day to move on that day, the Court refused to hear him on the following day.

Hoggins was instructed to move for a new trial in this case, on the points reserved by the Undersheriff of Yorkshire; he had not received his brief, however, until a quarter before seven o'clock last evening, which was the last day for moving, and long after the Court had broken up for the day.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Serjt. STEPHEN.)

Friday, Nov. 1.

Re ARCHIBALD.

Costs ordered out of insolvent's estate—Amending schedule.

This was the day appointed for the first examination of the insolvent.

Stone applied for leave to amend the schedule by adding the names of several omitted creditors and a better description of the insolvent's property. A previous application had been made by Mr. Packwood, the insolvent's attorney, after the schedule had been filed, and a few days only before this hearing, when his Honour refused to permit the amendments without an affidavit by the insolvent that he had not made the omissions wilfully. Stone now produced the required affidavit.

Homes, who appeared for the majority of the creditors, said, that the creditors were not desirous for a dismissal of the petition, therefore he would not oppose the application; but he asked for an adjournment, at the costs of the insolvent, to enable the creditors to examine into the amendments before hearing.

His HONOUR.—In this case it is stated that there is property sufficient in the end to pay all the creditors, and the insolvent has sworn that the omissions were not wilful. Let the examination be adjourned, the costs of this and the adjourned sitting to be paid out of the estate. Adjournment accordingly.

Re HENNESSEY.

Preference under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 19.

This insolvent was a trader, who had lately owed more than 300*l.*; but a short time previous to filing his petition he paid a composition to a number of creditors, who signed a release of their debts; the debts of the creditors remaining unsettled with did not exceed 300*l.*

Homes now appeared to shew cause against the final order, and contended that the payment of the composition within three months of the filing of the petition was a preference, and void under the 19th section of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96; that the creditors who took it might be compelled to refund, whereupon the original debts would revest, and the total amount of the insolvent's debts exceed 300*l.*

His HONOUR.—The payment was void only as against the assignees.

Homes.—It is the duty of the assignees to recover back the sums paid to these creditors, and to insert their names in the schedule for the full amount of their debts. Thus it must appear on the face of the proceedings that the debts exceed 300*l.* and the Court has no jurisdiction further in the case.

His HONOUR.—At present, the debts of the creditors who took the composition are barred, and they have signed a release, shewing that they have no claim on the insolvent. The payment of the composition was good for all purposes, except as against the assignees. I shall not refuse the final order on account of what the assignees may do hereafter.

Final order granted.

CASE.

John Dyer, for himself and other parties interested, appellant.

Ebenezer Gough (the objector), respondent.

The name of John Dyer appeared on the list of persons entitled to vote in the election of a member to serve in Parliament for the borough of Westbury, in respect of property situate in the parish of Westbury. Notices of objection proved. John Dyer appeared; and being called on to prove his qualification —"It was proved that the said John Dyer was at the time of making out the said list of voters, and still was, a person employed in collecting the duties on windows, and that he was appointed such collector by a warrant of appointment under the hands and seals of two of the commissioners for executing the several Acts of Parliament relating to the duties of assessed taxes. It was admitted that the two commissioners making the said appointment were also commissioners of the land-tax, but this fact did not appear in any way recited, or otherwise upon the said appointment."

The REVISING BARRISTER was of opinion that John Dyer was not entitled to have had his name inserted, as it appeared he was, at the time of making out the said list, and still was, a person employed in collecting the duties on windows within the meaning of 22 Geo. 3, c. 41, s. 1, and expunged his name accordingly.

The question for the opinion of the Court is, whether the Revising Barrister was right in so deciding. If the Court should be of opinion that the Revising Barrister was right, the name is to remain expunged; if otherwise, the name of John Dyer—house—Market-place, is to be inserted in the list of voters.

Eight other cases depending on this decision were consolidated.

John Dyer, for himself and others, signed the appeal, and agreed to prosecute.

Ebenezer Gough, the objector, signed as agreeing to appear and answer the appeal.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THE business of the Term claims all our available space, and there is nothing in the matter of legislation requiring special notice just now, save to note a growing hostility to the proposed new settlement law.

PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS.

PARLIAMENTARY SITTINGS, &c.—Returns moved for at different periods by Mr. Brotherton, Mr. Hawes, and Mr. Estcourt, having reference to the sittings of the House of Commons, the divisions of the House, and public and private Bills, have just been published for the use of members. From the first of these it appears, that from the 1st of February to the 9th of August (being the session of 1844) the House sat 119 days and four Saturdays, the hours of sitting being 906¾, of which 69 hours were after midnight, and the average time of sitting being 7 hours and 36 minutes. The total number of divisions in the same period was 167, of which 126 were on public matters before midnight, 28 on public matters after midnight, and 13 on private Bills before midnight. The largest division appears to have been upon a motion of Lord J. Russell's, for a committee of the whole House on the state of Ireland, when there were 554 members present, including the Speaker, of whom 227 voted for the motion, and 326 against it. The smallest division was on a motion for discharging Mr. B. Denison from further attendance on the poor relief (Gilbert's union) committee, when only 32 members voted, 12 being for the motion, and 20 against it. During the same session 136 public Bills which commenced in the House were introduced, and 23 Bills which commenced in the House of Lords. The Bill which occupied the longest period in passing was the Poor Law Amendment Bill, which occupied six months, the stages being as follows:—Bill ordered February 10, read a first time February 10, read a second time February 23, considered in committee May 10, July 4, 5, 12, 13, 15, 17, and 18; reported with amendments and considered July 24 and 25; read third time July 26; received the Royal assent August 9. The Bill which required the shortest period to pass was the Exchequer-bills Bill (18,407,300*l*.), which only occupied ten days. It was ordered and read a first time April 30, read a second time May 2, considered in committee May 3, reported May 6, read a third time May 7, and received the Royal assent May 10. The number of private Bills read a first time was 148; the number read a second time was 137; the number reported was 128; the number of private Bills brought from the Lords was 44, and the number of opposed Bills was 82.

Poor Law Returns.—A return, procured by Mr. Manners Sutton, has been printed by an order of the House of Commons, in which is afforded a good deal of information on several branches of the Poor Law Amendment Act. The statement extends to 109 printed pages. By the summary it appears that there were at Lady-day in the present year 587 unions in England and Wales, in which were comprised 13,803 parishes. The area in statute land extended to 28,791,726 acres; the population of the same in 1841 was 13,761,577, and the number of medical officers employed 2,825, which was an increase of 207, as compared with the preceding year. The amount of salaries of the medical officers was 103,198*l*. 1s. 6¾d. which was a decrease of 328*l*. 7s. 2¼d. from that of the previous year, notwithstanding the increase in the number employed. The fees for midwifery and surgery were 21,244*l*. 7s. 6d. which was an increase of 9,708*l*. 12s. 11d. The total amount paid to medical officers in one year was 151,442*l*. 9s. 0¾d. shewing an increase of 9,380*l*. 5s. 8¾d. There were in the year 108,898 paupers relieved in workhouses, making a decrease, compared with the preceding year, of 5,892. The rate per head of the total medical expenses, according to the population table of 1841, was 2¾d. making an increase of one-fourth, compared with the preceding year. The return does not include places not in union with the Poor Law Act, which contain a population of 2,150,180, nor the amount of fees paid to vaccinators. The importance of this return consists in the details given; there are nine Assistant-Commissioners mentioned, and information is afforded respecting the number of unions each one has under his charge, with the parishes therein comprised, and the number of statute acres to which each union extends. Mr. Austin has 67 unions, containing 1,585 parishes, the area of statute acres is 2,983,610, exclusive of Newport, Pontipool, and Crickhowel Unions, the extent of which was not known. The population in his district was, according to the census of 1841, 1,419,749. In Mr. Clement's district there are 53 unions, with 1,168 parishes, comprising 2,591,479 statute acres, with a population of 2,621,503; Mr. Hall has 72 unions, 838 parishes, 1,738,512 acres, and a population of 2,012,627; Mr. Hawley 58 unions, 1,862 parishes, 4,562,982 acres, and a population of [illegible]31,574; Mr. Parker 77 unions, 1,247 parishes, 3,438,364 acres, and a population of 1,015,597; Mr. Tufnell 70 unions, 1,590 parishes, 4,372,397 acres, and a population of 1,628,131; Colonel Wade 56 unions, 1,497 parishes, 1,021,174 acres (exclusive of the Welsh unions), and a population of 1,164,865. Sir John Walsham 69 unions, 1,891 parishes, 3,776,480 acres, and a population of 1,225,820; and Mr. Weale has 65 unions, 2,125 parishes, 4,306,228 acres, with a population of 1,541,511.

Lunacy in Ireland.—The report of the Inspector-general on the district, local, and private lunatic asylums in Ireland, for the last year, has only just been published, for the use of members of both Houses of Parliament, though it bears date June 1, 1844. The report commences by stating that a steady progressive improvement in the general management of the lunatic asylums in Ireland is clearly perceptible, and that when the improvements in contemplation shall have been completed, a most perfect system for affording relief to insane persons will be the result. On the 1st of January, 1843, there were in the ten district asylums which are under the immediate control of the Lord Lieutenant and Privy Council, 2,112 patients under treatment, and there were very few vacancies in any of them. Since then, all the vacancies have been filled; most of the asylums are overcrowded, and the number of applicants had considerably increased. To add to the untoward state of things, the number confined in gaols at the date of the report was 228, of whom 81 were reported as curable cases, if proper treatment could be afforded them. There were also upwards of 600 confined in the several union workhouses throughout Ireland, "which," adds the report, "are very imperfect, and not capable of affording the requisite accommodation." It is therefore recommended that increased accommodation for pauper lunatics in that country should immediately be provided. Whilst the number of patients has increased, however, the expense has diminished; for whereas in 1842 there were 2,061 patients in the district asylums, at an expense of 31,491*l*. 14s. 4d. there were last year 2,112 patients, at an expense of 29,132*l*. 8s. 1d. being an increase in the number of patients of 51, and a decrease in the expense of 2,359*l*. 6s. 3d. Of this number no less than 1,160 are incurable cases; but it is added, "in confirmation that a judicious and humane system of management is adopted, considerably more than four-fifths of the entire number have been industriously employed, and the total net produce of their labour for the previous year amounted to 1,609*l*. 6s. 4d." There are 13 duly licensed private lunatic asylums in Ireland, the whole of which the inspectors-general state that they have minutely inspected, and have found to be conducted upon a humane and judicious system.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

The Game Laws continue to be exposed to very merciless attacks from many quarters. We have read with some attention the leading articles and correspondents' letters upon the subject that have appeared in the daily papers, and we cannot find in one of them a sober practical proposition for the amendment of the law so fiercely assailed. Surely, they who abuse the existing law ought to be prepared with a substitute. But this the fault-finders never attempt, and then they turn round upon us, and call the lawyers narrow-minded and bigoted, and so forth, because we refuse to get rid of an existing law until a better be propounded. It is still more unjust to vilify the magistrates for merely doing their duty and executing the law as they find it. Nobody would assert that the Game Laws are incapable of improvement; but nobody who has not seriously set to work to construct a new one can have any conception of the difficulties of satisfactory legislation upon the subject. But, as we observed before, we suspect the clamourers look not for the improvement, but for the abrogation, of the law; for leave to go on any land and shoot anybody's hares and pheasants without let or hindrance.

Downing-street, Nov. 1.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Thomas Horne, esq. to be her Majesty's Attorney-General, and Valentine Fleming, esq. to be her Majesty's Solicitor-General, for the colony of Van Diemen's Land.

Whitehall, Nov. 4.—The Queen has been pleased to constitute and appoint Mark Napier, esq. Advocate, to be Sheriff Depute of the shire or Sheriffdom of Dumfries, in the room of Sir Thomas Kirkpatrick, bart. deceased.

The Queen has also been pleased to constitute and appoint George Dundas, esq. Advocate, to be Sheriff Depute of the shire or Sheriffdom of Selkirk, in the room of James Miller, esq. deceased.

Crime and its Increase.—We were glad to see that last week there was not a single committal to the county gaol. Such a circumstance is cheering, and leads to the hope that the proposed enlargement of the prison will be found unnecessary. The rogues probably sympathize with the ratepayers.—Hampshire Independent.

The South Wales Turnpike Trusts Commissioners have concluded their circuit, and have examined into the affairs of every trust in the southern division of the principality. The monetary affairs of the different trusts have been ascertained to be in a much more healthy state than was supposed to be the case. We understand the award to the creditors of the trusts will be given on the 1st of January, 1845, and of course the necessary arrangements for carrying the Act into effect by the appointment of county roads boards and district boards and officers will be commenced at the quarter sessions, which will take place in the week following the beginning of the year.—Welchman.

The following buildings are certified as places duly registered for solemnizing marriages, pursuant to the Act of 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 85:—The Independent Chapel, Bishop's Castle, Shropshire; Charles Rhodes, superintendent registrar. The Wesleyan Chapel, Lancaster; J. Grant, superintendent registrar. The Protestant Dissenting Chapel, Lancaster; J. Grant, superintendent registrar. The Independent Chapel, situated in Grindor-street, in the parish of Monmouth, in the county of Monmouth, in the district of Monmouth. The Bethel Chapel, situated at St Margaret's Bank, Rochester, in the parish of St. Margaret, in the county of Kent, in the district of Medway.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

As the reports of the Term claim so much space, we are compelled to curtail every other kind of intelligence, and we refer the reader to a notice among the leading articles for a detail of the adopted improvements, by which we hope to make those reports the most valuable, because the most complete and earliest, ever offered to the practitioner. The resignation of Mr. Justice Erskine, and the appointment of Mr. Erle to the vacant seat, is an event of the week which we must record here, though we have commented upon it elsewhere. Other matters of less moment will be found abundantly collected among the Legal Intelligence.

THE POWER TO DIS-BAR.

(From the Justice of the Peace.)

The question of the conduct of two members of the Bar has lately been the subject of much discussion, and some of the newspapers have spoken in a style of unfriendliness to the whole body, appearing or affecting to entertain the opinion that a barrister is a person privileged to misconduct himself; and that having once obtained the character of barrister, nothing short of a crime can occasion the forfeiture of it. Our excellent contemporary, The Legal Observer, has, in a recent number, unwillingly assisted to confirm this most erroneous opinion by referring to Lord Coke's reading (2 Inst. 212, 313) of the statute of Westminster 1, in which penalties are prescribed against serjeant counters (translated by him serjeants-at-law), and against attorneys, both of whom are sworn, and then noticing Lord Coke's statement that apprentices-at-law (barristers) are not sworn. This swearing, however, does not make any difference in their liability to be punished for misconduct. The statute includes them in its purview, if not in its actual phrase. But whether it does not actually name them, is doubtful; for though Lord Coke says, that "serjeant being a general word, counter—that is, narrator of the count or declaration—is added to it, to restrain it to a serjeant-at-law," still, there is some reason to question whether the learned commentator was quite right in this opinion. In all the copies of the statute of Westminster Primer (3 Edw. 1, c. 29) which we have seen, there is a comma after the word serjeant (it is so even in the copy printed in the second Institute), and narrator of the count or declaration, is a phrase which so exactly answers a junior counsel opening the pleadings—a task very likely to be performed by the apprentices, to qualify them for the future dignity of serjeant—that the probability seems to be in favour of the word counter being a distinct substantive appellation, and not a mere adjectival expression. But whether this criticism should be deemed to be well founded or not, it is plain that the judges have always treated all those actively engaged in the administration of justice as amenable to their summary jurisdiction. Lord Coke himself enumerates apprentices among those whose bad behaviour, in the "irregular reign" of Henry 3, had rendered this statute necessary; and afterwards, commenting on the word "auter," expressly says, "this extendeth to apprentices, attorneys, clerks of court, or any other;" and he afterwards (2 Inst. 216) says, "this punishment extends as well to the apprentice, as to the serjeant." His observation, therefore, that the apprentices are not sworn, could not be cited with effect to raise by implication a restriction on the application of the statute. But even if cited, it would not be allowed to have any weight against the practice of centuries. The judges have always claimed and exercised a jurisdiction over those who practise before them, and this jurisdiction is in itself so consonant to reason and to public policy, that no one can doubt that it would be maintained in these days. It has been several times exercised. (Palm. 288, 2 Salk. 517, 2 Wils. 369.) It is true that the act of dis-barring is now performed, if at all, by the benchers of that inn of court where the offending barrister was first called to the Bar. But against the decision of the benchers he has an appeal to the judges, whose power has again and again, since Mitchell's case (2 Atkins, 173), been declared to be that of visitors, and who can therefore exercise a very high degree of superintendence over the proceedings of inns of court. (Dugdale's Origines Jurid.; The King v. The Benchers of Gray's-inn, 1 Doug. 353; and Savage's case, there cited from Mr. Justice Gould's MS.; Boorman's case, March, 177; The King v. Benchers of Lincoln's-inn, 4 Barn. & Cress. 855; and in re The Justices of the Court of Common Pleas at Antigua, 1 Knapp's Priv. Coun. Cas. 267.) In the event, therefore, of the necessity arising, there is ample power in the benchers to visit punishment upon the head of a barrister against whom any serious misconduct is proved; and that, too, in addition to the penalty which the statute 3 Edw. I inflicts upon him in the shape of imprisonment; while, on the other hand, the facility of appealing to the judges would secure an innocent man from being unjustly, and a mistaken man from being harshly treated.

The power to punish is clear; the necessity for exercising that power must in every individual case be strictly proved. The power is that of inflicting ruin; and for that reason it ought not to be called into action upon any but really serious occasions. That such occasions may not arise, every one must hope. There is no surer safeguard for the liberty of the people than the unsullied honour of those who are engaged in administering the laws. The forms of law have often been employed, and with success, as the means of popular defence against tyranny of every kind; but should the character of the Legal Profession become degraded,—should the members of that Profession abuse their powers, betray their trust, and dishonour their station, those forms, instead of continuing the "shield of the innocent," would indeed become "the sword of the oppressor." The probability of such a result, however, diminishes every day; and the statute of Edward I, which has, to the honour of the Profession, been very rarely called into operation,—so rarely, that it is now deemed almost obsolete,—will become nothing but a historical fact, recording the necessity which existed in ancient times for providing by law and penal enactments against those offences which advancing intelligence, and improved morals and manners, have completely prevented.

OFFICIAL RAILWAY ANNOUNCEMENT.

(From Friday's London Gazette.)

Railway Department, Board of Trade, Whitehall, Oct. 24, 1844.

Referring to the notice in the Gazette of the 23rd of August, announcing the intention of the Railway Board to examine into certain schemes therein enumerated, with a view to the presentation to Parliament of minutes or reports thereon, in the event of their becoming the subjects of application to Parliament, the board hereby give notice, that it is further their intention to examine, with a similar view, into the following schemes—viz.:—

1. Schemes for extending railway communication to Goole and to Great Grimsby.

2. Branches from and extensions of the Eastern Counties and Northern and Eastern Railways.

3. Railway communication between London and Norwich, and other schemes, in the counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridge, and Essex.

4. Branches from the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway, Clydesdale Junction, and Edinburgh and Galashiels schemes.

5. Extension of the York and Scarborough and Hull and Selby Railways to Bridlington and Driffield.

6. Schemes for connecting Birkenhead with Manchester and Stockport.

7. South Junction through Manchester, Ashton and Stockport Junction, and Manchester and Buxton.

8. Bolton, Wigan, and Liverpool, and other schemes, in the district between the Bolton and Preston and the Liverpool and Manchester Railways.

9. Blackburn, Burnley, and Accrington, and other railway schemes, in the district between the Bolton and Preston and Manchester and Leeds Railways.

10. Birmingham and Shrewsbury and Shrewsbury and Chester schemes.

11. Worcester and Wolverhampton and other schemes for extending railway communication in Worcestershire and Staffordshire.

12. Schemes for extending railway communication to the Potteries.

13. Schemes for extending railway communication to Falmouth.

14. Schemes for extending railway communication to Staines and Windsor.

15. Schemes for making railway communication in Ireland from Dublin to Cork, Limerick, Cavan, Galway, Enniskillen, Londonderry, and Waterford; between Londonderry and Enniskillen; between Cork and Bandon; between Cork and Waterford; between Cork and Limerick; and completing railway communication between Dublin and Belfast.

The principal points into which inquiry will be made, in connection with the above schemes, are as follows:—

1st. The ability and bonâ fide intention of the promoters to prosecute their application to Parliament next session for Bills to authorize the several undertakings.

2nd. The advantages to be obtained, in a national point of view, in completing or extending important lines of railway communication.

3rd. The amount of local advantage afforded to the towns and districts more immediately affected.

4th. The engineering circumstances of the line, so far as may be necessary to form a general judgment of the character of the undertaking.

5th. The estimates of cost of construction, and of traffic and working expenses, so far as may be necessary to judge of the probability of the line being completed and efficiently worked in the event of its being sanctioned by Parliament, and with a view to drawing a comparison between the merit of competing lines of railway.

The inquiry, in conformity with the recommendation of the fifth report of the Select Committee on Railways, will not embrace questions of private property or interest, which will be reserved altogether for the consideration of the Legislature.

LAW INSTITUTION—SIX CLERKS' COMPENSATION.

In our report of the annual meeting of the above institution, on the 28th of August last, it was admitted by Mr. Bryan Holme, of New Inn, one of the committee of management, at that meeting, that the sub-committee of that institution, to whom the Act under which these enormous compensations had been awarded had been submitted by Mr. Wainwright (one of the compensated to whom the task of drawing it had been intrusted), consisted of Mr. Foss (not then a solicitor, and now no longer a member of the committee of management), of Mr. Martineau, and Mr. Follett, who had both obtained the appointment of taxing-masters under the Act, and of Mr. Field, who had written in defence of these compensations; neither Mr. Follett nor Mr. Field being upon the committee of management, and being, therefore, utterly incapable of forming part of a sub-committee of the committee of management. Mr. Foss, the chairman of the meeting, in order to relieve the society from the imputation cast upon it of having sanctioned these compensations, stated at the meeting that, though it was true papers had been submitted by the committee of management to the Master of the Rolls, it was not true that they had in any manner sanctioned these compensations: they had followed the example of Lord Cottenham in not giving any opinion upon the subject, trusting that they would have received due consideration in the House of Commons.

Mr. Martineau and Mr. Foss, the only members of the committee of management who were upon the pretended sub-committee, have since severally sent in their resignation as members of the committee of management; the society has, therefore, done all in its power to purge itself of the imputed offence of having sanctioned these compensations.

We are happy to learn that it is the intention of Mr. Watson to renew his motion in the Commons for inquiry into these compensations, and the several other charges on the suitors' funds, early in the ensuing session; in support of which motion a petition has been prepared from the solicitors of the Court of Chancery, and is lying for signature at the Law Institution in Chancery-lane.—Morning Chronicle.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEJEUNER.

On Saturday last, being the first day of Michaelmas Term, the Lord Chancellor gave his customary breakfast to the judges and law officers at his private mansion in George-street, Hanover-square. From these entertainments having been reduced from four annually to only two, namely, on Michaelmas and Easter Terms, the attendance of Queen's Counsel is now more numerous than was generally the case before, and on this occasion we remarked a very full meeting. Previous to the arrival of the judges, the Lord Mayor elect, attended by the Sheriffs, the Recorder, Sir Chapman Marshall, Sir Claudius Hunter, Sir John Key, and Alderman Farncomb, waited upon the Lord Chancellor, as usual upon the first day of Michaelmas Term, to receive the formal approval of the Queen to the election of the citizens of London.

The Lord Chancellor then received the judges. Among the guests of his lordship were the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, Lord Denman; the Master of the Rolls, Lord Langdale; the Vice-Chancellor of England, Sir Lancelot Shadwell; the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, Sir Nicholas C. Tindal; the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, Sir Frederick Pollock; Baron Parke, Baron Alderson, Justice Patteson, Baron Gurney, Justice Coleridge, Justice Coltman, Justice Maule, Baron Rolfe, Justice Wightman, Justice Cresswell; the Solicitor-General, Sir Frederick Thesiger; Sir Thomas Wilde, Mr. Horace Twiss (Vice-Chancellor of the County Palatine of Lancaster), Mr. Harrison, Mr. Pemberton, Mr. Law, Mr. Knight, Mr. W. F. Boteler, Mr. A. Simkinson, Mr. Joy, Mr. D. Pollock, Mr. J. Balguy, Mr. Serjeant Andrews, Mr. Serjeant Merewether, Mr. Serjeant Atcherley, Mr. Serjeant Talfourd, Commissioner Holroyd, Commissioner Barlow, Commissioner Winslow; Masters in Chancery—Sir Giffin Wilson, Mr. J. E. Dowdeswell, Mr. S. Duckworth, and Sir George Rose; Messrs. W. Erle, M. D. Hill, W. Burge, D. Wakefield, H. J. Shepherd, H. Barber, J. Miller, G. Spence, T. Kindersley, T. J. Platt, Fitzroy Kelly, C. Swanston, R. Alexander, J. Stuart, Wakeford, William Whateley, R. Godson, R. Bethel, C. J. Knowles, Thomas Baines, C. Austin, the Hon. Jas. Stuart Wortley, A. J. E. Cockburn, George J. Turner, D. Dundas, R. B. Armstrong, F. Whitmarsh, Matthews, Koe, Lowndes, Purves, Walker, Parker, Russell, Roupell, Anderton, L. Wigram, R. Parker, Davies, Cooper, Wood, &c.

The Attorney-General, Sir William Follett's, absence was unavoidable, the learned gentleman being on the Continent for the benefit of his health.

The entertainment was of the usual character, mulled wine being served round to the company as well as confectionaries.

At the conclusion of the déjeûner the party proceeded in procession to open the courts of law at Westminster.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Benjamin Roore, of Amlwch, in the county of Anglesey, gentleman, a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery

The Lord Chancellor entertained Lord Denman, Lord Langdale, Sir Lancelot Shadwell, Sir N. C. Tindal, Lord Chief Baron Pollock, Baron Parke, Justice Patteson, Baron Alderson, Justice Coleridge, Mr. Erle, Mr. H Twiss, Commissioner Barlow, and Mr. Stewart, at dinner on Tuesday evening, at the noble and learned lord's residence in George-street, Hanover-square.

Mr. Erle was on Monday sworn in as successor to Mr. Justice Erskine This appointment reflects credit upon the Government. It will give the highest satisfaction to the public, as it has already done to the Bar.

INDISPOSITION OF SIR L. SHADWELL.—The following notice was posted in the Vice Chancellor's Court on Wednesday morning.—"His Honour the Vice-Chancellor of England will not sit to-day in consequence of indisposition. Nov. 6, 1844."

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS, THURSDAY.—THE NEW JUDGE.—Mr. Erle, of the Western Circuit, at the sitting of the Court this morning, was admitted, with the usual ceremonies, to the estate and degree of a serjeant-at-law, preparatory to the learned gentleman's taking his seat on the bench of this court.

ATTORNEYS.—MICHAELMAS TERM.—194 gentlemen have given notice of their intention to apply to be admitted to practise during the present Term, and there are 21 notices for re-admission.

WINTER ASSIZES.—It having been finally decided to hold an additional gaol delivery at the following places, the judges met on Tuesday, and made the following arrangement. The days for holding the assizes have not been appointed:—Mr. Baron Alderson will preside at Winchester, Exeter, and Wells; Mr. Justice Patteson, at Nottingham, Derby, Leicester, and Warwick; Mr. Baron Gurney at Liverpool and Chester; Mr. Justice Williams, at Norwich, Bury, Chelmsford, and Maidstone; Mr. Justice Coleridge, at York and Durham; Mr. Justice Coltman, at Stafford, Shrewsbury, Worcester, and Gloucester.

REGISTRATION APPEALS.—Monday, the 18th of November, and Thursday, the 21st of November, are the days appointed by the Court for hearing the appeals from the decisions of the Revising Barristers.

CLERK OF THE CROWN-OFFICE IN CHANCERY.—By an Act of the last sessions (7 & 8 Vict. c. 77) the salary of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery was increased from 500*l.* to 1,000*l.* a year. Power was also given to give superannuations to officers and clerks in the office out of the fee fund, which fund was to be replenished, if occasion required by the consolidated fund.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

LINCOLNSHIRE LAW SOCIETY.

This Society has prepared the following petition upon a a subject of very great importance, to which the early attention of the Profession should be given:—

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The humble petition of the undersigned attorneys, solicitors, and proctors, residing at ———, within the county of Lincoln,

Sheweth,—That by an Act of Parliament, 25 Geo. 3, c. 80, for granting duties on certificates to be taken out by solicitors, attorneys, and others, every attorney, solicitor, and proctor, was required to take out an annual certificate, on which, if he resided in London or Westminster, or within the Bills of Mortality, there was charged a stamp duty of 5*l.*; and if he resided in any other part of Great Britain, a stamp duty of 3*l.*

That such annual certificate duties have, by various Acts, and ultimately by the Act 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, been increased to the following amounts, viz.:—

	£	s.	d.
Every attorney, solicitor, and proctor, residing within the limits of the twopenny post, having been admitted for three years or upwards	12	0	0
If he has not been admitted so long	6	0	0
If he resides elsewhere, and has been admitted three years	8	0	0
If he has not been admitted so long	4	0	0

That by the last-mentioned Act a stamp duty of 120*l.* is also charged upon all articles of clerkship to an attorney, solicitor, or proctor, without reference to the amount of premium; and a further stamp duty of 25*l.* is charged upon every admission of an attorney, solicitor, or proctor, and which, with the fees paid thereon, amount in the whole to the sum of 150*l.*; while the clerks or apprentices in all other businesses only pay a stamp duty on the indentures, calculated by a scale in proportion to the amount of premium paid, and in no case does such stamp duty exceed 60*l*

	£	s.	d.
That the duties on articles of clerkship, upon an average for 10 years, ending July 1835, have amounted annually to	69,960	0	0
On admissions, to	8,330	0	0

That the supposed profits of the business of an attorney, solicitor, or proctor, are greatly over-rated; for his bill of costs generally contain large sums of money disbursed for stamps, counsel's fees, and otherwise, which are frequently not repaid to him for so long a time, that the mere loss of interest on the capital very much reduces, and sometimes wholly exhausts, his profits.

That by the operation of some recent alterations in the law and the practice thereof, and enactments referring to the preparation of deeds and other documents, the profits of an attorney and a solicitor have been much diminished, although his disbursements continue very nearly the same as they have been for several years past.

That your petitioners, from their position in society and habits, are necessarily paying considerable sums to the assessed taxes, and also with members of the other profession) an income tax on their profits, which are uncertain and cease with their lives.

Your petitioners submit these duties, and particularly the duty on annual certificates, are not founded on any just and equal principle of taxation, but are a direct personal and partial tax upon persons exercising one particular branch of the legal profession only, whilst persons exercising other professions, and those engaged in the higher branch of the profession of the law, are exempt from similar taxations.

Your petitioners, therefore, most humbly pray your honourable House that they may be relieved, either wholly or in part, from the payment of the annual duty on certificates; or that your honourable House will be pleased to grant such further or other relief in the premises as to your wisdom and justice shall seem meet.

And your petitioners shall ever pray, &c.

THE LONDON POLYGLOT LEGAL AND COMMERCIAL TRANSLATING INSTITUTION AND BUREAU DES ETRANGERS.—A meeting, numerously attended by gentlemen connected with British and Foreign law and commerce and with the translating business, took place at Tom's Coffee-house, Cornhill, on the 6th inst. Charles Trautvetter, esq. in the chair, for the purpose of considering the best mode of carrying into effect the views of H. F. Edwards, esq. the promoter of the institution. A long discussion ensued, during which was elicited much curious information, and many facts brought under consideration highly important to the legal and commercial world. Ultimately resolutions were passed, highly laudatory of the plan, and pledging the meeting to carry it out in its fullest extent, and the meeting separated. It will be seen from an advertisement in another place, that the Institution has since been provisionally registered, pursuant to the Joint Stock Companies Act of the 7 & 8 Vict. c 110, which has just come into operation, the object of which, by the way, is as excellent as its provisions are ill-considered and badly arranged. The present locale of the new Institution is 15, New Broad-street.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT.

(Points as to Duty, &c.)

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I wish to draw the attention of yourself and your readers to the provision relative to stamp-duty under the above Act, and, as incidental thereto, the like provisions under two other Acts.

The words in this Act are, "Provided always, that every such deed shall be chargeable with the same stamp-duty as would have been chargeable if such conveyance had been made by lease and release." And truly may this be characterized as a rare specimen of legislative bungling. A deed shall have a certain effect, forsooth, provided always that it be chargeable with a certain duty! But is it made chargeable therewith? Does this proviso amount to a charge, or whence shall the chargeability arise? I submit, Mr. Editor, that this proviso does not constitute a charge, that there is no imposition of a duty to be levied and raised, &c.; and, consequently, that the proposed new deed, until it be by some means made chargeable within the language and literal meaning of the proviso, must needs be a mere nullity, and the Act itself, so far, a mere laughing-stock; worse even than that of the Great Britain steamer, or Sterne's hapless bird, with its "can't get out."

But, even were the provision sufficient to effect a chargeability, to what does it amount? Grant that the deed is chargeable,—to whom, by whom, when, and in what manner is the duty to be paid? Suppose such a deed produced in court, having only the conveyance-duty impressed, without any lease-duty; the adverse counsel objects to its being received in evidence: "This deed," says he, "is chargeable with further duty; here is the Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 26, s. 2, which says, 'every such deed shall be chargeable,' &c." "Nay, but," replies my Lord Judge, "the Act does not require that the parchment or paper should be stamped; for aught we know, the duty has been paid; at all events we cannot presume, nor can any one prove, non-payment; all we know is, that the Act made the deed chargeable; it does not go on to say that any duty shall be paid, still less that the duty shall be denoted on the instrument. If it has not been paid (which we really cannot presume), it would still remain chargeable, and that is all that can be said about it; the objection, therefore, must be overruled."

Passing over this, however, and taking up the question upon another ground, we are to observe, that such deed shall be chargeable with the same duty as would have been chargeable if such conveyance had been made by lease and release—not, be it observed, by lease for a year and release, but by any kind of lease and release. Now, at the present moment, there are four several heads of lease-duty in force, viz. the lease (or bargain and sale) for a year; the lease in consideration of fine; the lease at a yearly rent; and the lease not otherwise charged; and it is competent to her Majesty's liege subjects so to frame their conveyances as that any one or other of these leases shall form the basis or groundwork thereof; nay, by introducing a lease for less than a year in the same instrument with a release, there is an avoidance of all duty on the lease, as such, and hence a fifth chance of variance in the duty on a lease and release. Now, I pray you, my noble Lords and honourable Commons, which of these said duties are the identical ones wherewith our new deed is to be chargeable? Why, the learned judges themselves would be absolutely bewildered in the attempt to arrive at any legal solution of the question! In the all-honoured words of Lord Denman, it is "a mockery, a delusion, and a snare."

I write not thus from any bitterness towards the Act itself; on the contrary, I admire and welcome it in a general sense; but this careless botching about the stamp-duty I cannot help treating with the most unreserved contempt—the concoctors were no hands whatever at that part of the business, and better far that they had wiped their hands of it.

Turn we now to the previous lease-dispensing Act of 4 & 5 Vict. and we find the same fault was there committed in creating a chargeability without saying how, where, by whom, or when payable; but this is as nothing compared with the Wills Act of 1 Vict. s. 4, which enacts, that persons claiming copyholds under certain circumstances shall not be entitled to admittance except upon payment of such stamp duties, &c. as would have been payable in respect of the surrendering such estate to the use of the will (but upon which, in fact, there is no stamp-duty whatever payable); and then the clause goes on to provide against admittance under certain other circumstances, "except upon payment of all such stamp-duties," &c. as would have been payable if the ancestor had been admitted, &c.; but it is not so much as declared that the steward of the manor shall account for those duties, or that they shall be denoted upon any instrument, or in any other way made available to her Majesty's Exchequer, &c.; all these and the like regulations of a fiscal character being left entirely to the honour and good understanding of the manorial steward!!!

I advert to these latter instances as being links of the same chain with the former, and I have expressed myself the more unsparingly, seeing that these petty provisions in regard to a paltry stamp-duty are alike, in letter and in spirit, a disgrace to the enactments wherewith they are bound up.

I am yours, &c.

STAMPS ON PROMISSORY NOTES PAYABLE ON DEMAND, WITH INTEREST.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In reply to the question of your correspondent "Eboracus," contained in your last paper, "What is the proper stamp for a promissory note, payable on demand, as follows,—'On demand, I promise to pay to A B, or order, the sum of 250*l*. with lawful interest, &c.?'" I would observe that, as far as my experience goes, the practice of the Profession is to use the lower rate or class of stamp for such a note, and that 5*s*. would be the proper stamp in the case put. This practice seems reasonable enough, for what limit could be declared in regard to the amount of the sum to be recovered, and which, with the accruing interest, might not be demanded for six years? Under the recent Non Usury Acts, further obvious difficulties would arise if this practice were not correct. I would refer your correspondent to Pruessing v. Ing (4 B. & A. 204) and Wills v. Noot (4 Tyrhw. 726).

I am, &c.

THOS. LEONARD SHUCKARD.

ATTORNEY'S LETTER—RIGHT TO DEMAND FEE FOR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—This subject, which has been discussed by some of your correspondents in two or three of the late numbers of the LAW TIMES, is of considerable importance to the Profession, as well as to those of their clients who may be plaintiffs. An instance of some hardship lately occurred to a country attorney. He applied by letter, in the usual way, for payment of a debt due to a client, to which no attention was paid; a few hours after he had posted a letter instructing his agents to send him a writ of summons, a tender of the net debt was made; and although the writ was issued before he could countermand his instructions, his agents informed him the tender was effectual, and advised him to accept the debt. He ended the matter by doing so, and charged his own client costs out of pocket only.

Notwithstanding this, we apprehend an attorney's right to recover for letters nisi is recognized law. The subject is mooted in the 19th number of vol. 8 of the Justice of the Peace (May 11, 1844), and the editors of that work there give it as their opinion that he has such right, and treat the case of Morrison v. Summers (1 B. & Ad. 559) as establishing the point. Kirton v. Braithwaite (5 Law J. Exch. 165) does not appear to be conclusive. 6*s*. 8*d*. was an unreasonable charge for an application for payment of a debt of 8*l*. 6*s*. 9*d*.; besides, the case turns more upon the point whether the tender was made to a proper person, than upon the amount tendered. It appears that in the latter case the attention of the Court was never called to the previous case of Morrison v. Summers.

Yours respectfully,

Nov. 4, 1844. A CUMBERLAND FIRM.

STAMP ON PROMISSORY NOTE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In reply to the query by "Eboracus" as to the proper stamp on a promissory note for 250*l*. payable to A B or order, on demand, I beg to refer him to the case of Armitage v. Berry (5 Bing. 501; 3 M. & P. 211), from which he will learn that a 5*s*. stamp would be correct.

I am, &c. J. CHAPPLE.

ATTORNEYS' GOWNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Much has recently appeared in your paper relating to professional costume; it may perhaps be interesting to your readers to be informed that in this borough, where we have a court of record, the practice of attorneys wearing gowns is still preserved and very generally adopted. In this court, the attorneys, being advocates, the Recorder, who is the judge, is in the habit, as in the superior courts, of calling upon each attorney by name to move before the business of the sessions commences; and this mark of attention he does not pay to those gentlemen who appear without the usual professional costume, who also are not recognized by the Recorder on their first appearance in court, as is usual to those who pay the expected deference to the ancient practice.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,

SAM. B. LAMB.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—We, the undersigned attorneys resident at Colchester, beg to signify, that for the reasons stated by various correspondents in your journal, and otherwise, we are in favour of the practice of wearing the gowns whilst in the discharge of our public professional duties.

Dated the 30th day of October, 1844.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"H. W. J." submits the following question of professional etiquette for the advice of the experienced of our readers, by which he is desirous of being guided.

I cannot help congratulating you on the progress your periodical is making in the opinion of the Profession. With the respectable members of that Profession you will doubtless be regarded as the arbiter in most of our practical differences. My attention has lately been drawn to the query of "A. F." in No. 82 of the LAW TIMES, and the reply of "T. H. A." in No. 83.

I am concerned for the first mortgagee of an estate, other solicitors for a second mortgagee; both mortgages having been called in, the mortgagor, for a loan to discharge them, applied to a third solicitor, who, in ignorance of my being concerned, wrote to the solicitors of the second mortgagee for an abstract of the title, which, as far as they could, they furnished from an old abstract in their possession, and a draft of my client's security, which latter was some years since prepared in their office. Upon applying to verify abstract with title-deeds, which I hold as solicitor to the first mortgagee, the proposed mortgagee's solicitor, much my senior in the Profession, stated, upon learning the facts, that the solicitors to the second mortgagee had committed a breach of professional etiquette; that I should have furnished the abstract (with the exception, of course, of the second mortgage-deed), and was entitled to the fees for preparing that which he had received. The solicitors of the second mortgagee are highly respectable, and, if they erred at all, did so in ignorance of any practice to the contrary—not, I think, from any wish to deprive me of fees to which I might be entitled; and I should be much obliged for the opinion of your correspondents on the point, which may at least be our guide in future similar cases. I confess I was inclined to imagine, that, having the deeds, and being concerned for the first incumbrancer, the abstract should have been furnished from my office; still, as a young practitioner, I may be mistaken, and my present intention is not to argue the question, but merely to state the facts.

"P. B. T." thus addresses us on the subject of "SALE BY MORTGAGOR:"—

It appears to me most unreasonable that a mortgagee and his solicitor should have full control over a sale by a mortgagor, and that the mortgagee's solicitor should claim a right to furnish the abstracts at the mortgagor's cost. How would it be if the mortgage-money was paid off, without the title-deeds being given up, or a reconveyance being taken? Why, of course the mortgagee must re-convey and give up the title-deeds, on being satisfied that the deed of re-conveyance was properly made; and should he demur, or cause needless delay, I apprehend a Court of Equity would saddle upon him the expense of compelling a re-conveyance and delivery of the title-deeds, on a bill being filed for such purpose. As a young practitioner, I am anxious to receive a little information on this subject, and trust your valued correspondents, "T. H. A." and "A. F." will fully discuss it, as I apprehend it is one of great practical importance to all members of the Profession.

To Readers and Correspondents.

We have received the following on the subject of Attorneys' Gowns, but the heavy business of Term will compel us to limit correspondence upon this topic to letters only of special importance. It has had enough, and perhaps too much, of discussion. Thanks, however, to the following opponents of the scheme. R. GENT, CLERICUS, J. N. (Bolton), A. Z., A SUBSCRIBER, A CONSTANT SUBSCRIBER, who says, "there are old women enough in the Profession already," AN OLD PRACTITIONER; and to the following, who approve it: ALPHA BETA, MR. DURRANT, A GENT. One, &c. (Wakefield.)

CALEB and W. C. (Dudley) have been anticipated

A STAFFORDSHIRE SUBSCRIBER'S is a question of Law, and not of Professional practice, and, therefore, within the rule of exclusion.

ONE, &c.—His remarks on the necessity of union among the members of the Profession are excellent, but too long for insertion at this busy season.

E. C. E. (Sidmouth).—Thanks for the hint. It will be adopted.

A SUBSCRIBER (Birmingham).—We are sorry we cannot help him to the address he seeks.

T. B. (Norwich).—The publication of the pocket-book is not intended for the next, but for the following year.

AN ARTICLED CLERK may, we think, not only with safety, but with advantage, study two or three branches of law at once, reading them at different times in the day. He should always read pen in hand, and analyse and extract the principles deduced from the cases, as he goes along.

AN ARTICLED CLERK (Plymouth).—The subject has long been in deliberation, and we have planned a little work on the subject, which we now only wait for leisure to execute.

We should feel obliged to any reader who could give us information of the whereabouts of a person calling himself VALENTINE WILSON, a managing clerk. Also, of that of a MR. JAMES, calling himself proprietor of The Pianista, and who resided some time since at St. Leonard's, in Sussex, as we have heard.

LANCASTRIENSIS when we have room, and A SUBSCRIBER (Cheltenham).

W. J. POOLE (Kenilworth).—The date of the will is not known, but it was certainly before 1838.

G. M. Jun. is sent to the author of the article.

G. D. will find the subject noticed elsewhere.

A great number of documents relating to Sham Lawyers, the Heir-at-Law Society, and Professional Malpractices, have been received. They will be made use of in due season.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Volumes of the LAW TIMES, handsomely and uniformly bound, at 5s. 6d. each, if forwarded to the Office.

A PORTFOLIO, on a novel and convenient plan, for preserving the current numbers of the LAW TIMES for ready reference, may be had at the Office, or by order of any Bookseller in the country, price 5s. 6d.

An Alphabetical Index to the Cases in the current Volume of the LAW TIMES always lies at the Office for the purpose of Reference.

THE PUBLISHER begs to state, in reply to repeated applications, that he will readily accommodate the Subscribers to the LAW TIMES by procuring for them and inclosing in the parcels he may have occasion to transmit to them, any Books, Law Forms, or other Publications they may desire to receive from London. They may also, if they please, avail themselves of the transmission of their Volumes of the LAW TIMES for binding, to inclose any other books for the binder.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

THE PUBLISHER respectfully intimates that Subscribers who desire to avail themselves of the advantages of prepayment, should transmit their subscriptions for the current half-year in the course of the next week.

It is necessary again to state that the numbers of the completed Volumes, when transmitted for binding, should have some mark upon the parcel, by which they may be identified, and of which the Publisher should be advised by letter.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1844.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

IN consequence of the flood of reports, we purpose next week to publish a Supplement.

THE REPORTS.

WE have to announce to the subscribers to the LAW TIMES, and to the Profession generally, that arrangements have been completed by which a permanent value, as well as a vast increase of immediate interest, will be given to our Reports.

In addition to placing two reporters in each of the Common Law Courts, so that, by lightening the labour, each reporter will have time to digest his reports with care, and verify the citations, skilful short-hand writers will attend the courts and take verbatim reports of all written judgments.

By these arrangements, there will be placed in the hands of the Profession, within a week of their delivery, ALL THE DELIBERATE DECISIONS OF THE JUDGES, IN THEIR VERY WORDS, forming a complete record of the law, such as nowhere beside will exist, and invaluable for study and for reference, and unquestionable as authorities.

We may be permitted, perhaps, to direct attention to another peculiar feature of the Reports in the LAW TIMES. Here alone are found reported the arguments and cases cited in motions for rules nisi, and here only can the opposing party obtain information of the points he must be prepared to meet. Feeling the great value and importance of this to the Profession, the reporters have been requested to pay special attention for the future to such cases, and report them with more particularity, as being the only legal report of them that can be procured by the practitioner.

If any other desirable improvement should suggest itself to our readers, whose experience of the sort of information they want in practice will be our best instructor, we shall feel greatly obliged by a frank communication of suggestions either for addition or alteration.

THE NEW JUDGE.

THE vacant seat upon the judicial bench, occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Justice ERSKINE, has been worthily filled by Mr. ERLE, an appointment which, we venture to say, has received the unanimous approval of all the lawyers in England. The fitness of Mr. ERLE in all the qualifications for the high and responsible office of judge,—profound learning, large experience, an intellect remarkably clear and comprehensive, an unsullied reputation in public as in private life,—will be denied by no man of any faction. All other considerations apart, looking only to the individual, without reference to political or party considerations, we believe that if the votes of the Profession could have been taken, nineteen-twentieths of its members would instantly have selected Mr. ERLE from out the whole Bar of England for the post to which he has been invited by that which we cannot but applaud as a most generous and highly creditable resolution on the part of the Government.

It was therefore with great regret that we read the angry effusion of the Times on this appointment, an article which we are fain to attribute rather to its resolve to find fault with every act of the Ministry than to hostility to the principle of impartial choice of the best man without reference to party, of which so excellent an example has been set by the Government. For our own part, and we believe that in this we speak the opinion of the Profession, we look upon this appointment of a political opponent to the judicial bench, simply on the score of his fitness, to be a departure from the rules of party for the benefit of the public, that deserves the applause and respect of the country, proportioned to the courage required to defy the clamour of faction —a courage that may be estimated by the violence of the attack in the Times.

Undoubtedly the whole tendency of public opinion is now towards the overthrow of faction in all its shapes, and we hail this nomination, not only as in itself so excellent, but as cheering evidence that the public welfare is beginning to be preferred to party, and as an example, which we trust all future governments will follow, of preserving the ermine of the judge for the highest merit, without reference to politics or partisanship. The office of Judge is wholly unconnected with party, and so should be the selection for it. Then would the country at all times have the services of the very ablest men in the most responsible situation to which a citizen can be called.

While, therefore, we heartily congratulate Mr. Justice ERLE upon the honour so deservedly conferred upon him, still more do we congratulate the country that it has obtained such a judge; and the Ministry, for the admirable example it has set in thus preferring the claims of merit to the claims of party.

THE LAW INSTITUTION AND THE CHANCERY COMPENSATION JOB.

IT will be seen by a paragraph among our Legal Intelligence, which we extract from the Morning Chronicle, that the alleged connection of the Law Institution with the Chancery Compensations, about which so much mystery has been thrown, is denied. It seems, that though some of the committee had a hand in it, they acted in their individual, not in their official, capacities, and that they have since resigned their post.

It is due to an institution which might be made so beneficial to the Profession, if directed more to public and less to private ends, to promulgate as widely as possible this denial of a rumour which had gained extensive credit; for though the paragraph appears without authority affixed, we doubt not that it proceeds from some who desire that the suspicion should be removed.

Still, however, we think that the Profession, and especially the members of the Law Institution, ought not to be satisfied with the denial of so grave an imputation by means so questionable as an anonymous paragraph in a newspaper. It is due to themselves, and to the credit of the Institution, that they should institute the most rigorous inquiry into this mysterious affair. The strictest examination should be made as to all the facts; by whom the compensation job was really framed, where it was concocted, and if any person or persons ventured to take upon themselves to give to it this pretended sanction of the Institution. All this the members, nay, the whole Profession, whom they as a chartered body represent, have a right to demand, and it is their duty to be satisfied with nothing less than such a full revelation of all the facts as shall either prove to the world beyond the reach of doubt, that the Institution, as such, had nor art nor part in the compensation job; or, that proper measures have been taken to purge itself of those if any there be, who may have perverted a noble public institution to private ends.

THE LAWYERS' FLIGHT.

WE will not repeat all the jokes that have been going the round of Westminster-hall in consequence of the sudden irruption of some hundreds of Attorneys from the most remote, as well as from the nearest, of the provinces, and the crush and jostle in the courts when, to the amazement of Judges and Masters, they presented themselves en masse to be sworn and admitted.

It seems that a general impression had gone abroad that, by the provisions of the new Act, they could not practise in any court in which they had not been duly admitted; nor are we prepared to say that such an impression was an erroneous one.

We are fully aware of the conflict of opinion upon the construction of the provisions of the statute to which we allude, and we had at first designed to recommend to our readers to avoid the possibility of error by taking the first opportunity to be admitted in such of the courts as they had omitted when they were first enrolled.

But when we reflected that, after all, it was a doubtful question, and that it was a very serious matter to drag some hundreds of gentlemen from their homes and put them to considerable cost, which assuredly would have been the result of such a notice here, we declined the responsibility, and preferred to leave it to the agents of the country practitioners to advise them what to do.

And it would seem that the agents generally recommended that they be admitted in each of the courts; and in this, we think, they were right; for if an error, it is an error on the side of safety. But we would have qualified the advice thus:—"Do not incur the cost of coming up on purpose, but wait the first opportunity that might bring you to Town in Term-time. We are confident that, even if an admission be necessary, no member of the Profession would take advantage of your omission to defraud you of your costs."

THE JOINT STOCK COMPANIES ACTS.

BY great exertions our publisher succeeded in bringing out, on Tuesday morning, the SECOND EDITION of Mr. PATERSON'S Joint Stock Companies Acts, containing, in addition to the Introduction, Notes, and Index, the Regulations and Forms just issued by the Board of Trade.

The sheet containing these essential documents, which can be had nowhere beside, save in the Gazette (and that costs nearly as much as Mr. PATERSON'S volume), will be forwarded gratuitously to those who had previously purchased the first edition.

These sweeping statutes have not yet attracted in any quarter the attention they deserve. The entire law of joint stock companies is placed by them upon a new footing, and there is not a shareholder in the United Kingdom who is not directly and personally affected by their enactments. At the first glance they strike the reader as admirably calculated to protect the public against the frauds practised by bubble companies; but it may be questioned whether this advantage is not too dearly purchased by the shackles which are imposed upon bonâ fide speculations, and the liabilities thrown upon shareholders and all connected with them.

Great responsibility devolves upon attorneys in advising their clients upon dealings in joint stock shares, with the provisions of these statutes before them; and they should be especially careful to see that all the directions of the Legislature and the Board of Trade have been complied with before they permit an advance of money, or hazard the liabilities of the new law.

THE ADVERTISING COUNSEL.

MR. GEORGE FARREN, the advertising barrister, has sent us a copy of a long letter, which, he informs us, he has addressed to the Legal Observer, full of vituperation against us, of course, but very scant of vindication of himself. We shall see whether the Observer will take under its protection the mal-practices of the Profession. We suspect Mr. FARREN will find the Observer no more lenient to his "no fees required," and his printed scale of charges, than we have been.

But though it sickens us to dwell upon such a topic, we cannot but note again his extremely shabby mode of meeting our charge.

He begins by saying that he neither admits nor denies the printed paper in our possession, of which the copy in the LAW TIMES was verbatim. And then he ends by denying that he has ever asked or taken such a scale of fees as that stated in the advertisements.

It is, perhaps, scarcely necessary to observe, that our charge was not that he had taken them, for probably none had been offered; but that he had caused a paper to be printed, of which we published a copy, in which he announced the scale of fees, and the various other unprofessional doings set forth in that paper.

The simple question is, did Mr. FARREN cause that paper to be printed, with his name affixed, or did he not?

If he did, he is guilty of all that is imputed to him.

If he did not, why does he not disavow it?

But instead of this he says, "I neither admit nor deny it."

What an answer from a man charged with a grave misdoing!

Surely the manner of meeting it aggravates the offence. There would be courage at least in a bold avowal and defiance of opinion, and a confession of error and apology would have been received with generous forbearance by the Profession which has been thus wronged; but neither to admit nor deny is a lamentable endeavour at evasion, that cannot serve its purpose, and will be despised by every high-minded man.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The second number of Criminal Law Cases will be published on Tuesday; and the fifth number of the Real Property and Conveyancing Cases, and the first number of Practice Cases, are in the press.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Wednesday, Nov. 6.

BREVOR v. MAUDSLAY.

Practice—Payment of money to receiver.

Lloyd, on behalf of Mr. Erskine, who had been ordered in this cause to pay a large sum of money to the receiver, applied for an order that the money should be received in a fortnight. The time within which the money was previously ordered to be paid had elapsed. Ordered accordingly.

Re AUSTIN, a Lunatic.

A person of unsound mind, resident in a foreign country, and who has property in this country, will be ordered to be brought here that a commission of lunacy may be issued.

Walpole supported a petition for a commission by two persons who had been the guardians of the lunatic when an infant, and also were executors of a will under which he was entitled to various sums of stock, his only property. Since 1830 the lunatic had been confined in a lunatic asylum at Milan, and affidavits of various persons resident there, amongst whom were the British consul and an English surgeon, were read, to prove that, having been for some time subject to fits of maniacal violence, he had now sunk into complete imbecility. The guardians would undertake to bring him here, having the sanction of his lordship's order for that purpose. When brought here, there was some doubt into what county the commission should issue.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Let him be brought home before the commission is issued.

Walpole.—The authorities at Milan will not permit him to be removed without a commission.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Then let the commission be ordered to be issued, without stating into what county. Ordered accordingly.

Re JAMES, a Lunatic.

Authority in lunacy—Access to an alleged lunatic—Duty of the solicitor of the lunatic.

An order had been made on the 24th of July last, directing that Dr. Davis, of Birmingham, should have access to the alleged lunatic, and that Mr. Pasmore, his solicitor, should render Dr. Davis every kind of assistance in conducting his examination of the patient. No one was, it appeared, admitted to see him without a card from Mr. Pasmore.

Lowndes, for the petitioner, now applied for a further order on Mr. Pasmore, who had both refused and declined to assist Dr. Davis. On one occasion, when Dr. Davis had applied to Mr. Pasmore to go with him to the lunatic's, he had declined, alleging engagements; but on Dr. Davis afterwards going alone, he found Mr. Pasmore with the lunatic, who was in such a state of excitement that no satisfactory examination could then be made.

Goodere, for Mr. Pasmore.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If the solicitor does not do what he ought, other steps must be taken to enforce the order. He should be reminded that he is an officer of the Court, and that, if necessary, he may be compelled to perform its orders. The further time of a fortnight may be allowed for the purpose of enabling Dr. Davis to make his examination and report.

Re EDWARDS, a Lunatic.

Practice in Lunacy—Attendance on the inquiry.

Roupell supported a petition for a commission of lunacy against Jane Edwards. She was entitled, under the will of her father, to an annuity of 300*l.* and some further benefits after the death of her uncle.

Follett, for the executors of the father's will, made no objection to the commission, and did not wish to appear upon the inquiry.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The executors must be served with notice of all the proceedings, but they need not add to the costs by appearing on the execution of the commission, unless they shall in the progress of the matter find it necessary to do so.

Re WOODCOCK.

Practice—Allowance to lunatic for defence.

Lowndes, in support of a petition for a commission, handed to his lordship Dr. Southey's report.

The LORD CHANCELLOR (after reading it).—I do not think you will obtain a verdict from the jury. Dr. Southey states that, in reply to some questions he had put to the patient, with reference to his religious monomania, he said, "That every clergyman had a right to say that he is inspired, and that he was called upon to act as minister by the Holy Ghost." Dr. Southey thinks that his state was more nearly approaching to sanity then is usual in such cases, and that in all probability he will appear perfectly sane before a jury. Commission ordered to issue.

Kinglake, for the solicitor of the alleged lunatic, asked that Dr. Munro might be directed to pay him 100*l.* towards the defence. The only property he possessed was an annuity charged upon property which had come into Dr. Munro's hands.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I think 100*l.* should be paid.

Re BIRD, a deceased Lunatic.

Costs of a petition to compel the lunatic's heir to amend a bill—Solicitor on the record.

Wakefield and Heathfield moved in this matter that the plaintiff in the suit of Taylor v. Bence should be ordered to amend his bill, and pay the costs of this application. The plaintiff claimed to be the heir-at-law of the lunatic, and had filed a bill against the administratrix in her maiden name, for the recovery of such of her personal estate as had arisen from the surplus rents of real estates. The application had been made in July last, and his lordship had ordered the bill to be amended before the first day of the present Term. The bill was amended on the 28th of October last, and the object of the petitioners now was, that the plaintiff should pay the costs of the application. It appeared that, in January last, the defendant applied to Mr. Church, the plaintiff's solicitor, to amend the bill, and in May received a letter from Mr. Church, stating that he had nothing further to do with the matter, and that the plaintiff was to be met with at 51, Vauxhall-walk, Lambeth. No personal application appeared to have been made to the plaintiff, but the present petition was presented.

Baily, for the plaintiff, opposed the application, on the ground of the petitioner's misconduct, and because no personal application had been made to the plaintiff. The defendant is a married woman resident in Nova Scotia, who on the death of the lunatic, obtained administration as next of kin in her maiden name; but the fact of her marriage having been discovered, the first letters of administration were recalled, and final administration granted to her by her proper name, under which she had received all the personal estate. It was her own misconduct which rendered the amendment of the bill necessary. No application was made to the plaintiff, though Church, who had been his solicitor, had stated he had ceased to be so, and had given the plaintiff's address. The bill was amended before the Term.

Wakefield, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Church was the plaintiff's solicitor when the first application to amend the bill was made in January, and in May he refused to take any steps in the suit. Then the petition was presented, and Church continued to be the solicitor on the record up to the very day of the amendment, the 28th of October last. The application was made previously to the amendment, and was necessary. The defendant, therefore, ought to have the costs of the application.

Re RADCLIFFE, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Costs of next of kin on passing receiver's accounts.

Shee suported a petition by a former receiver of the lunatic's estates to confirm the commissioner's report, which stated that his accounts had been passed, and that, after retaining his costs out of the balance in his hands, the surplus might be paid over.

Chandless, for the next of kin, asked that the costs of the next of kin in atttending the passing of the accounts might also be paid out of the balance in the receiver's hands. That balance had been increased by a surcharge carried in, which had been allowed. The attendance of the next of kin was necessary on passing the receiver's accounts, and it was, of course, to have the costs of so attending. Ordered.

ROLLS COURT.

Thursday, Nov. 7.

HARROD v. GIBSON.

The common order to amend or discharge for irregularity, having been obtained one day after the time allowed by the 4th and 19th Orders of 3rd April, 1828, owing to a mistake in not taking into account leap-year, in reckoning.

The bill in this cause was filed on the 14th Nov. 1842, by the plaintiff, who is the public officer of the North Coal Mine Company. On the 6th of August, 1843, the bill was amended, and on the 10th Oct. following the answer thereto was put in. The last seal after Michaelmas Term 1843 was on the 18th Dec. and the common order to amend, now sought to be discharged, was obtained on the 2nd March, 1844. The two months allowed by the 4th Order of April 1828, at the expiration of which an answer is to be deemed sufficient, did not, therefore, by the 19th of the same Orders, begin to run till the 2nd of Nov. 1843, and, passing over the time between the 18th of Dec. and the 11th of Jan. 1844, would expire on the 19th of the latter month. The time within which, therefore, to obtain the common order to amend would, in ordinary years, expire on the 2nd of March, but 1844 being leap-year, it expired on the 1st, and the order being obtained on the 2nd, the defendant now moved to discharge it for irregularity. On the 11th of March notice of the order was served on the defendant in the usual way, but was only received without prejudice to the right to move to discharge.

Turner, for the motion, contended that the order was irregular, and

Anderson, on same side, insisted upon acquiescence, the motion to discharge not having been made till now, and also cited the following cases, as to dismissing bills for want of prosecution: Marriott v. Tarpley (8 Sim. 18); Barnes v. Taddle (10 Sim. 481); Goldsworthy v. Crossley (2 Hare, 639).

Bates, contrà.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The defendant is entitled to the order, but it is very strict practice. The order to amend is irregular, and I cannot make it regular; I cannot strike a day out of the calendar. Acquiescence is out of the question, for there was an agreement that the right to move should remain. The order must be discharged, but there is nothing to prevent you from applying for leave to amend.

Friday, Nov. 8.

Re WOOD.

In an affidavit by a solicitor it was sworn generally that his bill of costs was paid on a particular day (twelve months before the date of a petition, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, for taxation thereof); but in a written paper, purporting to be a statement of particulars, one item was, "on account of bill of costs, 100l.;" the evidence was not deemed conclusive, but the solicitor was allowed to file a more special affidavit.

Mr. Wood was the solicitor of the petitioner, Thomas Shillito, up to March 1844, when the latter became bankrupt, and as such solicitor delivered to the petitioner two several bills of costs. After the bankruptcy, the assignees discovered, as they conceived, improper items in the bills, and a petition was presented on the 5th of June, 1844, to have them referred to the taxing-master. The petitioner swore that the first bill was paid on the 27th of August, 1842, and referred to a written statement of the items of the account delivered to the petitioner. As to the second bill, some part thereof was paid in March 1843, but the last payment was made on the 5th of October following.

Turner, for the petitioner.—The written statement contains merely an account of certain debts received for the petitioner, and then an item in these words: "On account of bill of costs, 100*l.*" This is no settlement, it is no appropriation of the balance to the payment of the bill of costs.

Wright, contrà.—The solicitor swears the payment was made on the 27th of August, 1842, and the bankrupt does not deny this. The 100*l.* is exactly the balance of the bill of costs, after giving credit for the small debts received. It was paid, therefore, twelve months before the petition was presented. As to special circumstances, to make the bills taxable under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, they only produce the affidavit of Mr. Clapham, a solicitor, who swears he is informed, and believes, the assignees have discovered improper items, and that it would be so found if the bills were referred.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—This petition is for a reference of two bills for taxation after payment thereof. Two things, by the Act 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, are to be made out: first, that payment was made within twelve months before the petition was presented; and, secondly, special circumstances. As to the second bill, full payment has been made within the time, but the evidence is imperfect as to special circumstances. I will inquire and decide myself. As to the payment of the first bill, the evidence is not satisfactory. Mr. Wood has not thought fit to say when the items were received; and the written paper does not quite bear out his statement. After taking credit for several items, consisting of small debts received, he adds,—"To 100*l.* on account of bill of costs." This does not conclusively shew payment twelve months before the petition; the probability is in favour of it, but it is not quite clear. I shall, therefore, allow Mr. Wood to file a more special affidavit.

Re SPRINGALL.

The solicitor for several plaintiffs in a suit prosecutes an indictment against a defendant therein on the retainer of only one of the plaintiffs. A general order for taxation of two bills of costs, of which the second related only to the indictment, being obtained, and all the plaintiffs attending thereon in the taxing-master's office, the order cannot be varied on petition so as to relieve all but the one plaintiff from liability on the second bill.

Previous to 1842 the petitioners, among others, were plaintiffs in a cause, and sued by their next friend. Messrs. Springall, Thomson, and Power were the solicitors for the plaintiffs. In March 1844 a change of solicitors took place, and soon after Messrs. Springall and Co. delivered two bills of costs. Of these the second related solely to an indictment for perjury against one of the defendants, brought by the solicitors at the instance and on the retainer of Mellish Turner, one of the plaintiffs, alone, and not of the petitioners. An order of reference to the Master to tax generally having been obtained, the petitioners attended and took part in the proceedings; and now finding themselves made liable for both bills, they brought their petition to have the order varied.

Turner (Prior with him) insisted that the mere taking of the order to tax generally could not make the petitioners liable. The order itself states merely the limited retainer and the delivery of the bill.

Kindersley, contrà, was stopped by the Court.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The clause in the petition merely asks the order to be varied, not discharged; therefore they admit their liability by the order, and now come here and ask me to vary the order, that is, to alter their liability. They ought to have taken the objection before the taxing-master, and if he persisted, they should have refused to go on before him, and come here for relief. I must dismiss the petition with costs.

Common Law Courts.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Saturday, Nov. 2.

LOCKWOOD v. WOOD.

Stallage dues—Easement.

Watson, Q.C. moved to set aside the verdict in this action, and enter a verdict for the plaintiff, or for a new trial.

It was an action brought to recover money due to the plaintiff for stallage in the market of Easingwold. The defence was that the defendant, as an inhabitant of the place, was free from stallage dues. The motion was made on the ground of misdirection, and verdict against evidence. The right to exact stallage was traced down from a royal charter of 15 Chas. 1, granted in 1639, which granted the right of Easingwold likewise to hold markets and take tolls. Conveyances had been also put in at the trial, describing the site by metes and bounds where the fairs were held, and shewing that the tolls had been received for eighty years back. An exemption from tolls had been shewn in favour of the inhabitants of Easingwold, and the question arose how far toll included stallage, and whether the inhabitants of Easingwold were free of stallage. Proof on the part of the plaintiff had been given that three out of every five of the inhabitants paid stallage. On the other hand, six witnesses had been called to shew that there was an exemption founded on immemorial usage. The ground on which the motion was chiefly made was, that in the conveyance of the land by certain deeds, the rights of tollage and stallage were conveyed without any reservation, and that the inhabitants were assenting parties thereto. Rule nisi.

Thursday, Nov. 7.

DOE dem. EDNEY v. BENHAM.

Crowder, Q. C. moved for a rule to set aside verdict and enter nonsuit, in an action of ejectment, tried by Patteson, J. to recover a cottage occupied for more than twenty years by the defendant.

It appeared, at the trial, that the defendant, who was a poor man, had been employed by the parish to sweep the church, and it was therefore held that the parish was entitled to recover the cottage, as the defendant occupied in virtue of his employment, and that this was a payment of rent within the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 3. It was contended for the defendant, that it could not be so held, and that the parish was barred by the occupation of the premises for above twenty years.

Case cited: Doe dem. Robinson v. Hinde (2 M. & Rob. 441). Rule nisi.

DOE dem. EDNEY v. BILLET.

Crowder, Q. C. moved for a rule in this case to set aside the verdict, and enter a nonsuit against the same plaintiff as in the last case.

The defendant Billet had occupied another of the same cottages for upwards of twenty years, but having been employed to ring the parish bell at four and eight o'clock, it was held that this also was a payment of rent within the statute. In this case, however, there was a lease to the defendant, dated 1752, by the Mayor of Whitchurch and burgesses. The demise was in the mayor and corporation and the churchwardens. It was objected, for the defendant, at the trial, that the demise ought to have been in the corporation only, as it was corporation property. The learned judge held, that as there was a dispute whether the title was in the parish or the corporation, the parish might recover a moiety of the premises. The jury found that the present defendant had nothing to do with the corporation.

Cases cited: Doe dem. Jackson v. Hiley (10 B & Cr. 883); Goldsworth v. Knights (11 M. & W. 337). Rule nisi.

DOE dem. CLARKE v. SMALRIDGE.

Rent admitted to be due after expiration of notice proves a tenancy from year to year.

Crowder, Q. C. moved for a rule to set aside verdict and enter a nonsuit in this action, tried before Patteson, J. at Exeter.

The defendant held under a lease, terminating on Lady-day 1842. He continued in possession afterwards, and notice to quit was given to him at Michaelmas 1843, which notice would terminate at Lady-day 1843. After this notice had expired, a distress was put on the premises for 125*l.* for a balance of rent then due, thus shewing that rent beyond Lady-day was due, and that the relation of landlord and tenant was admitted to continue; which, it was contended for the defendant, created a tenancy from year to year, and gave the tenant certain occupancy for two years from Lady-day. (Doe dem. Chadburn v. Green, 9 Ad. & Ell.)

It was submitted that this could not be a tenancy on sufferance or at will, and could be alone a tenancy from year to year. The action, therefore, could not lie. Rule nisi.

GALE, Executrix of Ware, v. LEWIS.

Admissibility of record as evidence of facts not specially traversed therein—Notice of assignment of policy before bankruptcy.

Rogers, Q. C. moved for a rule to set aside the verdict and enter a nonsuit, or for a new trial in this action, which was tried before Patteson, J. at Bristol, on the ground, first, that the verdict was against evidence; second, the mode in which it was left to the jury, and, thirdly, that the facts went to the jury without proof.

It appeared that one Ware, now deceased, of whose estate the plaintiff is executrix, effected a policy of assurance in September 1838, on his life for 200*l.* which he shortly after assigned to one Benson, and subsequently, in March 1841, became bankrupt, and died in 1844. Two actions were then brought, one by the executrix of Ware, the other by the assignees under the bankruptcy, against the assurance company. On application to a judge in chambers, it was ordered that instead of an interpleader, the bankrupt's assignees should defend the action brought by the executrix, which was the action in question, the company being discharged from liability. The defendants pleaded the bankruptcy, the plaintiff replied the prior assignment, with a vast deal of matter which was read as evidence, and which the judge held to be evidence, because not traversed on the record. There was a rejoinder that the policy was a chose in action in the order and disposition of the bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy, according to the 72nd section of the Act. The surrejoinder traversed this. [PATTESON, J.—The real issue was, whether the company had due notice of the assignment. Mr. Loosemore's evidence was, that the assignment went to secure the original debt.] There was no evidence of those facts. [PATTESON, J.—They were facts stated in the replication, and not denied in the rejoinder, and I held, that being traversable, and not denied, they were evidence in the cause. There is a difference of opinion about this, but I do not know what is the use of reading pleadings to the jury otherwise.] They were traversable facts, they were traversed in the rejoinder, which is general, and applies to the whole replication. If not, they could not be evidence. (Bull v. Leigh, 1 Ad. & Ell. 804.) Loosemore was dead, and the evidence went to shew that notice of assignment was alone given to him, and that he was not the general agent of the office. The office had no sufficient notice of the assignment. Constructive knowledge is not enough. (Ex parte Patch, Jurist, 29th July, 1843; Ex parte Hennesey, 1 Connor, 559.) Although not called on to prove express facts, the jury must be satisfied that the bankrupt was, at the time of his bankruptcy, no longer the reputed owner. (Edwards v. Scott, 1 M. & Gr. 972.) This cannot be done by a mere admission on the record. (Edwards v. Groves, 2 M. & W. 642.)

Deeds poll—Reference.

Cockburn, Q. C. moved to set aside the verdict for the defendant in this action, or for a new trial.

SHANK v. BEARD.

Acts of ownership for 20 years—Description of land.

Crowder, Q. C. moved to set aside verdict for the plaintiff, or for a new trial.

This was an action of trespass, tried before Patteson, J. for breaking the plaintiff's close, and cutting down trees. The defendant pleaded not guilty, not possessed, and that the land belonged to one Saunders, under whom the plaintiff held. It appeared that the plaintiff came to certain property under the devise of his uncle, Admiral Shank, which abutted on the land of the defendant, between which, and contiguous to a mill leat, lay the slip of land in dispute, which had for many years formed a walk in the pleasure-grounds of the defendant, who, at the trial, proved acts of ownership for above twenty years. In 1807 land called the Tunnicliffe waste was conveyed to two trustees by the lord of the manor in trust for Admiral Shank. One question raised at the trial was whether the slip of land in dispute was sufficiently described thereby to pass under that grant. The misdirection complained of was that if this deed included the slip of land, mere acts of ownership would not suffice to take the property out of the plaintiff. Rule nisi.

ELLIOT v. STOBART.

Copyhold tenure—Manorial customs as to mines.

Knowles, Q.C. moved to set aside verdict and enter judgment non obstante veredicto, or for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection.

This was an action of trespass tried before Cresswell, J. at the last Durham assizes, for breaking and entering the close of the plaintiff, and digging mines therein. The chief defence made was under a plea of manorial custom, and to prove this custom evidence was admitted of the custom in an adjacent manor. It was proved, however, at the trial, that the manor in question had come into the possession of the see of Durham within the time of legal memory, and by records in the custody of the bishop, that though held under the same lord, the waste in question had been granted out anew by the lord to the bishop, who had a right to do as he wished with this portion of the manor. The plaintiff gave evidence of acts of working done in a corner of the manor as proof of the custom in the rest of that manor, and also as evidence of the custom in the neighbouring manor in question, to which objection was taken. The second plea alleged joint customs in the three manors of Bondham, Walsingham, and Evenwood, containing divers beds and mines, of which, from time immemorial, the lord of the manor had been seized, and that the bishop is the lord, and as lord is seized.

It appeared that though the bishop may grant a portion of the waste, if he leases it, he destroys an inalienable incident of copyhold tenure. (Bac. Ab. F. 2, Copyhold.) He had done so, and it was contended for the plaintiff that acts done in this leased portion could not support acts done in copyhold. Rule nisi.

DOE dem. ROBINSON and OTHERS v. BOUSFIELD.

Right of copyholder to demise only according to manorial license.

Knowles, Q.C. moved to set aside verdict in this action.

This was an ejectment brought to recover property of which a lease from one Scott to the lessor of the plaintiff was put in for a term of twelve years. The property in question was copyhold, and, according to the custom of the manor, the tenant had a right to demise for three years without license, but not more. It was objected at the trial that a copyholder, having a right to demise for a limited time, who demises for a longer time, thereby destroys his right and interest (Jackson v. Neale, Croke Eliz. 391), and that the party granting has a right to oust the tenant. (Com. Dig. Copyhold, K. 3.) Rule nisi.

REG. v. BARON DE RODE.

Petition of right—Statute of Limitations—Jurisdiction of Courts of Queen's Bench and Chancery.

M. D. Hill moved that the first issue in this case should be entered altogether for the suppliant non obstante veredicto. This was a petition of right, in which it was admitted that the second and third issues must be entered for the Crown. The chief ground for the motion was that arising upon the construction of the Statute of Limitations, which, it is contended, applies in terms to actions alone, and does not affect a petition of right, which is not an action. (Com. Dig. Action, C. 1.) It was also contended that there is no authority for the distinction between Acts accruing in one reign or another. (Banker's case; Howell's State Trials.) The last point to be raised is that of the respective jurisdiction to try petitions of right by the Courts of Queen's Bench or Chancery. In favour of the Queen's Bench as the proper tribunal, Hill cited Staunford on Prerogative, 72, 73, 77, 78; Rastall's Entries, 461; 8 Hen. 8, Pet. 1; Brooke's Abridg. Placit. 135; Leach's Rep. 3.

WILSON v. AINDERSON.

Misdirection—Construction of covenants in a deed.

This case was tried at Durham, before Cresswell, J. and a verdict found for the defendant.

Watson, Q. C. moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. The action was for money had and received.

Plea—Non assumpsit.

It appeared that the plaintiff had purchased a farm, over which two railways ran; one leading from Lord Londonderry's coal-pits, and the other from the Hetton colliery; and that Lord Londonderry had by deed covenanted to pay 500*l.* a year for the privilege of running his railway across the farm in question, and by a separate deed covenanted to pay 3*l.* per acre per annum for so much of the land of the farm as should be wanted for the construction of the railway "to the person or persons for the time being seized or possessed or entitled to the rents and profits" of the said farm. The plaintiff, on getting possession of the farm, wrote a letter to the defendant, offering in general terms to "let him the farm" for 100 guineas per annum; which offer the defendant, also by letter, accepted, and went into occupation of the farm, no lease being executed. After the defendant had been some time in the farm he received a sum of money in respect of the 3*l.* per acre secured by the deed from Lord Londonderry, which sum the plaintiff sought to recover back in this action. At the trial, Cresswell, J. left it to the jury to say whether, according to the custom of the country, this money should have been paid to the owner of the fee or to the occupier of the land.

Watson, Q. C. objected to this ruling; contending that the point so about to be left was one of law, and not of fact, and should be determined by his lordship; and that the only question the jury had to determine was the amount that had been received by the defendant.

His lordship, however, overruled the objection, and the jury found a verdict for the defendant.

Improper conduct of jury—Ground for a new trial, or to reduce damages.

In this case, Wilkins moved for a new trial, or to reduce the damages, on the ground of misconduct of the jury, and that the damages were excessive. The action was for a false imprisonment, and at the close of the trial the jury retired to consider their verdict, and were absent two hours; they then came into court, and stated their wish to be discharged from giving a verdict, as there was no chance of their agreeing. This was refused by the attorneys on both sides, and they again retired. After they had been shut up three hours more, they sent the officer into court to request some refreshment, stating that they were in a great state of bodily exhaustion, and that there was no chance of their agreeing in their verdict. Some refreshment was directed to be supplied them, by the consent of both parties to the cause, on which they sent for three gallons of stout, which they drank in ten minutes, and wished two gallons more sent them. On this being refused, they immediately came into court, and gave their verdict for the plaintiff, damages, 100*l.*

Specification of patent—Surface motion for roving of cotton wool.

Watson, Q.C. moved to set aside the verdict for the defendant on the first and fourth issues in this action, which was brought for violation of a patent. The defendant had pleaded, first, not guilty, and, fourthly, that the invention was not properly specified in the patent, which was for the carding, roving, coiling, and uncoiling cotton wool. The object of this invention is to take the roving off the cylinder and transfer it to the drawing-frame by means of a surface motion given to the upper cylinder in such manner that the wool is taken through the entire process at one uniform speed, and without straining or stretching it on an endless track, instead of by the old system, and by depositing the roving in tanks, in which it used to be carried by hand to the drawing-frame. The defect relied on in the specification was the omission of any mention of the surface motion, but Watson contended for the plaintiff that the patent was accompanied by such plates and plans of the rollers or cylinders as would at once shew any competent workman that the motion must be surface motion, and on this ground he moved to set the verdict aside.

Breach of articles of clerkship—Justification of dismissal.

Whitehurst moved to set verdict aside, or for new trial.

This was an action to recover damages for the breach of articles of clerkship. The defendant was the clerk of the plaintiff. Misconduct had been proved against the plaintiff in endeavouring to injure the defendant's interest, and play into the hands of an attorney named Gratton. The motion was made on the ground of misdirection, the judge having left it to the jury to find what was a justification of the dismissal of the defendant in point of law, instead of telling the jury what facts would amount to one. Several instances of misconduct had been proved on the part of the clerk, and it was sufficient that the jury should find one of these sufficient justification, and nowise necessary that they should find that the dismissal was grounded on such specific misconduct. The defendant was the secretary of a cricket club, and evidence was put in that he had ordered dinners and refreshment for the members. The defendant called witnesses to prove that a Mr. Marshall had presided at one of the dinners, that he was president of the club, and that the plaintiff had been heard to say that he had sent a bill of the dinners, &c. now charged to the defendant, to Mr. Marshall. This was the entire evidence for the defendant, and it was not shewn that he had ever repudiated the debt himself.

This was an action on an attorney's bill on a special undertaking for the sale of an estate. There were nine pleas on the record. The plaintiff and his deceased brother had been in partnership. The first point taken was as to the time when the contract accrued, and this turned chiefly on the fact of certain deeds relating to the Marquis of Anglesey's property or not. Another point was that of the non-production of these deeds, which it was contended for the plaintiff he was not required to produce, but only to allow of the inspection of them.

Delivery of paper books.

Pashley was about to move to set aside a conviction, when it was discovered that the paper books were not delivered by the plaintiff; the rule being, that they should be delivered for both sides before the case comes on to be heard. (Abraham v. Cook, 3 Dowling, 215; R. v. Stafford, 10 Ad. & Ell. 417.) Such had been the rule in civil proceedings, and the Court will not confirm a conviction on this ground, this being, Pashley submitted, the first time the rule had been enforced in a criminal matter. The plaintiff, too, would, if the rule were applied in this case, be subjected to a term of imprisonment upon a bad conviction, in the event of not being able to pay the fine. On these grounds he wished the case to stand over till the delivery of the paper books.

DENMAN, C.J.—We see no reason whatever why this rule should not be acted upon. The conviction may be ever so bad, but it is not because in particular cases of peculiar hardship we may have relaxed the rigour of the established rule that we are therefore to be told that we are bound to let a case stand over where no reason or pretext can be assigned for doing so.

Order quashed and conviction confirmed.

REG. v. ELLIS.

Where a county lunatic asylum is full, a lunatic pauper cannot on that account be sent elsewhere under 9 Geo. 4, c. 40.

On appeal against an order of justices for the removal of Harriet Ellice, a pauper lunatic, settled in St. Luke's, Middlesex, to a lunatic asylum in Surrey, the sessions quashed the order, subject to a case, by which it appeared that the Hanwell Lunatic Asylum, to which the pauper ought to be removed under 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, s. 38, had not at that time room for the accommodation of the pauper, and they therefore, in consideration of the premises, ordered that the pauper should be conveyed to a lunatic asylum in Surrey, and directed the parish of St. Luke to pay 6s. 6d. as the cost of the removal, and 10s. per week as the cost of the pauper's maintenance. The ground of appeal was that, under the Pauper Lunatics Act, the justices had no jurisdiction to send the pauper out of the county of Middlesex, in which county there were several duly licensed houses for the reception of lunatics.

Prendergast, in support of the order, contended that the justices could not extend the Act, which had clearly not provided for this case. If the Legislature has made no provision for cases of this sort, there were abundant means of providing for lunatics in workhouses. Whatever the equity of the case, the Court will adhere to the words of the statute. (Rex v. Chatford, 1 B. & Ald. 235.)

Bodkin (with whom was Pashley), contra.—The words of the 38th section—"to such county lunatic asylum as shall have been established,"—mean so established as to be fit to receive paupers. In this case the asylum was so full that the order, if made, to remove them would be nugatory. The preamble of the Act shewed that the intent is to deal summarily with persons found in a state of lunacy, but the result of confirming this order would be to throw such persons loose on the country, and 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, ss. 4 & 5 forbid the reception in workhouses of dangerous lunatics. In penal statutes only is a close construction of the words required. (Doe dem. Richardson v. Thomas, 9 Ad. & Ell. 556, per Coleridge, J.; Henderson v. Sherborne, 2 M. & Wel. 236; Edmonds v. Lawley, 6 M. & Wel. 285.) In these cases the statutes, being penal, were strictly construed, but the rule is otherwise where no penalty attaches. The meaning of an Act of Parliament is to be sought less according to its strict etymological exactness and propriety of terms than by such reasonable construction as shall avoid manifest inconvenience and repugnance to its obvious intent. Suppose all the county lunatic asylums were swallowed by an earthquake; are all the pauper lunatics to be thenceforth turned adrift? That construction must be put upon the statute most in unison with equity and reason. (Plowden, 363, 4; Bacon Dig, 3, 25.)

DENMAN, C. J.—The sessions have done quite right in quashing this order. This is a case for which it is clear that the legislature has made no provision. Were we to give the construction, and import the addition into this statute, which it is required of us to do, we should in effect be making a new Act of Parliament. Section 48 empowers the justices to order the removal of the pauper to the county lunatic asylum where one shall have been established, and only in case none shall have been established, then to some other asylum. Here a county lunatic asylum has been established, and there is no likelihood that, where once established, there will ever cease to be a county asylum. In this case there is no authority in the statute to remove pauper lunatics elsewhere, and the order of the sessions must be confirmed.

WILLIAMS, J.—The argument falls short in convincing us that we can uphold the order of the justices. It is said that the asylum, being full, is practically the same thing as no asylum; but for this case the Act has not provided, and we cannot supply that which it has not provided for.

COLERIDGE, J.—The object of the statute is to provide for the proper reception of lunatic paupers; it provides a new mode of getting rid of that miserable parochial care which had previously formed the chief resource. They are all to be sent to the proper place—the county asylum, and only where there is none, to a private or other asylum; this is the uniform practice, and it must be regarded as an inflexible rule that the justices are bound by the strict condition imposed by the Act, that only where there is no asylum, can the pauper be sent elsewhere. Here there was one. The order must be confirmed.

PAINE v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE STRAND UNION.

If a witness at an appeal is asked to attend for the benefit of a party, the party must pay him. Quære, Must contracts by guardians be under seal as corporations?

Platt, Q.C. moved to enter a nonsuit in this action on two grounds. This was an action brought to recover a sum of money for work and labour by the plaintiff, in executing a new survey of the parish of St. Clement Danes, which was one of the six parishes forming the Strand Union. The defendants entered into an agreement with the plaintiff and another to perform this work, and to furnish maps for the whole six parishes, for the sum of 250*l*. each. The plans and valuation were to be subject to the approbation of the Poor-law Commissioners and the Tithe Commissioners, without whose approval of them the parties were not to be paid; and it was further stipulated that the plaintiffs were to attend at the two next sessions after the completion of the valuation, in order to support it against any appeal. There was a time fixed for the completion of the plan and valuation, but they were not ready till long afterwards, and when they were sent in, it was found necessary to have a reduced plan made. This was executed by the plaintiff, and he attended at other sessions before the two mentioned in the contract, where he was not asked to attend. For this extra work he claimed payment. The only question for the jury was one of amount, and the verdict was for 23*l*. 2*s*. The questions raised were, 1st, whether the plaintiff could recover expenses for attending an appeal at sessions as a witness: it not be[illegible]g like an action.

COLERIDGE, J.—Was he subpœnaed? [No.] If you had put the stringency of the law upon him you might then say he had no claim to pay; but here you ask him to come, and he attends for your own benefit.

The 2nd question was, whether this contract, being by a corporation, could be binding, not being under seal. Trading companies had broken in upon that rule, but Arnold v. Mayor of Poole (4 M. & Gran. 840, and 2 Dowl. N. S. 574) has established the law qua corporations. (Mayor of Ludlow v. Charlton, 6 M. & Wel. 815.) The guardians here unite all the parishes, and are bound to act for all.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF KENT.

Mandamus—Return to—Who may make.

Platt, Q.C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the Commissioners of the Dartford and Crayford Navigation should not be allowed to make a return to a mandamus which had issued in [illegible] cause to the justices of Kent under 1 Wm. 4, c. 2[illegible].

It appeared that a mandamus had issued, commanding the justices to issue a distress warrant against the treasurer of the commissioners for alleged damage to the land of a party, who claimed compensation under their Act.

The justices had made a return, which did not raise the question which the commissioners wished to litigate, which was, that the justices had no jurisdiction to make the order. It further appeared that the rule nisi for a mandamus which had been granted had been enlarged until the next Term, of which the commissioners had no notice, and therefore they had been prevented from shewing cause against the rule being made absolute.

Case cited: Reg. v. St. Saviour's, Southwark (7 A. & E.).

BAX v. BEETHAM.

Where a party deals with an article, which he has ordered, to which nothing remains to be done to make it complete, as by directing a different lining to be placed in a cloak, this is exercising such a dominion over the article as constitutes an acceptance within the Statute of Frauds.

This was an action for goods sold and delivered, work and labour, and on account stated.

Plea—Never indebted.

Verdict for plaintiff for the amount claimed, with leave for the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit. A rule nisi having been obtained,

M. Chambers now shewed cause. It appeared that the plaintiff was a tailor in Regent-street, and that the defendant called at the plaintiff's shop, and ordered a cloak; he at the same time took a pattern of a lining to the shop, which he requested the plaintiff to get and line the cloak with. The order was to be a ready-money transactio[illegible], for a price agreed on. The cloak was made according to order, and sent home, but the defendant, who was present when the cloak was brought to his house, requested the man to take back the cloak and tell his master to take out the lining and make it into a chaise-cloth, as it was too heavy, and did not answer so well as he thought it would, and line the cloak with silk. This was accordingly done, and the cloak and chaise-cloth sent to the defendant's house; the defendant then objected to the fit of the cloak, but wished the chaise-cloth to be left. This the man would not do, as it was a ready-money transaction, and the articles were both taken back. Shortly after this the plaintiff brought his action, and at the trial it was objected that there was no delivery or acceptance within the Statute of Frauds. On these facts it was now contended that direction of the defendant to have the cloak re-lined was a sufficient dealing with the property to constitute an acceptance within the statute, and that the act of ordering the lining to be taken out and made into a chaise cloth was exercising such dominion over the article as constituted an acceptance.

By the COURT.—The question here is, whether there is any evidence in this case of an acceptance of goods to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. We think there is. The article was clearly taken into the possession of the defendant by the act of desiring the alteration of the lining to be made; no objection was made to the fit of the article when it was first sent home, and nothing remained to be done to complete the cloak until the alteration as to the lining. The jury have found that there was a sufficient acceptance, and we shall not disturb that verdict.

LONDON ASSURANCE v. BOLD.

A surety for A. "as agent," is not a surety for A. and B. as joint agents, though the guarantor knew there was none other than a joint agency at the time he made a bond as surety for A.

This was a special case, whereby it appeared that, in the year 1836, Thomas Addison, jun. with one Bolton, became joint agents for the plaintiffs at Liverpool for the negotiation of their business and the receipt of moneys on the company's behalf. The defendant at the same time entered into a bond conditioned for the due account of moneys received by Addison in these terms: "Whereas the said Addison has been appointed agent to the London Assurance, if the said A. shall in his said office or employment duly and faithfully demean and conduct himself, and whenever thereto required, pay, account, and deliver to the said corporation all and every sum or sums of money he the said A. shall or may hereafter receive for and on account of the said company as such agent, then this bond," &c. Up to this time Bolton had a board up at his office in Liverpool, with his name alone on it: but after the appointment of himself and Addison as agents to the assurance, the two names were placed together on the board as partners.

In June 1841 the agents failed. On the 25th June, and the 7th August, the Assurance wrote to Bold, the surety, informing him that the debt due to them from the agents was 445*l*. 6*s*. 10*d*. which they requested him to pay. On the 8th August the defendant Bold answered, saying that he would make the necessary arrangements, and begged to see the bond. He subsequently refused payment, on the ground that he was responsible for Addison alone in his capacity of agent; that no such capacity existed, inasmuch as he was joint agent with another, and not sole agent, as the bond implied.

Kelly, Q. C. for the plaintiffs, contended, that as the only capacity in which Addison could become accountable to the assurance at all, was a joint and not a separate agency, it must be taken to have been the intent of the parties at the time that the defendant should be responsible for him in that joint capacity; that the fact of the joint agency was fully known to the defendant at the time he entered into the bond, and that if it were not so intended, the bond was nonsense and a mere nullity; that this could not be the intent of the parties at the time, and that to the intent the Court must look. (Harper v. Lucas, 1 T. R. 291, n.) The facts themselves, Kelly argued, as well as the condition and recital in the bond, shew what must have been the intent. This case is distinguishable from Bellairs v. Ebsworth (3 Camp. 53); and where the bond admits of two constructions, the attendant circumstances must be taken into account. The allegation that A received money, would be as well satisfied by the receipt of A and B as of A alone. So in this case, obligation to answer for one of two joint agents is an obligation for both. (Richards v. Heather, 1 Barn. & Ald. 29.) This is not a latent ambiguity. The law says the receipt of one is the receipt of both.

Watson, Q. C. contrà.—The argument of Kelly goes to make the defendant surety for two, when he in terms undertook for only one. The true mode of construing a bond is to take its plain terms, and not to import external circumstances. (Chapman v. Beckington, 3 G. & Dav. 33.) He was stopped by the Court.

DENMAN, C. J.—The question in this case is what does the bond mean? When A makes himself surety for B, does he become surety for C likewise? It appears, according to the recital, that Addison was agent for the assurance, and then the instrument goes on to say that the defendant binds himself for Addison alone, without mention of the other agent. Mr. Kelly says that the evidence shews that the defendant must have been aware that there was a joint agent, and that therefore the intent must have been to become surety for both agents; but I think that the more clearly it appears that the defendant knew that there was a joint agency, the stronger does the meaning of the defendant appear in mentioning one only to be surety for that one alone. There is no difficulty in coming to a conclusion without the aid of cases. Mr. Kelly put an ingenious turn in his favour upon the engagement in Bellairs v. Ebsworth, of the defendant to be bound for the money which Nott should receive. I think the case quite against Mr. Kelly. Lord Ellenborough, with his usual good sense, says, "When the plaintiff entrusted their agency to the new firm, the defendant's responsibility was at an end. He by no means undertook for the good conduct of any future partner with whom P. Nott might associate. The recital and the whole scope of the condition shews that the suretiship was confined to P. Nott individually." We are told we must look to the intent of the parties; we do so, and think the intent is quite plain here to be bound for Addison alone. The expression of alarm in the letter of the defendant before his memory was refreshed with a sight of the bond is quite consistent with that intent.

WILLIAMS, J.—Nothing can be much more distinct than a security for the accountability of A, and a security for the accountability of A and B. There would be no limit to the responsibility of sureties if the guarantor has the good conduct of two individuals to answer for, when he in terms undertakes alone for the good conduct of one. Nothing that Mr. Kelly has said has, in my judgment, extended the meaning of the bond one iota beyond its express terms. Some cases, certainly, in his argument, went to shew that parol evidence was admissible to explain latent ambiguities in the devise of lands; but there is nothing of the sort here. The defendant uses the letters in question to shew whether there was a breach, or not, of the bond itself, and not to extend its terms. Though Mr. Kelly divided his argument into two or three distinct heads, they really resolve themselves into one question,—does the language of the instrument confine the responsibility of the defendant to the party he specifies? I think it does, and to extend its scope is to violate the bond.

COLERIDGE, J. and WIGHTMAN, J. gave similar judgments.

CROWN PAPER.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF SKIPTON.

Order of removal under 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, s. 38—Requisites of—Appeal against—Who proper party to be respondent.

In this case Hall had obtained a rule calling on the defendants to shew cause why an order of sessions, confirming a certain order of justices, should not be quashed. The order of justices was made under 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, s. 38, for the removal of a pauper lunatic to an asylum, and for the payment of certain expenses by the overseers of the parish, in which the order adjudged the pauper to be settled.

Bliss now shewed cause; but, as it appeared that the order of justices, which was in the form No. 5 in the schedule of the Act, as required by section 38, did not contain any statement that the surgeon called in by the justices to examine the lunatic, had been examined on oath, or that the justices themselves "upon view and examination of the said poor person, or from other proof," to be set out, "were satisfied" that the pauper was insane;

The COURT were of opinion that the order of the justices was bad, and were about to quash it, when it was objected to by

Bliss.—That as the justices had been made respondents in the appeal, instead of the clerk of the peace, as required by the 54th sec. of 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, there had been no appeal in fact, and therefore the order of the justices was not before the Court.

Cases cited: R. v. The Justices of Kent (2 Q. B 686); R. v. The Justices of Middlesex (5 A. & E. 626); R. v. Hareby (Bur. S. C. 103). The rule also obtained by the other side was only for quashing the order of sessions.

Hall, contrà.

By the COURT.—We have looked at the rule, and find that it is confined to the order of sessions, therefore as that is the only point before the Court, we cannot direct the order of justices to be quashed, but only the order of sessions.

Rule absolute to quash order of sessions

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF FAZIBEY.

Special case from sessions—Form of.

In this case the sessions had confirmed an order of removal subject to the opinion of this Court, or a special case, the submission of which concluded in these words, "and if the Court shall be of opinion that the said objections are not fatal, and that the sessions ought to have heard the appeal, continuances to be entered and the appeal heard."

Archbold, for the respondents, contended that the form of the submission was a bar to the case being heard, as the Court had decided in several late cases.

DENMAN, C. J.—We have repeatedly said that we will not hear cases sent up to us in this form, and the reason we have given has been to prevent continued litigation.

Bain, for the appellants.—The rule is for quashing the order of sessions generally.

COLERIDGE, J.—That will not help you, for we can only quash the order of sessions on the case, and that is so framed as to prevent our entertaining it.

Rule for quashing order of sessions discharged.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Saturday, Nov. 9.

RUSSELL v. KNOWLES.

Where the party to be served with a notice has a dwelling-house, service at his office, although his clerks say they have communicated the fact of service to him, and it also appears he keeps out of the way, is not sufficient.

Dowling, Serjt.—In this case, on a former occasion, the Court had said that calls made at the office of the defendant were not sufficient. In the present instance the persons employed by the defendant at his office had stated they had communicated the fact of service of the notice to the defendant: and in addition it was sworn the defendant keeps out of the way.

By the COURT.—The common course is to go to the party's dwelling-house. Rule refused.

DOE dem. WYATT v. ROE.

Where ejectment is brought for unfinished buildings which appear to be deserted, the possession must be treated as a case of vacant possession.

C. Jones, Serjt. moved for a rule nisi for judgment against the casual ejector.

The service had been made at the last known place of abode of the plaintiff, by delivering there a copy of the declaration to a man whom the deponent believed to be in communication with the defendant. The premises sought to be recovered were two unfinished buildings, which had been for some time deserted.

By the COURT.—This must be treated as a case of vacant possession. The course to be followed is pointed out in Arch. Prac. 770. Rule refused.

DARLEY v. FIELD.

Writ of summons—Defective indorsement.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule nisi why the writ of summons in this cause should not be set aside with costs; the indorsement on the writ not conforming with the R. H. 2 Wm. 4, r. 11; the indorsement in this case stating that the plaintiff claimed 26*l.* 5s. 11½d. together with interest thereon, at the time when certain bills of exchange became due. There is nothing to shew how much interest was due or what were the bills referred to, or what was their date. Rule nisi.

MAKEPIECE v. LORAINE.

Where an action for obstructing a stream was referred to an arbitrator, with power "to give such directions as he should think proper consistently with the legal rights of the parties;" Held, that he was not bound to give any directions as to the use of the stream.

Shee, Serjt. moved, on behalf of the plaintiff, to set aside the award which had been made in this cause, or to have it sent back to the arbitrator, under the power for that purpose, given to the Court by the submission in case of dispute arising on the award.

The action was on the case for the obstruction of a stream which worked the plaintiff's mill.

The defendant pleaded not guilty; that the stream ought not to have flowed as in the declaration alleged; and, lastly, a justification by reason of the plaintiff having accelerated the flowing of the water and caused an injury to a dwelling-house of the defendant situate below the plaintiff's mill.

To this last plea the plaintiff replied de injuriâ, with a new assignment of excess, and on the others joined issue.

The cause was referred at Nisi Prius, with power to the arbitrator "to give such directions as he should think proper consistently with the legal rights of the parties." The arbitrator, by his award, decided all the issues against the plaintiff, except the issue on the plea of not guilty.

It was submitted, on the authority of the opinion of Parke, B. in Angus v. Redford (11 M. & W. 69), that the arbitrator should have given some directions as to the use of the stream, and that the award was, therefore, bad, or at all events the award ought to be referred to the arbitrator for determining the right of the plaintiff as to the use of the water for his mill.

The COURT said that the arbitrator was not bound to give any such directions; that he had, by his award, in substance found that the plaintiff had no right to the stream; and that, as a dry point of law, which was the only way in which the question appeared then before the Court, the award was good. As they had no statement of the facts deposed to, shewing any limited right of the plaintiff to the use of the stream, they would not refer it to the arbitrator. Rule refused.

ILEY v. FRANKENSTEIN.

Goods sold on a contract of sale or return on notice. The judge left it to the jury to say whether the goods were sold on sale or return, or out and out. There being no evidence of the goods being kept beyond a reasonable time:—Held, that this direction was right.

This was an action for goods sold and delivered.

Plea—Non assumpsit.

At the trial before Maule, J. the plaintiff proved his case by simply giving evidence of the delivery of the goods in question. The defendant, on the other hand, proved that the goods were delivered on sale or return, on notice. The learned judge left it to the jury to say whether the goods were sold on sale or return, or out and out, and the jury found a verdict for the defendant.

Murphy, Serjt. now shewed cause against a rule obtained by Dowling, Serjt. to set aside this verdict on the ground of misdirection, in not having left to the jury the question whether the defendant had not, by his conduct in keeping the goods beyond a reasonable time, rendered the sale an absolute one.

Dowling, Serjt. in support of the rule, relied on the cases of Bianchi v. Nash (1 M. & W. 545), and Beverley v. Lincoln Gas-light and Coke Company (6 Ad. & Ell. 829).

The COURT said that the plaintiff had only given primâ facie evidence of a contract of sale, which was quite consistent with the evidence given by the defendant of its being a sale on the terms that he was to keep them until sold, or until they should be demanded by the plaintiff; that the present was to be distinguished from the cases cited on the part of the plaintiff, as they only shewed that a conditional sale became absolute on the condition being performed; but here there was no evidence of its being such a conditional sale as suggested by the plaintiff, but only of its being on sale or return, which was shewn to mean that they might be kept until notice to return. The question of retaining them beyond a reasonable time did not arise: there was no evidence in support of such, and the direction of the learned judge was therefore right. Rule discharged.

COVINGTON v. [illegible].

Stay of proceedings.

Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule nisi why the proceedings in this action should not be stayed, on the ground that the plaintiff has received the amount of the debt by virtue of proceedings taken in the Court of Bankruptcy. Rule nisi.

Cases cited Kemp v. Potter (6 Taunt. 549); 4 Rose's Bank Cases 394, Ransford v. Barry (8 Dowl 607). This case is said not to be correctly reported. See 3 Jurist, 655, S C.—(Reporter.)

METCALF and ANOTHER v. BUSBY.

New trial—Payment of costs.

Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule for a new trial.

Shee, Serjt. contra.

By the COURT.—We are inclined to think it will be more satisfactory to give another opportunity of trying the question.

Rule absolute on payment of costs. The plea to be taken as an ended at Nisi Prius.

POOLE v. CRANSHAW.

Taxation of costs. Lord Denman's Act.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule nisi why the Master should not review his taxation in this cause, or why he should not tax to the plaintiff the full costs of the action. There were issues of law which had been found for the plaintiff, and issues of fact on which a general verdict had passed for the plaintiff for 20s. The Master had refused costs on the ground that the verdict was for less than 40s. But in this case it was contended Lord Denman's Act, the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, did not apply. Taylor v. R[illegible] (1 [illegible] Q B), was strictly in point. Rule nisi.

Wednesday, Nov. 13.

NICHOLS v. PAYN.

Debt for work and labour.—Plea to the further maintenance, that defendant [illegible] presented a petition for protection to the Court of Bankruptcy, under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, whereupon all the estate and effects of defendant vested in one W. the official assignee, and that after action the commissioner made a final order for the protection of the person of the defendant from all process, and for vesting his estate and effects in the said W. the official assignee.—Held, on special demurrer, that the plea was properly pleaded to the further maintenance and not in bar [illegible], that it was not necessary to allege that such notice had been given as is required by the first section of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, but that the plea was bad for not shewing that the final order was for distribution or for vesting the estate in the official together with a creditor's assignee.

The declaration in this action was for work and labour. The defendant pleaded to the further maintenance that after the accruing of the debts and before the commencement of the suit the defendant being a trader within the meaning of the statutes in force relating to bankrupts, and having resided twelve calendar months in London and having given due notice then duly presented a petition for protection from process to the Court of Bankruptcy, which petition was duly subscribed by the defendant, and contained all such matters as were required by the Act, and that upon the presentation of such petition all the estate and effects of the defendant became vested in [illegible] Whitmore, the official assignee duly nominated by R. Fane, esq. the commissioner then acting in the matter of such petition, that the petition was duly filed, and that after the filing thereof, and after the commencement of the action, R. Fane, esq. then being the commissioner in the said Court of Bankruptcy to whom the petition had been referred made a final order according to the provisions of the said Act, for the protection of the person of the defendant from all process, and for the vesting his estate and effects in the said F. Whitmore, the official assignee duly named by such commissioner. The plea then alleged that such order still remained in full force, and prayed judgment if the plaintiff ought further to maintain his action. To this plea there was a special demurrer assigning, amongst other causes, that it did not sufficiently appear from the plea that notice was inserted twice in the London Gazette and some newspapers circulating within the county where the defendant resided, that the final order was not shewn to be a final order for the distribution of the defendant's effects, or for vesting the estate and effects in Whitmore, the official assignee, together with an assignee chosen by the creditors, and that the plea, if a defence at all, was in bar of the whole action, and ought not to be pleaded to the further maintenance.

Manning, Serjt. in support of the demurrer, relied first on the last point.

ERLE, J. Although the first order was made before the action was commenced, the final order was not made until after action, and it is the final order only which by the [illegible] 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, is made [illegible].

Manning, Serjt.—The next objection is, that there is no allegation of notice having been given according to the first section of the Act, and that the statement of due notice being given was not sufficient.

TINDAL, C.J.—Does not the 10th section allow the defendant to rely on the final order?

Manning, Serjt.—It does not give any form of plea.

TINDAL, C.J.—If you take a defence and plead it in the words of the statute, it is good enough. The 10th section does not say merely that it shall be a sufficient defence, but a sufficient plea in bar.

Manning, Serjt. objected then that the final order was not shewn by the plea to be a final order for distribution according to the provisions of the statute.

ERLE, J.—The 4th section directs the final order to be for the vesting of the estate and effects in an official assignee, together with an assignee chosen by the creditors; the plea omits this.

TINDAL, C.J. to Talfourd, Serjt. who appeared in support of the plea.—You do not follow the words of the 10th section but go back to the fourth, which require an order for vesting in the creditors, as well as the official assignee.

Talfourd, Serjt.—The plea alleges that the commissioner made his final order.

MAULE, J.—But you do not rely simply on the terms of the 10th section, which enables you to plead in that short way.

TINDAL, C.J.—The plea does not adapt itself with the terms of any final order described in the statute.

Talfourd, Serjt. then asked for, and obtained, leave to amend on payment of costs, otherwise Judgment for the plaintiff.

RASTRICK v. BECKWITH and OTHERS.

[illegible] of this court being sued with an attorney of this court, loses his privilege to be [illegible] in the court of which he is an attorney, and this rule is not altered by the Uniformity of Process Act.

The declaration was in assumpsit against three defendants for work and labour money paid and on an account stated. Dyc, one of the defendants, pleaded in abatement to the jurisdiction that each of the three defendants were at the commencement of the suit and still are attorneys of the Court of Queen's Bench. The plaintiff replied to the plea, that Kitton one of the defendants was and still is, one of the attorneys of this court, to which the defendant Dyc rejoined that defendant Kitton was and still is one of the attorneys of the Court of Queen's Bench. To the rejoinder there was a special demurrer assigning among other causes, that Kitton, being an attorney of this court, although an attorney of the Court of Queen's Bench, was not privileged to be sued in the last court only and therefore the defendant Dyc, being sued jointly with a person not privileged, was himself not privileged to be sued in such court.

Talfourd, Serjt. (with him Sir T. Wilde) in support of the demurrer, cited the following cases to shew that, where an attorney is sued with a non privileged person, he loses his privilege:—Bac. Abr. title "Privilege," B. 33. Roberts v. Mason (1 Taunt. 251). Newton v. Harland (6 Dow. [illegible], 2 Roll. Ab. 274. Salk. 544 and 12 Mod. 1 3).

Channell, Serjt. contra, admitted that, according to the old law an attorney sued with an unprivileged person lost his privilege, but the reason was because the process would otherwise be different, and in attorney had a right of being sued only by bill and that this was the reason of the rule, as is shewn by the cases where the attorney was sued jointly with a person having privilege of Parliament, and where it was held he did not lose his privilege (Ramsbottom and Others v. Harvett and Another, 4 M & S. 25.) Now since the right of being sued by bill has been abolished by the Uniformity of Process Act (2 Wm. 4 c. 39), and an attorney may be sued by the same process as any other person, his privilege is not lost by being joined with an unprivileged person (Kemp v. Biggs, 2 Dowl. 278, Pitt v. Pocock, 2 Cr. & M. 110) and it is clear from Lewis v. Kerr (2 M. & W. 26) and Price v. Smith (6 Dowl. 99) that an attorney's privilege of being sued in his own court still exists.

Talfourd, Serjt. replied.

TINDAL, C.J.—The defendant Kitton is an attorney of this court, and it is therefore clear that he would have no right to remove the action to the Court of Queen's Bench and it would be singular that, if he cannot do it himself, the other defendant, Dyc, should be able to do it for him. The case is this, the plaintiff has a right of bringing an action in this court against one of the defendants, and he ought not the less to have such right because such defendant is joined in the action with another, who, if sued alone, might have had the action removed into the Court of Queen's Bench. The case stands only on the old rule, that where a privileged person is joined in an action with an unprivileged person, he loses his privilege.

COLTMAN, J.—It would be subjecting the plaintiff to great hardship if the circumstance of one of the defendants being an officer of the Queen's Bench were to deprive the plaintiff of his right of continuing this action in this court. I think, however, that such defendant stands here in the situation of an unprivileged person, and that the plea must not, therefore, be allowed.

MAULE, J. concurred.

ERLE, J.—The general rule in this respect has not been altered by the Uniformity of Process Act. That Act relates only to the mode of proceeding, and not to the court in which the proceedings are to be had; besides the particular mode of being sued, an attorney had a distinct privilege of being sued in his own court, and this privilege remains the same as before the Act. If the old rule on this subject were not to prevail, great inconvenience might ensue, and defendants might have it in their power to prevent their being sued in any court.

Judgment, respondeat ouster.

NEWTON v. HOLFORD and OTHERS.

Newton shewed cause against a rule obtained by Talfourd, Serjt. on the first day of term, why the costs incurred by the defendants in defending an action should not be set off against costs incurred in an action against the defendants in this court. Since the rule was obtained a writ of error had been taken out in the Queen's Bench, and the usual practice did not apply.

Rule enlarged for a week, to be conditional on the defendant's obtaining a rule absolute for execution for the costs in the Queen's Bench.

WILKINSON v. EARL of LICHFIELD.

New trial. Handwriting.

Shee, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained in Easter Term last for a new trial. The cause of action arose out of a promissory note for 1,200*l.* purporting to be made by the defendant, and indorsed by him to one Margaret Edmonds. The plaintiff being the holder there was conflicting evidence respecting the handwriting of the defendant, but it was contended the jury having found on that evidence that the handwriting was the defendant's, there were not sufficient grounds for disturbing the verdict.

Manning, Serjt. contra, stopped by the Court.

Rule absolute, on payment of costs.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Thursday, Nov. 7.

ESDAILE and OTHERS v. LUND.

Joint stock banks—Execution against shareholders.

This case was tried before Pollock, C. B. at the sittings of this Court in London. Verdict for plaintiff on 1st issue; verdict for defendant on 2nd issue.

The Solicitor-General now moved, pursuant to leave reserved, for a rule calling on the defendant to shew cause why verdict on the 2nd issue should not be entered for the plaintiff. He moved also for a new trial, on the grounds of misdirection, and of the verdict being contrary to the evidence; and also for judgment non obstante.

The facts were, that the defendant was a shareholder in the Yorkshire Agricultural and Commercial Company, against which a judgment for 20,000*l.* had been recovered, and sci. fa. had been issued against divers shareholders to compel them to pay their contributions towards this amount; among others, sci. fa. had issued against Tomlinson, a shareholder.

The defendant pleaded that Tomlinson had been taken in execution and discharged by the authority of the plaintiffs. This plea gave rise to the present application.

The point reserved was, whether any evidence had been adduced at the trial that Tomlinson had been discharged by the authority of the plaintiffs. If the Court should be of opinion that there was no evidence, then the verdict on the 2nd issue was to be entered for the plaintiff.

This point depended on the construction of certain letters from Messrs. Roy, Blunt, and Co. the plaintiffs' solicitor, to Mr. Seymour, an attorney in the country, touching the execution of the sci. fa. against Tomlinson, and on the evidence of Mr. Roy.

The alleged misdirection was, that the learned judge had submitted the letters to the jury, instead of having construed them himself.

The ground for judgment, non obstante veredicto, was, that under the 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, s. 12, the discharging Tomlinson after he had been taken in execution, was no release to the other shareholders.

ACRAMAN v. COOPER.

New Trial—Pledging collateral security.

This case was tried before Pollock, C. B. at the last sittings at Guildhall. Verdict for defendant.

Kelly, Q. C. moved for rule calling on the defendant to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside and new trial had, on the ground of surprise, and verdict contrary to evidence.

The action was trover for certain script receipts for 300 shares in the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company.

The script had been deposited with Messrs. Colls, Thompson, and Co. bill-brokers, in the city, as collateral security for bills discounted by them to the extent of 20,000*l.* The bills had been renewed, and the renewed bills had been paid when at maturity; but Messrs. Colls, Thompson, and Co. had fallen into difficulties, and had parted with the possession of the script.

The action was brought against the defendant, into whose hands the script had come.

The plaintiff had brought witnesses at the trial to disprove that any usage existed whereby bill-brokers might pledge their collateral securities; but these witnesses, at the trial, rather gave countenance to the idea; for they gave it as their opinion that the broker might resort to the collateral security, or to the principal security, though not to both.

The defendant called no witnesses, and the above were the circumstances under which the motion was made. Rule nisi.

GRIFFITHS and ANOTHER v. BULESTOCK.

New trial refused—Outgoing tenant is in law in possession of the land on which his standing crops remain.

This case was tried before Coleridge, J. at Chester at the last circuit. Verdict for defendant.

Evans, Q. C. moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection.

It was an action of trespass for breaking and entering plaintiff's close; there was verdict for defendant on plea of not possessed. The facts were, that the plaintiff was in-coming tenant to certain lands, of which one Williams had been tenant immediately preceding him. Williams's crop was on the ground at the time that the plaintiff had entered as in-coming tenant; Williams had sold the crop to defendant; crop was cut, and defendant entered to take it away.

The point simply was, in whom is the legal possession of a close (in the outgoing or the in-coming tenant), so long as the outgoing tenant's crop is by custom of the country allowed to remain on the ground.

The learned judge at the trial decided that the possession was in the outgoing tenant, and of that opinion was the Court.

PARKE, B. cited Beavan v. Delahay (1 H. Blackstone, 5) in proof that outgoing tenant is tenant, and said in effect the outgoing tenant was in possession till all that he is entitled to do by the custom of the country is done. He has not a mere easement.

Rule refused.

WOOD v. LEADBITTER.

New trial—Is license (founded on executed consideration) to enter land revocable?

This case was tried before Rolfe, B. on the 29th June last. Verdict for defendant.

Jervis, Q. C. moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection.

It was an action of trespass for an assault in turning the plaintiff out of a close "wherein he then was."

The facts were, that the plaintiff had purchased a guinea ticket to the grand stand at Doncaster races; he had been admitted and then turned out by defendant by order of Lord Eglinton, on the representation of parties then present. Lord Eglinton was steward of the races.

The 4th plea and replication set out the facts; there was no traverse of Lord Eglinton's possession of the close, and the ticket was virtually issued by him through the corporation of Doncaster. The simple question was, whether the ticket conferred a license irrevocable to go there, or whether it gave a leave which might be withdrawn, and the party left to his action.

Jervis, Q. C. cited cases in Gale and Whatley on Easements. Rule nisi.

CHAPPELL v. PURDAY.

New trial—Copyright in foreign works.

This case had been tried before Pollock, C. B. Verdict for plaintiff.

Jervis, Q. C. moved, pursuant to leave reserved, for rule calling on plaintiff to shew cause why verdict should not be entered for the defendant on point reserved, or why there should not be a new trial on the ground of surprise.

The facts were, that the overture to the opera of Fra Diavolo had been composed by Auber, a foreigner, and performed in the first instance at Paris. The right of Auber to this overture had, by various assignments, passed to the plaintiff.

The point of law was whether, before the late International Copyright Act, there was any copyright in the works of foreign authors first published abroad, Michaud v. More, 9 Law Journal, 227), or, admitting there was none in the author, could there be any in his English assignees? As to this, Jervis, Q. C. said he should have to contend against Dalmen v. Boosey (1 Yo. & Col. 295).

The alleged surprise was that the plaintiffs, instead of producing the witnesses to a certain assignment, had adduced in evidence depositions in Chancery in a suit between the parties, whereby defendant had lost the opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses.

Rule nisi.

N.B. Jervis moved in the above case on a further ground, viz. for the rejection of evidence, but he abandoned this. The ground was, that when the depositions were produced at the trial, Jervis, for defendant, contended that the bill and answers in Chancery should be read; but the Chief Baron ruled that they ought not to be read, but only to be submitted to the judge, that the judge might see that the depositions were relevant to a point in issue between the parties.

VESEY v. JAMES.

Bankruptcy—Act of trading.

This case had been sent by the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy to try a question which arose on the petition of Vesey to supersede his bankruptcy.

Jervis, Q.C. who made the motion, and the Court also, seemed in some doubt as to the point intended to be raised by the Chief Judge's order; but it appeared to be whether the sale of stock left on the hands of one of two persons, on dissolution of partnership between himself and another, was an act of trading so as to make him a trader, and so amenable to the bankrupt laws in respect of a debt that accrued due from him after the dissolution of his partnership, and before the disposal by him of the stock?

Pollock, C. B. held at the trial, that if the object was merely to convert the stock into money, and not with a view of trading, it was no act of trading, any more than if the property had devolved on him as executor, and he had sold it. Rule nisi.

PITT v. HARRISON and BEVAN.

New trial—Evidence to affect petitioning creditor with liability for messenger's acts.

This case was tried before Tindal, C. J. at Gloucester, at the last circuit. Verdict for plaintiff; damages, 75*l.*

Talfourd, Serjt. pursuant to leave reserved, moved for a rule calling on plaintiff to shew cause why verdict should not be entered, on the plea of not guilty, for the defendant Harrison; and for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to evidence.

The defendant Harrison was the petitioning creditor, and Bevan a messenger in Bankruptcy.

The action was trespass for seizing and taking plaintiff's goods.

The plaintiff was brother to A B, who had been made bankrupt on the petition of Harrison. Bevan had seized some goods of the bankrupt, which the plaintiff contended were his.

Talfourd, Serjt. left the point as to the verdict being contrary to evidence to the Court, to be decided on perusal of the Chief Justice's notes. The point raised was whether the defendant Harrison, the petitioning creditor, was liable; for though the 31st and 32nd secs. of the Bankrupt Act make the petitioning creditor liable for what the messenger does, yet the messenger's warrant was not produced in this case; so it did not appear that the seizure had been under the bankruptcy. Rule nisi.

SPILLER v. MASON.

Pleading—Effect of alleging that goods removed in breach of covenant to leave in the same state, were goods of the plaintiff.

This case was tried before Rolfe, B. at the last sittings in Middlesex. Verdict for the defendant on the 7th issue.

Crowder, Q. C. moved the Court, pursuant to leave reserved, to enter a verdict for the plaintiff on the 7th issue for 20*l.*

This was an action of covenant; the plaintiff was assignee of the reversion, and the defendant assignee of a lease of a house, which lease contained a covenant to repair, and to yield up the premises at the end of the term in like condition, together with all "locks, keys, &c." The plaintiff declared on this covenant, and laid as a fourth breach, that the defendant had removed certain shelves "of the plaintiff's;" but did not state that they were belonging to the house.

The plea denied that the defendant had removed any shelves of the plaintiff's.

At the trial, it appeared that the defendant had removed some shelves; but these, he alleged, were his own, not the plaintiff's.

The point of the case was, whether (even admitting that the shelves were things forbidden to be removed), the fourth breach, as laid, did not, by the insertion of the words "of the plaintiff's," make the charge one altogether irrespective of the lease; for, during the tenancy, the shelves were the tenants, and though under a properly framed breach the tenant would be liable for removing the shelves appurtenant to the premises, a breach, charging him with removing the shelves of the plaintiff was not framed to meet that state of facts. Cur. adv. vult.

COOK v. STRATFORD.

Gambling—Amendment at trial.

In this case there had been a verdict for the defendant.

Crowder, Q. C. moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to enter verdict for the plaintiff.

The action was on a bill of exchange for 500*l.*

There were two pleas material to the question before the Court,—one, that the defendant had played with one A B, at ringt un, and had at one sitting lost above 100*l.*, and had played at hazard and lost, also at one sitting, above 100*l.*, and had given the bill in question for part of the aggregate amount thus lost; that the bill had been indorsed to the plaintiff with full notice of the above.

The second plea stated the circumstances as above, and varied from the former in asserting, not that the plaintiff had notice, but that he had given no consideration for the bill. If the Court were of opinion that there was not evidence to sustain either plea, then the verdict was to be for the plaintiff.

Rule nisi.

[Note.—Leave was reserved at the trial in the above case for the Court to amend the 1st plea to suit the evidence, if they thought the amendment allowable. Crowder, however, left this to be moved for by the defendant.]

CHESTON v. GIBBS.

Sheriff is bound by the official admissions of the under-sheriff—The admission of under-sheriff, made officially, that A B, one of the sheriff's officers, is in possession, is evidence that he is in possession under warrant from the sheriff.

This case was tried before Pollock, C. B. in July last. Verdict for the plaintiff.

Jervis, Q. C. moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to enter verdict for the defendant.

The action was trover.

The plaintiff sought to recover from the defendant, the sheriff, the amount produced by the sale of certain goods which had been taken in execution and sold.

The evidence on which it was sought to fix the sheriff was, that inquiry had been made at the under-sheriff's office, in the presence of the undersheriff, as to who was in possession of the goods, meaning by virtue of the writ of execution.* The answer was,—Levi (a sheriff's officer); whence it was sought to fix the sheriff for the acts of the officer. Neither the writ of execution nor warrant to the officer was produced at the trial. As to admission by undersheriff, see Snowball v. Goodrick (4 B. & Adol.)

Effect of devise for payment of debts on estate of devisees over.

Knowles, Q.C. moved, pursuant to leave reserved, for a rule calling on plaintiff to shew cause why nonsuit should not be entered on point reserved.

This was an action of ejectment. The question simply was, whether, when testator first makes devise for payment of his debts, he does not thus convert the interest of devisees over into that of cestui que trust. (See 3 Beavan, 1.) Rule nisi.

SMITH v. BOUCHER.

New trial—Right of ship-broker to employ another and make principal liable.

This case was tried at Liverpool, before Cresswell, J. Verdict for the plaintiff.

Martin, Q.C. moved for new trial on the ground of misdirection and verdict against evidence.

The facts were, that the defendant was a ship-owner, the plaintiff a ship-broker. The plaintiff had employed one Blackall, a ship-broker in London, to procure a freight. The plaintiff was a correspondent of Blackall, and the terms of business between them were, to act as agents in their trade for one another on the terms of sharing the profits of the job. The defendant knew nothing of the plaintiff. The plaintiff procured a freight, but the bargain went off. Blackall would not claim any agency charges. Plaintiff then sued the defendant for his share. The learned judge left the case to the jury to say if, by usage, one ship-broker was thus authorized by his principal to employ another. The misdirection complained of was in his letting the case go to the jury at all. Rule nisi.

KIRKPATRICK v. PATERSON.

Martin, Q.C. moved for a new trial upon the ground of misdirection. The case was tried before Cresswell, J. at the last assizes at Liverpool.

The question was, whether a bankrupt is bound by a promise made after his bankruptcy and before his certificate, to pay a debt contracted before his bankruptcy. The learned judge thought he was not bound, and a verdict was found for the defendant.

Case cited: Biggs v. Braham (1 Bing. 281).

LEWIS v. REED and OTHERS.

Welsby moved for a new trial upon the ground of misdirection. The case was tried before Coleridge, J. at the last Montgomeryshire assizes.

The action was case for an excessive distress, with a count in trover. The distress was made for rent due from another person than the plaintiff, and the question arose whether the sheep distrained upon were at the time of the distress upon the sheep-walk of the plaintiff, or upon that of the tenant from whom the rent was due. Much conflicting evidence having been given as to the boundary, the jury found this point for the plaintiff, and they were then directed by the judge to find a verdict against all the defendants. The landlord, who was one of the defendants, had taken no part personally in the distress, which had been made in the usual way by bailiffs under a written authority for him. The proceeds of the sale had been paid to, and accepted by one Owens, who, it was admitted, was the landlord's agent for that purpose. It was contended that the landlord could not be liable for acts committed by the bailiffs beyond the scope of their authority, and that his subsequent receipt of the proceeds of the distress did not amount to a ratification of the manner in which it was made.

POLLOCK, C.B.—If he has the money, he is surely bound to know how it was obtained. What remedy is the plaintiff to have if he may not sue the landlord? Must he sue the bailiffs, who are perhaps paupers?

The COURT, however, after some consultation granted the rule. Rule nisi.

JONES v. NICHOLLS and ANOTHER.

What is sufficient notice of action to a constable under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93.

Welsby moved for a new trial, upon the ground of misdirection. This case was also tried before Coleridge, J. at the last assizes.

The action was for trespass against the defendants, one of whom was a county constable, under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, which requires a notice of action. The following notice had been given, and was held by the learned judge to be sufficient, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff:—

"To R. N. one of the superintendents of police in the Denbighshire constabulary force, and T. R. wine merchant, and one of the constables of the parish of St. Asaph, in the county of Flint, I do hereby, as the attorney of and for J. J. of St. Asaph, in the said county of Flint, victualler, according to the form of the statute, &c., give you notice that the said J. J. will, at or soon after the expiration of one calendar month from the time of your being served with this notice, cause a writ of summons to be issued out of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer, at Westminster, against you at the suit of him, the said J. J. and proceed thereon according to law for trespass and false imprisonment committed by you, the said R. N. and T. R., by arresting and imprisoning the said J. J. with force and arms at A. in the said county of F. on Tuesday, the 30th day of January last, on a charge of felony, and taking him from thence, in custody, to D. in the county of D. and for detaining him in custody on such charge for twelve hours or thereabouts, and also for causing the said J. J. to be brought before divers of her Majesty's justices of the peace, at D. aforesaid, in the said county of D. on the 31st day of the said month of January, in the year aforesaid, on the said charge of felony, whereby the said J. J. was greatly injured in his character, and forced to incur great expenses, to wit, about 20*l.* in manifesting his innocence of the said charge, and other wrongs to the said J. J. then doing, to his great damage of 100*l.* and against the peace of our Lady the Queen.

"Dated, &c. "Yours, &c.

"J. V. H.

"Of V.-street, in the town of D., in the county of D. attorney for the said J. J."

Welsby contended that the above notice did not sufficiently specify the time of each part of the trespasses mentioned in it, and cited Martins v. Upcher (1 Dowl. N. S. 555), and Breeze v. Jerdein (2 G. & D. 720). Rule refused.

GRIFFITHS v. EDWARDS.

Welsby moved to set aside an order of Gurney, B. The plaintiff was father of defendant's wife. An attorney had consented, on behalf of defendant, to a judge's order for payment of debt and costs. The defendant afterwards took out a summons to set aside the proceedings, upon the ground that he had given no authority, and that there had been collusion between his wife and the plaintiff, her father. Gurney, B. made the order as prayed with costs, and the Court now refused to set it aside. Rule refused.

MOSSOP v. JOHNSTONE.

Commissioners of sewers—Joinder of case and trover where count in case is misconceived.

This case was tried at Lincoln, before Denman, C.J. on the last circuit. Verdict for the plaintiff, damages 137*l.*

Clarke, Serjt. pursuant to leave reserved at the trial, moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside and a nonsuit entered, or a verdict entered for the defendant; and he also moved for a new trial on the ground of the verdict being against evidence.

This was an action against the collector of the commissioners of sewers, who had rated the plaintiff in respect of 800 acres of land, which they alleged were drained by a certain drain of theirs.

The action was in case, with a count in trover. One hundred acres of the land were drained by the sewer of the commissioners; but, nevertheless, as the commissioners had rated him for 800 acres in other words, in respect of land for which he ought not to have been rated, the whole rate was bad.

Clarke, Serjt. contended, that as the statute 4 & 5 Vict. c. 45, s. 8, had appointed how to appeal against an excessive rate, the rate was to be deemed good, as no appeal had been made; but the Court said this was not a question as to the amount being excessive, but where lands out of the jurisdiction of the commissioners had been assessed by them.

There were divers points raised at the trial of this cause. For example—it was objected that the first count in the action was misconceived; it should have been trespass, not case. 2nd. The commissioners, and not the collector, should have been sued. But these objections were not insisted on; and the question before the Court was reduced to the simple question of the verdict being against evidence; as to which, the Court said they would consult with the learned judge who tried the case.

[Note.—If the plaintiff had been nonsuited at the trial on the first count, he might have obtained a verdict on the second, which would have answered all his purposes. As to the objection, that the collector should not have been sued, but only the commissioner, the plaintiff had full right to waive the trespass constituted by the taking, and sue for it as a conversion to sustain trover; to this effect was an observation of Pollock, C. B.]

COOKE v. TREDELLIAN.

New trial—Right to return goods which are not according to sample.

This case was tried at Liverpool before Cresswell, J. at the last circuit. Verdict for the plaintiff.

Watson, Q. C. moved for a new trial, on the ground of improper admission of evidence and misdirection.

This was an action to recover the price of certain muslins which had been ordered and chosen by sample: and they had been returned as not corresponding to the sample. It seems the muslins had to be manufactured for the defendant, or at any rate the plaintiff had not got them at the time of the contract of sale.

The learned judge, at the trial, admitted evidence that by usage goods sold by sample were not to be returned to the seller if they did not correspond, but an allowance was to be made; and, with reference to evidence given by the defendant's clerk, he directed the jury, that a man who had purchased by sample might retain the goods so long that he would be precluded from returning them, and must be deemed to have kept them to pay for them as much as they were worth.

Watson cited Hibbert v. Shee (1 Camp. 113), where Lord Ellenborough directs the jury that usage as to compensation is to be considered as existing to settle what is to be deemed a fair compensation; but is not to be deemed to shew that the parties contract that compensation may be substituted for compliance with the primary terms of their contract. He cited also, with like view, Yates v. Pym (2 Marshall, 141, reported also 5 Taunt. 446).

The COURT seemed inclined to the opinion of the learned judge who tried the case, but they granted a rule. Rule nisi.

GOULDTHORPE v. HARDEN.

Arrest of judgment—Form of declaration for injuries caused by rubbish on highway.

This case was tried at York before Pollock, C.B. at the last assizes. Verdict for plaintiff on the first count.

Watson moved to arrest the judgment, on the ground that the count was bad.

The action was in case to recover damages which the plaintiff had sustained by having in the night-time walked over some rubbish on to the top of a wall, and so fallen into a canal beneath, the rubbish having been piled at the side of a public highway against the aforesaid wall by the defendant.

Watson objected that the declaration did not state that the injury had happened in the night-time, nor negative the existence of lights or fences about the rubbish. It did not in fact shew that which was necessary to negative that the plaintiff had gone over the rubbish into the canal by his own wilfulness or neglect. He then cited ——— v. Stanley (1 Scott, N.C. 392) as collecting the cases.

The COURT suggested that the declaration implied enough in charging the existence of the rubbish as the cause whereby the plaintiff's injuries had accrued, which could scarcely be asserted if lights &c. had existed, and he had gone there of his own accord.

CRELLIN v. CALVERT.

New trial.

Does plea in abatement admit the contract in respect of which the action is brought to be a partnership contract so as to dispense with proof of partnership on assessment of damages?

This case was tried at Liverpool before Cresswell, J. at the last circuit. Verdict for plaintiff.

Watson, Q.C. moved for a new trial under the following circumstances; in fact, that there was no evidence to support the verdict.

The declaration was in indebitatus assumpsit, for money lent and money had and received.

The defendant pleaded in abatement the non-joinder of fourteen other persons as co-contractors.

At the trial the plaintiff was the only person who adduced witnesses, and he undertook and succeeded in the disproof of the defendant's plea, by shewing the existence of more than fourteen co-contractors. (See 3 Chitty's Precedents Plead. 6th ed. s. 719, m.)

There was no proof by witnesses or documents that the defendant was partner with these fourteen and more co-contractors.

A debt, however, of 400*l.* was proved against these persons, and verdict was entered for that amount against the defendant, on the presumption that his plea in abatement admitted he was partner with these persons in respect of the subject of the action, viz. the debt in question; so that if the debt was proved against them it was proved against him also.

Watson submitted, it dispensed with no proof which would be required on the assessment of damages in case of judgment by default, and that plaintiff was entitled to verdict only for 1s. damages.

The Court will consult with the learned judge who tried the cause.

PARFITT v. THOMPSON.

Arrest of judgment—In declaring on policies of insurance on ships, as for total loss, query as to extent of estoppel by admission that vessel is seaworthy.

This case was tried by Patteson, J. at Bristol at the last assizes. Verdict for the plaintiff.

Cockburn, Q. C. moved in arrest of judgment, and for new trial, on the ground of misdirection on the second count.

The declaration was on a policy of insurance on the ship Hutchinson. It stated that whilst the vessel was on its voyage, by stormy winds, &c. the vessel became leaky and greatly damaged, so that it became necessary to put into the next port, and that it put into the port of Gambier. And then the declaration went on to state that when at Gambier the vessel was found to be wholly unfit to proceed; but it does not state that this was in consequence of the premises, or in any way connect the state of the vessel with the previous perils. This constituted the 1st objection.

The 2nd objection was that the learned judge had ruled that the admission in the policy of insurance that the vessel was seaworthy operated to preclude the defendant from attributing the loss of the vessel to the existence of an un-seaworthiness that had continued from the time of the policy to that time; whereas Cockburn submitted that though the admission would estop him from inquiring how far the vessel had been lost in consequence of this un-seaworthiness, if it had experienced any hurt from perils at all, yet if, in point of fact, the vessel had been abandoned purely in consequence of a continuing un-seaworthiness, he was entitled to shew this, because abandonment or loss on this account was not a loss by perils of the sea—was not a loss by any thing which the underwriter had insured against.

Rule granted on 1st point. Court will consult Patteson, J. as to the misdirection.

CRELLIN v. BROOKE.

With one difference, this case was like the last. The defendant was a shareholder in the Isle of Man Bank, and he was sued by the plaintiff, who had deposited money, not at the head bank, but at a branch of it. By the terms of the partnership deed of that bank, branch banks might be established, certain formalities being first observed. There was no proof that this branch had been established pursuant to those forms or not.

Watson, Q. C. moved, with Same result.

PARFITT v. JANSEN.

This cause occurred at the same time with the last, and declaration is subject to the same objection; but the policy of insurance in this case contained no admission of seaworthiness.

Cockburn moved in arrest of judgment, as above. Rule nisi.

BALDWIN v. AINSAGER and OTHERS.

Stamp Act.

By the value of the subject-matter of a contract is to be understood the value of the consideration passing between the parties.

This case had been tried before Pollock, C. B. Verdict for the plaintiff.

Cockburn moved for a new trial, on the ground of improper admission of evidence.

The action was trover against the assignees of Sewel, a bankrupt, to recover certain barrels of ale which they had taken possession of as being in the reputed ownership of the bankrupt.

The plaintiff adduced in evidence a memorandum, addressed to him by the bankrupt, which stated that plaintiff had left so many barrels of ale in bankrupt's cellar, that he might remove the same at any time within three months, on giving a day's notice; but if they were kept there afterwards, rent must be paid.

This document was unstamped. It was objected, that it ought not to be admitted unless it was stamped; but the learned Chief Baron, at the trial, and the Court now, thought that, even treating the letter as a contract, it was not a contract about any matter of 20*l.* value; for the value to be looked to was the consideration passing between the parties, not the mere subject-matter of their dealing, and so that it required no stamp. Rule refused.

PARRY v. NICHOLSON.

New trial.

Alteration in acceptance of bill of exchange.

This case was tried before Gurney, B. at the last Sussex assizes. Verdict for defendant.

Shee, Serjt. moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection and of surprise.

The action was on a bill of exchange against the defendant as acceptor. The defence set up at the trial was, that the original date of the acceptance had been altered from the 2nd of March to the 22nd, and so the bill vitiated.

The learned judge had directed the jury that if they thought the bill had been altered, it lay on the plaintiff to shew that the alteration had been made before acceptance.

Shee, Serjt. cited Cock v. Coxworth (2 M. & R. 291), and Calvert v. Baker (4 M. & W. 417), which he said were with the learned judge, but relied on Selby v. Fisher (2 N. & P. [illegible]) and the notice taken of Calvert v. Baker in 1[illegible] W. 590. As to the surprise he moved on affidavits that the plaintiff had been taken by surprize, and could produce evidence that the bill had been made on the day it bore date.

LANE v. IRONMONGER.

Mere marital relation will not render husband liable, will not raise the presumption of agency in favour of his wife, where it is opposed by the extravagance of her orders.

This case was tried before Pollock, C.B. Verdict for defendant.

Humfrey applied for a new trial on the ground of misdirection.

The action was against a husband for goods supplied to his wife. The misdirection complained of was, that the learned Chief Baron had read to the jury the words of Lord Abinger in Freestone v. Butcher (9 Car. & Payne, 643), as a part of his own charge, viz.—that if the order is so extravagant that the husband could not have sanctioned it, then they should infer that the wife had not acted as his agent therein.

Humfrey objected to extravagance as a test to the point of agency; for it might be that there was authority to order goods to some extent, but that the agent had gone beyond.

But the Court were all against him, and GURNEY, B. said he was glad that this case might now be added to Freestone v. Butcher.

Rule refused.

[Note.—Extravagance beyond a man's authority is very justly no ground for defeating an action, except as to the excess; but when agency is only to be implied from the acts of the agent, extravagance, considered with reference to the means of the principal, is very good ground for supposing that the agent had no authority from him.]

WOOD v. PEYTON.

Variance between jury process and award of venire—The Court will leave the complainant to bring error—if the variance is merely the non-insertion of an ad inquirendum clause to authorize the assessment of damages on an issue in law.

This case had been tried before Pollock, C.B. on the 2nd of July at Guildhall. Verdict for plaintiff.

Humfrey moved for a rule, calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the trial, and all subsequent proceedings, should not be set aside for irregularity.

There had been two issues—one in law, the other in fact. On the determination of the issue in law, the case had gone for trial before the jury.

The issue had been made up correctly, but the jury process did not correspond with the award of the venire in the matter of assessing damages contingently on the issue in law. The verdict, however, had been entered as if the process had warranted the inquiries on that point.

Humfrey moved, on the authority of Codrington v. Lloyd (1 Perry & Davison, 175), but in that case the objection had been taken at the trial.

PARKE, B. said—If we grant the rule they may amend the jury process. If it is really serious error, you may bring your writ of error coram nobis. We have said, in two or three cases, we will not help the party for this variance. You may get the verdict entered according to the fact, and bring error if you like. Rule refused.

HEWIT v. KNOWEL.

Award—Application to set aside award on the ground of surprise.

This case had been brought for trial before Tindal, C. J. at Gloucester, at the last assize, and had been referred by the Court to an arbitrator.

Greaves moved for a rule to shew cause why the award in this case should not be set aside on the ground of surprise.

The declaration was for work and labour, goods sold, &c.; and the point in the case was as to the price of a very large quantity of bricks; the plaintiff claimed 20s. 6d. per 1,000; the defendant contended the price was 18s. A witness before the arbitrator gave his evidence that plaintiff had said to defendant that the price was 18s. This witness was suffered to go away without cross-examination. He had been examined on a former occasion, and had given no such evidence; and the next day the attorney for plaintiff applied to have him put into the box again, that he might cross-examine him, or that the arbitrator would hear evidence to shake his credit, he having on a former occasion stated, not that he had heard the plaintiff say so, but that he had heard some one else say that he (this other person) had heard the plaintiff say so. The arbitrator refused to do either of these things without the consent of the attorney for the defendant.

The COURT said the arbitrator had a right to do so, though they should have consented; that the application took the form of a charge of misconduct.

Greaves said the arbitrator was a most respectable gentleman: that there was no complaint against him that his motion was made on the ground of surprise.

The COURT asked if he had any objection to the case going back to the same arbitrator.

Greaves had none whatever.

Rule nisi, the case to go back to the same arbitrator.

HARRISON v. LUTTON.

In what cases does an alteration of a bill after it has been accepted call for a fresh stamp?

Thomas, for a new trial. The case was tried before the Under-sheriff of Middlesex.

The action was upon a bill of exchange drawn by the defendant. Not having been able to discount it for some days after it was made, he altered the date of it to some days later.

At the trial, it was contended that this alteration made it a fresh bill, and that it required a new stamp. There was conflicting evidence as to whether it was an accommodation bill, or whether it was held for value at the time of the alteration, and it was stated that one of the witnesses who swore it was an accommodation bill was in custody for perjury. It was now contended that, although an accommodation bill may be altered at any time before it is in the hands of a holder for value, yet it is otherwise with a bill drawn for value; and that as there had been perjury upon this point, there should be a new trial. There was another point as to the notice of dishonour. Upon the first point the Court thought that as the value was so small, and as the defendant at all events was only trying to take advantage of his own wrong, there should be no rule. On the second, Rule nisi.

DOE dem. ——— v. ROE.

Judgment against casual ejector.

Willes, for judgment against casual ejector. The tenants were two sisters. One had been served at the premises, and, upon being asked for her sister, she answered that she was ill on the premises, and could not be seen, but that she would convey any thing to her. A second copy declaration was given her for her sister. Rule granted.

RUSSELL v. LEDSAM.

Kelly, for a new trial, and also to enter verdict for defendant on the seventh and ninth issues, and also for judgment non obstante veredicto.

The action was tried before Alderson, B. and was brought by the plaintiff as assignee of a patent originally granted to one Whitehouse against the defendant for an infringement.

The original patent having expired, the plaintiff had prayed for and obtained an extension of it under the provisions of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 83. The extension had, however, been coupled with a condition that the plaintiff should secure to Whitehouse an annuity of 500*l.* during the continuance of the patent. Several objections were taken to the manner in which this condition was alleged to have been fulfilled. The date of the security appeared to be before that of the instrument by which the extension was granted, and it was also accompanied with certain undertakings on the part of Whitehouse which rendered it of less value. It was also argued that, under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 83, the Crown had no power to grant an extension of time to the assignee of a patent, but only to the original inventor, and that the late statute of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 69, s. 4, was passed expressly to remedy that defect. Rule nisi.

D'ARMAY v. CHESNEAU.

Willes, to enter a verdict pursuant to leave reserved, or for a new trial.

Cases cited: Dangerfield v. Thomas (9 Ad. & E. 292); Leslie v. Guthrie (1 Bing. N. C. 697); Carvalho v. Burn (4 B. & Ad. 182). Rule nisi.

HOPKINS v. FRANCIS.

An action having been brought for a sum under 20l. and a judgment recovered, the amount of which, including costs, is over 20l. the Court will not stay proceedings in an action brought upon the judgment, though the defendant swears that the only object, in his belief, of the second action is to evade the statute called Lord Brougham's Act, and arrest him for a debt originally under 20l. and, semble, such a case is not within the Act at all.

In this case Pearson moved to stay further proceedings.

The action was upon a judgment, and the motion was made upon an affidavit, in which the defendant swore that the original debt was under 20*l.* but that the judgment for debt and costs was for a sum above 20*l.* and that he believed that the second action upon the judgment was brought for the purpose of evading the provisions of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 29, commonly called Lord Brougham's Act, and enabling the plaintiff to take him in execution for a debt, which was originally under 20*l.* It was argued, that the Court would take notice of so clear an attempt to escape the provisions of a statute, and that even at common law they would consider a second action for the same cause primâ facie a vexatious proceeding.

Case cited: Williams v. Thacker (1 Brod. & Bing. 514).

POLLOCK, C. B.—The utmost that you can say is, that this is a casus omissus by the statute; but how can we take away a right of action from the subject? At all events, you are too early. It will be time enough for you to apply when your client is taken in execution.

PARKE, B.—I agree with my lord, that you are too soon. You must come when the plaintiff does that which you say is contrary to the principle of the statute, though I abstain from saying that even then the Court could interfere. The plaintiff would not get the costs of his action on the judgment, unless he shewed the Court that it was properly brought.

Rule refused.

REDMAN v. HAY.

New trial—Commencement of risk in case of insurance on freight of chartered vessel.

This case had been tried before Pollock, C. B. at London on the 4th July. Verdict for plaintiff on all the issues—six in number.

The 3rd issue was subject to the same grounds for arrest of judgment, or for new trial, as the case of Redman v. Wilson, and it was to follow the fate of that case in that respect.

Tomlinson now moved for a new trial on the 6th issue, on the ground of misdirection.

The action was to recover on a policy of insurance of freight of the ship Wellington. The vessel had been chartered to perform a voyage from London to Sierra Leone and back; when the vessel arrived at Sierra Leone, she was so injured, that though she might have performed the voyage back in ballast, she was not in a condition to do so with a cargo; and, further than this, she received a material hurt at that port.

The question for the Court simply was, whether the existence of the charter-party gave the assured such an interest in the freight to be earned as made the risks of the insurance relate backwards before any cargo loaded, or whether the case stood upon the same grounds as though there had been no charter-party, in which case the risk would only begin to run from the loading.

The learned judge directed the jury in favour of the plaintiff on this point at the trial; this was the misdirection complained of. The point was quite new.

TOWNSEND v. JACKSON.

New trial.

Set-off is not to be treated as pleaded to the balance of plaintiff's account, though he in his particulars states that the action is brought for the balance of the account. He is not by such particulars bound to prove to any greater extent than he would have been if the particulars had stated that the action was brought for the amount of the account generally, instead of for the balance due on the account.

This case had been tried before Pollock, C. B. at Appleby, at the last circuit. Verdict for plaintiff.

Atkinson moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. The action was in debt on the common counts. The particulars of demand set out an account of more than 100*l.* and stated that the action was brought to recover 37*l.* 6s. 6d. the balance of the account, but it did not give credit for any specific sums. The defendant, among other pleas, pleaded a plea of set-off as to 5*l.* The question was whether this plea of set-off should be regarded as applied to the whole account set out in the particulars, or to the balance only.

Evidence was given that the defendant had acknowledged that the plaintiff's balance of account was 37*l.* 6s. 6d.

Atkinson contended that the plea of set-off should be taken as applying to this balance, and that Pollock, C.B. should so rule as a matter of law; but Pollock, C.B. left it to the jury to say whether the admission was to be treated as acknowledging a balance due after, or without, the allowance of the set off.

This was the misdirection complained of. He cited Eastwick v. Harman (8 Dowl. 399) as directly in point.

The COURT held the direction of the learned judge to be right.

GURNEY, B. said the facts in the case of Eastwick v. Harman were not correctly reported.

PARKE, B. said, in effect, that when a plaintiff in his particulars states that he claims for the balance of account, but does not give credit for any specific amount, the effect is not to compel him to prove the account until he clears it of items and gets into those for which the alleged balance is due. It is simply as if he had brought the action generally for the whole account; and though the account were for 100*l.* and the claim for a balance of 50*l.* yet plaintiff might recover if he proved any amount whatever. The mention in the particulars that the action is brought for a balance only is but an intimation that the plaintiff is willing to take that amount for his demand.

Rule refused.

[Note.—If the above case be looked into, it will be seen that, strictly speaking, there were two questions—viz. one for the Court,—Whether the plaintiff in his particulars was obliged to prove for a balance, i. e. was restricted to recover only for what was beyond the difference between his alleged balance and his whole account. 2nd, one for the jury: Admitting plaintiff was not obliged to prove any thing more than he would have been if he had said nothing about a balance in his particulars, then, whether, on the evidence, the defendant's admission was an admission of a balance due, after all allowance, or whether it was an admission of a balance, but against which the set-off existed. Parke, B. in the above case, cited Rowland v. Blakesley (2 G. & D. 734), as authority that the new rules that payments credited in the particulars need not be pleaded, do not apply to sets-off.

Two practical lessons may be learned from this—viz. that though the plaintiff gives credit in his particulars for a set-off, still the defendant should plead set-off.

2nd. That the plaintiff should be careful not to give credit in his particulars for sets-off, as if they were payments; for defendant at trial would be able to take advantage of this admission; and yet, if he had pleaded set-off, get the benefit of his set-off as a set-off.

If plaintiff has so framed his particulars he should amend.]

STEDMAN and ANOTHER v. BARNETT.

Practice—On making an application to rescind an order made, all the materials adduced at chambers should be adduced before the Court.

Jerris, Q. C. applied for a rule to shew cause why an order made in this case by Pollock, C. B. should not be rescinded and execution stayed till decision on a bill of exceptions between the same parties.

The action was brought on a judgment obtained in Jamaica. On a former application, the costs had been ordered to be taxed and judgment signed, but execution was to be stayed till the decision on the bill of exceptions.

The cause was tried in Nov. 1842, and on the 19th of October last, Pollock, C. B. had rescinded the order to stay.

The present application was made on the affidavits on the one side only, which had been adduced before the Chief Baron at chambers. The Court inquired if this was the practice; and laid it down that, in cases of application to rescind orders made at chambers, all the materials on which the order had been made at chambers should be brought before the Court; and they directed that the rule in this case should be drawn up as having been made on reading "the office copies of affidavits on the other side."

NORTH v. TERRINGTON and OTHERS.

New trial—Churchwardens—Their authority as maintainers of decorum towards the church.

This case was tried at Norwich, before Alderson, B. at the last assizes. Verdict for plaintiff.

O'Malley moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection.

The declaration was in trespass, for assaulting the plaintiff, and for other torts, not material to the object of this report.

The pleas were numerous; among them, a plea which justified the assault, on the score that the defendants were churchwardens, and that the plaintiff was behaving himself in an irreverent and turbulent manner in church during divine service. The misdirection complained of was, that the learned judge had left it to the jury to say whether the allegation as to divine service going on at the time was made out; whereas, as the defendants contended, the authority of the churchwardens, as superintendents of the church, was such, that the allegation was perfectly immaterial and might have been left out of the plea. Thus the question for the Court was, whether the functions of a churchwarden are such as intrust him with the preservation of the church from indecency and irreverence not only during divine service, but at all other times.

HOGARTH v. PENNY.

This was an action of replevin tried before Pollock, C.B. at Westminster, when a verdict was found for the defendants.

Jerris, Q.C. now moved for a new trial, or to enter a verdict for the plaintiff, pursuant to leave reserved at the trial. There were thirty-one issues.

The question in dispute was the right of some of the defendants to certain annuities; and the points now moved upon had relation principally to the sufficiency of the stamps upon the annuity deed.

Re SMITH, Attorney.

In this case Mr. Smith had acted as attorney for defendant in an action for a sum less than 20*l.* Shortly before the trial, his client came to him, and insisted upon having counsel retained. He then told him that the expenses would not be allowed as against the other party; but the client insisted upon having them incurred at his own expense. Nevertheless, the Master felt a difficulty in allowing them to Mr. Smith against the client, thinking the words of the late "Directions to taxing officers" peremptory to the contrary in every case, notwithstanding an express order.

Jerris, Q. C. now moved that they should be allowed.

CLEMENTS v. CULLEN.

Newton moved to set aside proceedings, on the ground that no writ of summons had ever been served. Upon receiving the notice of declaration, the defendant applied by summons at chambers, and was met by the positive affidavit of the attorney's clerk, that the writ had been served. The summons was discharged. Afterwards the defendant met with a person who actually had been served with the writ instead of himself.

The COURT thought him too late.

Verdict for the plaintiff on the first count for 49*l.* 19s. and on the second count for 1s. Platt, Q. C. moved to set aside the verdict on the first count, and to enter it for the defendant, or for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being contrary to evidence. The action was trespass for breaking and entering plaintiff's close. So far as I could make out, the verdict had been entered for the plaintiff at the trial, subject to the opinion of the Court, whether his replication, which confessed and avoided an hostile title set up in one of the pleas, by claiming under an alleged lessee of the person whose title the plea set up, was made out. Rule nisi.

BAIL COURT.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

PITCHER v. HUMPAGE.

Motion to review taxation.

Charnock moved for a rule to review the Master's taxation herein. The action was brought to recover 6*l.* The cause was set down for trial, but the record was withdrawn by the plaintiff. The defendant afterwards obtained a certificate for the costs of the day, which were taxed at 18*l.* including two refresher fees of 3*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* and 2*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* On the 30th of October the defendant took out a summons to stay the proceedings on payment of debt and costs. It was now contended that, as the defendant had consented to pay the debt and costs, the refresher fees ought to be disallowed, as the defendant would, of course, not pay any. It was also urged that the costs had been taxed upon the wrong scale.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The Master will set all this right when he taxes the plaintiff's costs.

Charnock.—That cannot be done; the defendant will seek to set off his 18*l.* against our debt and costs.

WIGHTMAN, J.—If there is any difficulty upon the point, you can come again to the Court.

The Master stated that he had intimated that he would take the allowance of the refresher fees into his consideration on taxing the plaintiff's costs.

WIGHTMAN, J.—It seems to me to be a very inconvenient mode to tax prospective costs, which, as in this case, may never in fact be incurred. All that should be done should be the taxing of costs actually due. The Master will, however, do all that is right.
No rule.

REG. v. THE NORWICH AND BRANDON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mandamus to a railway company, commanding them to build a bridge pursuant to their Act.

Cleasby moved on behalf of the Norwich Insurance Company for a mandamus, commanding the above railway company to construct a bridge over the river Yare, in the county of Norfolk, pursuant to the terms of their Act. By the 7 Vict. c. 15, s. 241 (Railway Act), the company are empowered to build a bridge over the river Yare (on which the Norwich Insurance Company have some mills), so as to leave the same width of water-way as before, and to leave a height of five feet, &c. between the ordinary level of the river and the inner surface of the crown of the bridge. The company have built a bridge over the river, but have built it on a number of piles driven into the bed of the river; the piles being twenty-eight in number, and each thirteen inches square, and occupying forty feet out of the fifty-six feet which is the width of the river. It was sworn that the effect of this is to obstruct the flow of the water. Rule nisi.

(Before Mr. Justice PATTESON.)

Ex parte JOHN CRESSWELL.

Habeas corpus to bring up a party committed under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34 (the Masters and Servants Act).

Miller moved for a writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the keeper of the Stafford Gaol, directing him to bring up the body of the above party, with the view to his being discharged. It appeared that on 13th of January, 1844, the applicant agreed to serve his master for twelve months (having before been in his employment), and at that time he signed a memorandum in his master's book as follows:—

"I, John Cresswell, agree to work for Mr. John Poolton Whitehead, as his hired servant, for twelve months, from this day to the 13th of January, 1845."

The business at which the applicant was to work was that of a tray manufacturer, for which he was paid so much per tray. Under this contract he served until July last, when he applied to his master for an increased scale of remuneration, which being refused, he declined to work. Upon this he was taken up and convicted, and sentenced to a month's imprisonment. At the expiration of the sentence no application was made to him to continue his services, and he abstained from returning to his work, whereupon he was again taken up on an information laid by his master for absenting himself, and committed to gaol for fourteen days. It was now insisted that this was not a contract within the meaning of the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, s. 3, inasmuch as from no mention being made of wages or remuneration, it was not legally binding on the servant, or, in other words, that there was no mutuality.

The learned counsel also applied for a certiorari to bring up the proceedings before the justices, and, in order to save expense, that the rule for the habeas should be nisi only, as the prosecutor and justices would willingly abide by the opinion of the Court on the argument.

PATTESON, J.—This is a new practice, but I understand it is sometimes done; but the rule for the certiorari must be absolute. Rules accordingly.

REG. v. FRANCIS GRAHAM MOON, Esq.

Ex parte DAVID SALOMONS, Esq.

Quo warranto to try the validity of an appointment to a corporate office.

The Solicitor-General (with whom were James and Lush) moved, on the behalf of Mr. Salomons, for a rule nisi, calling upon Mr. Moon to shew cause by what authority he fills the office of alderman of the city of London for the ward of Portsoken.

It appeared that a vacancy in the above ward having taken place in consequence of the retirement of Mr. Alderman Johnson, Mr. Salomons was elected by a large majority. After his election he attended, on the 15th of October, pursuant to notice, the Court of Mayor and Aldermen, with the view of being admitted by that court. On this occasion he applied for time, in order that he might consult counsel (who were then out of town) as to the peculiar features of his case. This request the Court refused to concur with, and inquired of him whether he had made and signed the declaration pursuant to the 9 Geo. 4, c. 17, s. 2, which is as follows:—"Be it therefore enacted, that every person who shall hereafter be placed, elected, or chosen in or to the office of mayor, alderman, recorder, bailiff, town clerk, or common councilman, or in or to any office of magistracy or place, trust, or employment relating to the government of any city, corporation, borough, or cinque port, within England and Wales, or the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, shall, within one calendar month next before or upon his admission into any of the aforesaid offices or trust, make and subscribe the declaration following:—

"I, A B, do solemnly and sincerely, in the presence of God, profess, testify, and declare, upon the true faith of a Christian, that I will never exercise any power, authority, or influence which I may possess by virtue of the office of , to injure or weaken the Protestant church as it is by law established in England, or to disturb the said church, or the bishops and clergy of the said church, in the possession of any rights or privileges to which such church or the said bishops and clergy are or may be by law entitled."

To the question thus put Mr. Salomons replied in the negative; he then offered to take the customary oaths, but this was refused, unless he would first make and sign the foregoing declaration. Mr. Salomons hereupon declared himself ready to make the declaration in such a form as would be binding on his conscience, namely, by leaving out the words "upon the true faith of a Christian," he being of the Jewish persuasion. This the Court refused to permit, and declared the office of alderman vacant; whereupon Mr. Moon was elected and sworn in.

On behalf of Mr. Salomons it was now contended, that he was entitled to hold the office, and that he had done, or had offered to do, all that the law required of him. It was sought to distinguish the present case from that of Reg. v. Humphreys, Esq. (10 Ad. & Ell. 335), which was argued in the Exchequer Chamber, and which turned upon the same point as that involved in the present case, and in which the Court decided that the words "upon his admission" mean at the time, and not within a reasonable time, and that the authorities whose duty it is to admit may prescribe the order in which the ceremonies forming part of the admission shall take place; and it was now contended that that decision was made in ignorance of a decision of Lord Eldon in the Queen's College case (1 Jacob, 1), which was not at all referred to, and which decided that such words, or rather the words "at the time of," merely mean "on the occasion of the admission;" and, therefore, that the Court of Mayor and Aldermen should not have declared the office vacant until they had done every thing which is required from them; and that they should have tendered the oaths, which they did not do, after which it would have been time enough to have required the making of the declaration.

It was further contended, that the words "upon the true faith of a Christian" are no part of the declaratory portion of the declaration, but are merely formal and introductory, and could be legally omitted. Independently of which, it was insisted, that the declaration itself amounted to an oath, inasmuch as it is a solemn calling upon God to witness the truth of the assertion, and, therefore, was within the operation of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105, which enacts, "That in all cases in which an oath may lawfully be and shall have been administered to any person, either as a juryman, or as a witness or a deponent, in any proceedings civil or criminal in any court of law or equity in the United Kingdom, or on appointment to any office or employment, or on any account whatever, such person is bound by the oath administered, provided the same shall have been administered in such form and with such ceremonies as such person may declare to be binding; and every such person, in case of wilful false swearing, may be convicted of the crime of perjury in the same manner as if the oath had been in the form and with the ceremonies most commonly adopted;" and being so, Mr. Salomons had a right to modify the declaration in conformity with his conscientious scruples.

PATTESON, J.—The 1 & 2 Vict. applies to oaths, and it is difficult to see how this is an oath. It is one thing to say, "I make this in the presence of God," and another to invoke God by the words "So help me God." If a man were to come before me and say, "I will take an oath in any form I please," I should not permit it. The Act of Parliament is worded very strangely.

The Solicitor-General.—Much must in such a case be left to the discretion of the Court in determining whether the scruples are conscientious.

PATTESON, J.—This case certainly differs from the former one, as Mr. Salomons did here offer to take the oaths; and it raises, certainly, the question whether these words are a material part of the declaration. In the former case, I believe, he refused to take the oaths.

The Solicitor-General.—He did so.

PATTESON, J.—You may take your rule to shew cause. It is difficult for me to say, after the decision of the Exchequer Chamber, that we will now run counter to it. That case, however, was not taken to the House of Lords. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF DERBYSHIRE.

Mandamus to justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal under the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59.

Mildmay moved for a rule nisi for a mandamus to the above justices, commanding them to enter continuances and hear an appeal under the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59 (an Act to authorize for one year, and until the end of the then next session of Parliament, the application of a portion of the highway rates to turnpike roads in certain cases). The first section of the above Act enables justices at special sessions for highways, on proof of the deficiency of the funds of any turnpike trust, to order a payment to that trust of a certain portion of the highway rate. The second section provides, that if the surveyor shall refuse to pay over such portion of the said rate at the time mentioned in the order, the same shall be levied upon his goods. The third section provides, that if any person shall feel himself aggrieved by any order, judgment, or determination made, or by any matter, &c. done, &c. such person shall be at liberty to make his complaint thereof by appeal to the justices at the next Quarter Sessions, first giving ten days' notice in writing of the grounds of such appeal within six days after such order, judgment, or determination shall be so made or given as aforesaid, &c. Under this statute an order was pronounced on the 23rd of April, but was not served until the 5th of June. On the 11th of June notice of appeal was served, being within six days of the service of the order, though not within six days of the special sessions at which the order was pronounced. At the sessions it was objected on the part of the respondents, that, as the notice was not given within the six days of the making of the order (which bore date the 23rd April), the appellants were too late; and the justices being of this opinion, they refused to hear the appeal.

It was now insisted that the obvious meaning of the 3rd section is to give the power of giving notice of grounds of appeal within six days of the order itself coming to the hands of the appellants, they having no certain knowledge of its contents until its delivery.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF DERBYSHIRE.

Mandamus to justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal against an order of bastardy, they having refused to hear the appeal, because no grounds of appeal had been given.

Willmore moved for a rule nisi for a mandamus commanding the above justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal.

The facts of the case were these. One John Weston having been summoned under the provisions of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, upon an application for an order of bastardy, he duly appeared, and the justices having adjudicated, he gave notice of appeal. At the following Derbyshire sessions the appellant entered his appeal, when it was objected on the behalf of the respondent (Jane Morley, the mother of the child), that as no grounds of appeal had been served, the appellant was not entitled to have his appeal heard, and the justices being of this opinion, they refused to hear the appeal.

It was now contended that in this course the justices were wrong, for that upon such an appeal no statement of grounds is necessary; for that the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, requires none to be given, neither does the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85, and the clause in the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76 (the Poor Law Amendment Act), requiring grounds to be given, applying only to orders of removal, and, indeed, that Act containing no machinery for an appeal in matters of bastardy, the original application being, by that Act, to the Quarter Sessions. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE CORONER OF WIGAN.

Ex parte BLUNDEN.

Certiorari to remove a coroner's inquisition, with the view to quashing same.

Cowling moved for a certiorari to the coroner of Wigan, commanding him to return into this court an inquisition taken before him on the body of Michael Ashcroft, with a view to quashing the same for defects apparent on its face.

In this case an inquest had been held on the body of Ashcroft, who was killed by the explosion of a steam-boiler attached to the colliery of Mr. Blunden, at Wigan, in Lancashire when the jury assessed a deodand on the boiler of 130*l*. It was now objected that the inquisition was bad for the following reasons:—

1st. That it did not appear that the jury came from the proper district. The inquest was held before the borough coroner of Wigan, but the jury were not described as of that town, but as "good and lawful men of the said county" (Lancashire), "duly chosen," &c. (Jer. on Cor. 252; 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 126.)

2nd. That the deodand is on the boiler for having killed the deceased, who was a child only six years old, and it being doubtful whether or not there can be a deodand in the case of an infant. (Jer. 199.)

3rd. That it does not appear with sufficient certainty how the deceased came by his death, the allegation being that he was killed "by the force and violence of the explosion." (Rex v. The Constable of the Tower of London, Jer. 408; 2 Man. & Ry. 397.)

4th. That it does not sufficiently appear that the deceased was killed in consequence of the boiler, as he may have been killed by fright occasioned by the explosion.

5th. That the deodand should have been upon the fragments of the boiler, and not upon the boiler itself. (Reg. v. Brownlow 11 Ad. & Ell. 119.)

6th. That it does not appear that the boiler was a chattel, and a deodand can only be imposed upon a chattel. Rule nisi.

Ex parte JOHN HOWARD.

Habeas corpus to bring up a party committed to gaol under the Master and Servants Act (4 Geo. 4, c. 34).

J. P. Cobbett moved on behalf of the above party, who is now a prisoner in the New Bailey at Saltford, for a habeas corpus to bring him up with the view to his being discharged. This party had been committed to gaol under the 4 Geo. 4 c. 34, s. 3, for absenting himself from his employment as a spindle-maker, and it was argued that the warrant of commitment was bad on its face, for the following reasons:—

1st. That it does not state any complaint by the person with whom the contract was made.

2nd. That it does not shew any contract in fact with the person who makes the complaint.

3rd. That the place where the commitment was made is not stated.

4th. That from the statement of the contract no offence is clearly shewn. Rule nisi.

Wednesday, Nov. 13.

(Before Mr. Justice PATTESON.)

Ex parte JOHN GRAY.

In a commitment under the Masters and Servants' Acts, 6 Geo, 3, c. 25, and 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, s. 3, the warrant (which must be construed as a conviction) should state that the evidence was taken in the presence of the defendant on oath.

In this case a rule nisi for a habeas corpus had been obtained, with the view of discharging the above party out of the custody of the keeper of the House of Correction, at Salford, in the county of Lancaster. It appeared that the applicant had, on the 11th of October last, been committed to the above gaol for three months, for an offence under one of the Masters and Servants' Acts, viz. for absenting himself from his service before the term of his contract had expired, and in support of the application it was insisted that the commitment was bad for several reasons, but principally because there was no allegation that the examination of the witnesses was taken upon oath, which was the objection upon which the decision ultimately turned. The statement upon this point in the warrant of commitment was as follows:—"And whereas, in pursuance of the statute in that case made and provided, the said John Gray was on the 11th day of October, at Wigan, in the said county, duly brought before me to answer the said complaint, and I, the said justice, duly thereupon then and there, in the presence as well of the said John Johnson as of the said John Gray, examine and inquire into the proofs and allegations of the said parties, touching the matter of the said complaint, and, upon due consideration had thereof, I had adjudged and determined that the said John Gray did contract with the said John Johnson to serve him as a collier for the said term of twelve months, and did afterwards, before the term of his said contract was completed, to wit, on the said 2nd of October in the same year aforesaid, unlawfully absent himself from his said service, contrary to the form of the statute in that case made, and I do therefore convict him," &c.

Bodkin and Huddleston, for the prisoner, argued that the warrant, which also, on the authority of Reg. v. Tordoff (13 L. J. M. C. 115), is in effect a conviction, and therefore must be construed as such, should have stated the evidence to have been taken in the presence of the defendant, on oath, and that the case of Reg. v. Lewis (13 L. J. M. C. 46) is precisely in point.

A variety of other objections were urged.

Cowling, in support of the commitment, argued that the commitment was in the nature of an order and not of a conviction, and should be construed as other orders; and that, as an order, it was not necessary that there should be any statement of the evidence having been taken on oath, since it would be implied that the magistrate had done his duty, and had only taken the evidence upon oath (Rex. v. Cheshire, 5 B. & Ad. 441; Rex. v. Staffordshire, 12 East, 572; Johnson v. Reid, 6 M. & W. 124; Mungerhunger v. Warden, Set. & Rem. 166); and that this view of the case was not taken in Reg. v. Lewis. The other objections were also met by the learned counsel.

PATTISON, J. however, thought the objection against the warrant above stated was fatal, and that after the cases of Reg. v. Tordoff and Reg. v. Lewis, he was not at liberty to decide otherwise than against this commitment; that the commitment was in effect a conviction, and ought to have alleged that the evidence was taken in the presence of the prisoner upon oath; and that, in the absence of any positive statement, he could not infer that it had been so taken.

Prisoner discharged.

Ex parte HUGH BLANEY.

This was another case similar in all its particulars to the foregoing. Prisoner discharged.

Ex parte The Rev. JAMES MEADE NISBETT.

A warrant which directs police-officers to arrest a defendant and keep him in custody, so as to produce him at the next quarter sessions, is bad, such a custody being illegal.

In this case the above gentleman was brought before this Court on the return of a habeas corpus, which set out that he was in custody (having been arrested whilst attending the London Court of Bankruptcy), by virtue of an Irish warrant backed by a magistrate of London, of which warrant the following is a copy:—

"County of Tipperary, to wit.	By the worshipful the justices of the peace, at the general quarter sessions of the peace, held at Thurles, in and for the county of Tipperary, the 20th day of October, 1844. Whereas James Meade Nesbitt, late of Barrisokane, in the county of Tipperary, stands indicted in the peace-office of the county of Tipperary for a rescue at the prosecution of Martin Corban and John Morgan, and also for a riot, for which he has not received his trial: These are, therefore, in her Majesty's name, strictly to charge and command the police of the county of Tipperary forthwith to apprehend the said James Meade Nesbitt, if he may be found in the said county of Tipperary, and him so apprehended in safe custody keep, so that you may have his body before her Majesty's justices of the peace at the next sessions of Nenagh, to be held in the said county on the 13th day of January next, to answer for the said offence. And this shall be your warrant. Dated as above. "J. P. PRETTIE,

"Clerk of the Peace.

"To the police of the county of Tipperary."

Indorsed—

"To all Constables of the Metropolitan Police-office, and others whom it may concern.

"Metropolitan Police District, to wit,	Let this warrant be executed within the said district, proof upon oath having been made before me, one of the magistrates of the Police-Court, Bow-street, of the due signature and hand-writing of the above-named John Ponsonby Prettie.

"Given under my hand at the Police-court, Bow-street, this 8th day of November, 1844.

"D. JARDINE."

Humfrey, Bodkin, and Sturgeon now moved for his discharge, contending that the warrant was insufficient to justify his detention, because, 1st, it does not appear that the clerk of the peace who signed the warrant had any authority to issue it; 2nd, that the allegation that the applicant "stands indicted in the peace-office," is unmeaning and nonsensical; 3rd, because it avers merely that the applicant "has not received his trial," which is no ground for his being taken up on a warrant, since he may have been lawfully at large upon bail; and that the warrant should shew that he is liable to be arrested; 4th, the name of the applicant was mis-spelt, it being Nisbett and not Nesbitt.

Dowdeswell, in support of the return, argued that the warrant and backing were sufficient; that the clerk of the peace, who is the officer of the Court of Quarter Sessions, is the proper party to issue the warrant on the direction of the Court, and that the indictment is properly in his custody; that the warrant, which was merely to bring the defendant before another tribunal, was sufficient. (Mead's case, 2 Wilson; Rex. v. Wyndham, 1 Str. 2; 1 Hale, P. C. 595. 609; Rex. v. Chubb, 2 T. R. 255.

PATTISON, J. held the warrant to be bad, particularly for two objections; 1st, because it states that the applicant "stands indicted in the peace-office;" which to him appeared to be nonsensical, and to mean nothing which could justify his arrest; 2nd, because the warrant directs the police of the county to apprehend the defendant, and "keep him in safe custody till the next sessions," which was a course of proceedings manifestly contrary to law, since, if the party is arrested on a bailable offence, he had a right to give bail to it, and if not, the constable's duty is to hand him over to gaol for safe custody, but certainly not to detain him in his own custody.

Prisoner discharged.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

REG. v. WESTON, in BROWN v. EDWARDS.

Where a party is taken on an attachment for not obeying a judge's order, the Court will not discharge him out of custody on an allegation that he has purged his contempt by complying with the order, unless it is satisfied that such compliance is bonâ fide, and not merely colourable.

Platt, Q.C. shewed cause against a rule nisi obtained by Crowder to discharge the defendant, who had been taken on an attachment, out of custody. It appeared that in January, 1843, an order had been obtained to compel Mr. Thomas Eyre Weston, an attorney, to deliver his bill of costs, and also an account of all moneys received by him on account of his client. This order he did not obey, and in Trinity Term following a rule absolute for an attachment was obtained, but, in consequence of Mr. Weston not being to be met with, he was not taken upon it until the 2nd of November instant. On the 4th of November he caused his bill and account to be delivered, whereupon this application was made for his discharge. In opposition to this rule, it was contended that he had only colourably complied with the order, for that the bill and cash account were verified only by the defendant's clerk, who swore that the account gave credit for all sums of money received, "as he was informed and believed," no affidavit verifying the documents having been made by the defendant himself, and the accounts themselves being manifestly untrue, and that before the Court would discharge him from custody, therefore, it would require to be satisfied that he had bonâ fide complied with the order.

Crowder, Q.C. contrà, contended that as the order was merely for the delivery of a bill and accounts, to the end that they might be submitted to taxation, the defendant, in having delivered them, had entitled himself to be discharged; it being a question for the Master alone, whether or not, or to what extent, the bill and accounts were correct. (2 Dowl. 231.)

His LORDSHIP, however, considered the conduct of the defendant as far from satisfactory, particularly when he remembered how long a period he had resisted the order of the Court, and the vague manner in which he at last complied; but he thought that the bill of costs and accounts should be at once referred to the Master to tax, who should report on what terms the defendant should be discharged.

Rule accordingly.

BAXTER v. COPE.

Motion for a nonsuit.

Symons shewed cause against a rule obtained herein by Pashley, to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and enter a nonsuit.

The action had been brought to recover a sum of money for the keep of the illegitimate child of the defendant. On the trial it appeared that the mother of the child had been living in the house of her father, the plaintiff, with the child for some time, and on the plaintiff's declaring that he would not keep the child unless the defendant contributed to its support, a friend represented the case to the father of the child, who said that he would pay 1s. 6d. a week for seven years. The jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff for 6*l.* 19s. 6d. being the amount claimed; and this rule was moved on the ground that, as the putative father was not primarily liable to support the child, this was a collateral contract, namely, to be answerable for the debt of another (the mother), and therefore void under the Statute of Frauds, as not being in writing.

PATTESON, J., however thought that this was not a collateral, but an original contract, and not within the statute. Rule discharged.

MORGAN v. CHAMBERS.—Williams moved in this case, which was tried before the Undersheriff of Carmarthenshire, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff, with 18*l.* 16s. 6d. damages, for a new trial. Cur. adv. vult.

RANDALL v. HUMPHRIES.—Bull moved in this case, which was tried before the Undersheriff of Devon, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff, damages 5*l.* 2s. 6d. for a nonsuit, or to enter a verdict for the defendant, or a new trial. Rule refused.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF LUDGERSHALL.—Rose moved for a certiorari to remove this indictment, which was preferred at the sessions, for the nonrepair of a highway, into this court, as the question as to liability would be raised, and it would also be necessary to have a view. Rule granted.

Ex parte THE OVERSEERS OF HAMSTHWAIT, Re DAVID SMITH.—Wilkins moved for a certiorari to remove the recognizances of the defendant and his sureties, entered into by them on an application for an order of affiliation under the 2 & 3 Vict. into this court, with the view to proceeding against the parties by sci. fa. (Rex v. Wablin, 2 C. & P. 10.)

Re The Arbitration between COLES and BARKER.—Best moved for an attachment for the nonpayment of costs. Rule nisi.

Saturday.

JOB v. THOMPSON.—Flood moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff herein and for a new trial, and for a return of the amount levied, on the ground of the cause having been tried contrary to good faith. Rule nisi.

PAGDON v. PAGDON.—James moved to set aside the warrant of attorney and for a return to the assignees of the defendant of the amount levied. Rule nisi.

HOBBS v. YOUNG.—Atkinson moved to set aside the copy and service of the writ of summons herein, on the ground of the debt sought to be recovered not having been indorsed. Rule nisi.

BROWN v. EDWARDS.—Platt, Q.C. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Crowder, Q.C. to discharge an attorney out of custody who had been taken on an attachment for not obeying an order of a judge to deliver his bill of costs, and he took a preliminary objection that the affidavits on which the rule was moved were entitled as between the parties, instead of "The Queen on the prosecution, &c.," the proceedings being now on the Crown side of the Court. Rule discharged.

Monday.

WHEELER v. BRANSCOMBE (three actions) and HARLEY v. BRANSCOMBE (two actions).—M. Smith moved for a rule calling upon the plaintiffs in these actions to shew cause why they should not enter discontinuances under the peculiar facts of the case. Rule nisi.

Tuesday.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF BLOXHAM.—Pigott moved for a rule nisi to quash the certiorari obtained to remove an order of sessions, on the ground that the writ had issued on an insufficient affidavit, the words "before me" being omitted in the jurat.

Rule nisi, to come on with the case in the Crown paper.

Ex parte DUNN.—Birch moved for an attachment against Mr. Drake, an attorney, for not obeying an order of Maule, J. directing him to assign or cancel the articles of clerkship of the applicant; but on Sir John Bayley intimating that he was about to move for a rule to rescind this order, it was agreed that the whole question should be discussed on the return of this rule. Rule nisi to rescind the order.

REG. v. THE CAPITAL BURGESSES OF TREGONY.—Smirke moved for an attachment against three of the capital burgesses of this borough, and for a peremptory mandamus to elect a mayor. In this case a mandamus had been issued, commanding the eight capital burgesses of this corporation to elect a mayor. On the day appointed four only had met (in consequence of which no election took place), and of the remaining four, one was of unsound mind; it was therefore against the three others, who had not met to elect, that the attachment was sought. (See 3 Law T. 185.)

Rule absolute for a peremptory mandamus and for an attachment.

Ex parte the next of kin of GEORGE GARDINER.—Mellor moved for a certiorari to remove a coroner's inquisition, finding the deceased a felo de se, into this court, with a view to quashing the same, for defects apparent on its face. Certiorari granted.

HAWKINS v. BENTON.—Best moved for a rule, calling upon the defendant to shew cause why he should not pay a sum of money on an award. Rule nisi.

ALFRED v. FARLOW.—Bramwell shewed cause against the rule obtained by Warren in this case. (See 4 Law T. 101.) Rule discharged on terms.

LONGUEVILLE v. FAIRCROSS.

Practice—Calling witnesses on subpœna.

In this case, after Dowling, Serjt. had stated the facts to the jury, he called the witnesses for the plaintiff, but not one of them answered. They were then called by the officer of the court, and on their nonappearance Dowling asked the learned judge to order them to be called on their subpœnas.

CRESSWELL, J. declined to do so without the subpœnas were produced in court; for, he said, that he could not tell that they had been ever issued

The plaintiff was then nonsuited.

[Note.—It is not quite clear that an attachment could be obtained unless the witness was called on the subpœna. In Rex v. Stretch (3 Dowl. P. C. 359) Patteson, J. refused a motion for an attachment on that ground; but in Dixon v. Lee (ibid. p 359), the Court of Exchequer granted the rule under similar circumstances. In Rex v. Stretch (4 Dowl. P. C. 30) the question was again mooted, but it became unnecessary to decide it. Patteson, J. however, observed, that "the case of Dixon v. Lee, in the Exchequer, was before that of Rex v. Stretch. If it had been brought to my attention at the time I decided Rex v. Stretch, I certainly should not have expressed so strong an opinion as to the necessity of the defendant being called on his subpœna." Rex v. Fenn (3 Dowl. P.C. 546) decides that the officer need not actually hold the subpœna in his hand, when the witness is called, provided it be produced in the court. By calling the witnesses on their subpœnas, before the jury are sworn, the additional expense of a nonsuit may be saved. (See Mullett v. Hunt, 1 C. & M. 752.)]

COSTS IN BASTARDY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Guildhall, Taunton, Nov. 2, 1844.

The New Bastardy Law—Important Decision as to Costs.

PRING, Spinster, v. HARTNELL.

This application for an order upon the putative father was heard some weeks since, when the justices determined to grant the order; whereupon Mr. H. W. Shillibeer, who appeared on behalf of the mother, called their attention to the clause in the new Act, empowering them to include costs in the order, which, he contended, applied to professional charges as well as to the other expenses; for otherwise the alteration in the law, instead of conferring a boon upon the unfortunate mother, would be a manifest disadvantage to her, inasmuch as the Act expressly prohibits the interference of any magisterial, parochial, or union officer, as such officer, in such cases; and that, therefore, without professional aid, nineteen applications out of twenty must fail. The magistrates fell in with Mr. Shillibeer's views, and intimated their disposition to order one guinea for his fee in this case; but at the next meeting, whereon the order was to have been completed, they upon consideration expressed their doubts as to whether they were legally justified in including such expenses in the order. Upon this, Mr. Shillibeer suggested that an opinion should be obtained; when Mr. Pinchard, the justices' clerk, kindly undertook to write to Sir James Graham on the subject; who, a day or two since, in reply to Mr. Pinchard, stated that magistrates were justified in ordering the payment of reasonable professional charges in all such cases for the conducting of which they may consider the employment of a professional man necessary.

GENTLEMEN,—The above is from the Taunton Courier of Wednesday. Will you kindly give your opinion in your next, as to the mode to be adopted to enforce the payment of costs on the defendant; whether by an action at law, or by distress-warrant from the justices? The bastardy clauses in the New Poor Law are in many cases extremely difficult to act under; and any light you can throw on them, through the means of your valuable journal, will be a great boon to the justices in general and the public at large.

Your obedient servant,

WILLIAM TUCKER,
Justice of the Peace for Devon, Somerset, and Dorset.

Colyton Park, Axminster,
Nov. 8, 1844.

We immediately forwarded the above to a Barrister of great experience in Poor Law Practice, requesting an article upon the subject, with which he has favoured us, and we subjoin it.

COSTS OF BASTARDY.

Can justices under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101 (the late Poor Law Act) s. 3, include in the costs directed by their order to be paid by the putative father the fees of the attorney who attends on behalf of the applicant?

A question of much interest and importance has recently arisen under the late Act, "For the further amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor in England" (7 & 8 Vict. c. 101), upon which some considerable diversity of opinion exists, but which we think is capable of solution in a way at once clear and satisfactory. It arose out of an application under the above statute to the justices of Somersetshire for an order of bastardy. About the propriety of making the order there was no doubt, but some hesitation existed amongst the magistrates as to whether or not the statute enabled them to include in the amount of costs which they intended to award the applicant the professional charges of the attorney who attended on her behalf at the hearing. The inclination of the justices was to allow the professional gentleman a guinea, but upon further reflection, and upon the suggestion of their clerk that the case should be represented to Sir James Graham, it was resolved that their ultimate decision should abide the event of the application to the Home Office. With that promptness and attention which characterize the proceedings of this department of the Government, an answer was speedily returned, which stated, "That the magistrates were justified in ordering the payment of reasonable professional charges in all such cases, for the conducting of which they may consider the employment of a professional man necessary."

Although we are not in general disposed to place much confidence in legal opinions emanating from the Home-office, expressed, as those opinions but too frequently are, upon a hasty and untechnical view of the subject, we are nevertheless upon the present occasion inclined to the belief that the correct view has been taken of the question proposed. Indeed, we have no doubt whatever that the opinion above given is in strict accordance with law and justice, and that the magistrates were justified in including in the costs allowed, the moderate charge for professional assistance. The power to give costs in legal proceedings is not of common-law origin; the right to costs in every case is dependent upon statutory provisions, and the earliest provision upon the subject is the Act of the 6 Edw. 1 (statute of Gloucester), c. 1, s. 2, which provides "that the demandant may recover against the tenant the costs of his writ purchased" (which, says Mr. Tidd, has been construed to extend to the whole costs of his suit), "together with the damages abovesaid; and this Act shall hold place in all cases where the party is entitled to recover damages." This statute is still in operation, and, in fact, is the one which in all actions in which damages are recovered gives the plaintiff his costs. Slighter words could scarcely well be used upon such a subject, and yet with such favour have our Courts looked upon the right to costs, that an effect has been given to them of the most powerful character. Indeed, the courts of law have ever manifested a liberal spirit upon the question of costs, acting upon the principle that the party who, by the conduct of another, is injured and necessarily incurs expenses in obtaining redress, should be reimbu sed from the pocket of the wrong-doer. Our courts of law are constantly expressing themselves favourably to a full satisfaction in the shape of costs being made to the injured party, in all cases in which by a favourable construction of the Act of Parliament it can be made. Thus, in the case of Reg. v. The Justices of Merionethshire (13 L. J. N. S. M. C. 114), in which the case mainly rested upon the fact, that these justices were in the habit on appeals of allowing only thirty shillings for costs, the Court of Queen's Bench censured the practice, and expressed a hope that the justices would exercise a discretion as to the amount of costs to be given, and would therefore reconsider their practice and ascertain the real amount of costs. It may be taken, therefore, that our courts favour costs, and that they will extend rather than restrict the operation of a clause giving them.

As regards the case in question, what are the terms of the Act? By the 3rd section of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, it is enacted, "that after the birth of such bastard child, on the appearance of the person so summoned, or on proof that the summons was duly served on such person or left at his last place of abode, six days at least before the petty sessions, the justices in such petty sessions shall hear the evidence of such woman and such other evidence as she may produce, and shall also hear any evidence tendered by or on behalf of the person alleged to be the father, and if the evidence of the mother be corroborated in some material particular by other testimony, to the satisfaction of the said justices, they may adjudge the man to be the putative father of such bastard child; and they may also, if they see fit, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, proceed to make an order or the putative father for the payment to the mother of the bastard child, under the provisions of this Act, of a sum of money weekly, and of such costs as may have been incurred in the obtaining of such order, including, if they think proper, ten shillings for the midwife and ten shillings towards the funeral expenses of the child, provided it has died before the making of such order," &c. &c. Here, then, there is an express power given to the justices to award such costs as may have been incurred in the obtaining of the order. Would such costs include the reasonable fee to an attorney for conducting the case of the applicant before the magistrates? We think they would; because in every case the application under the Act must be made at the instance of the woman herself, and because the Act requires a course of proceeding on her part before the justices which necessarily involves the possession of some technical legal knowledge, rendering, therefore, the assistance of a legal person almost indispensable. To deprive the female, under such circumstances, of this professional assistance, by throwing the burden of payment exclusively upon her—her who, by her necessities and the arts of her paramour, is driven to this course, would be to render the Act in this respect a nullity, and injure instead of serve the objects for whose advantage it was intended. Professional aid under such circumstances is an absolute necessary, and a needful instrument in carrying the Act of Parliament into execution. In granting the reasonable expense of professional attendance, the justices will of course be guided by the circumstances of the case, remembering that that only is necessary which the party cannot well do without; a fee for attendance before them may well be considered as a proper cost, and may with safety be embodied in the aggregate amount of costs which they may direct to be paid. Nor need the magistrates fear being involved in litigation for allowing this item, since it is not open to an appellant to question the particular sums forming the total of the costs, the justices not setting forth the particular items, but directing the payment of a sum certain.

Upon this subject we are glad to have the concurrence of Mr. Lumley, who, in his excellent treatise upon this statute, says, in a note to the third clause, "These costs would include, apparently, the costs of the complainant's attorney, if, as it has been suggested, she is entitled to appear by attorney. The Poor Law Commissioners advised that the words 'full costs and charges incurred by the person intended to be charged,' in 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 73, would authorize the allowance of the cost of an attorney employed by a defendant in proceedings in bastardy under that Act. The words in the text do not substantially differ. The allowance in respect of costs in civil proceedings, which depend upon the statute of Gloucester or other statutes, are not supported by stronger words. Perhaps it may not be incorrect to consider that it is discretionary with the justices to determine in any particular case whether the woman was justified in employing an attorney, and to allow his expenses as part of the costs incurred by her or not, as they think proper. Opinions of weight have, however, been given, to the effect that the justices cannot allow the expenses of the attorney employed by the woman. At the same time it is to be remembered that the award of costs by the justices is not open to question by any other tribunal, except, perhaps, on appeal under sec. 4;" and we are perfectly at a loss to know how any appeal could be supported upon such a ground. Upon a careful consideration, therefore, of the Act of Parliament itself,—of the general policy and principle of our law upon the subject of costs, and of the absolute necessity of professional assistance in the case suggested, we feel satisfied that, in the language of the Home Secretary, "the magistrates are justified in ordering the payment of reasonable professional charges in all such (like) cases, for the conducting of which they may consider the employment of a professional man necessary." These costs are directed, in default of payment within one month, to be levied by distress and sale of the offender's goods, for which purpose ample and intelligible provisions are contained in the third clause.

Affiliation Cases under Sir J. Graham's Poor Law Amendment Act.—(From a Correspondent.)—It is not generally known that, by the operation of the late Act of Parliament (7 & 8 Vict. c. 101), intituled, "An Act for the further Amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor in England," a considerable portion of business, until lately transacted at the metropolitan police courts, has been withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the police magistrates (who, until the passing of the late Act, had concurrent jurisdiction with the county magistrates), and placed wholly in the hands of the county justices. At a meeting of the magistrates of the several metropolitan police courts, lately held to consider the Act, it was decided that the opinion of the law officers of the Crown should be taken as to their powers in the administration of the affiliation clauses of the Act, and those functionaries have just given it as their opinion that the county magistrates alone have jurisdiction. In consequence of this decision, their worships of the county are now making the necessary arrangements within their several divisions for the performance of the not very pleasing duty which has thus devolved upon them. In several districts the arrangements for taking the affiliation cases and the other business under the Act have been matured, and the weekly meetings arranged. In our neighbouring densely populated district of the Strand, and the various parishes within that union, Messrs. Ebenezer Fernie, Salisbury Butler, and J. Smith, have undertaken the duty, meeting every Saturday at 12 o'clock, at the office in Bow-street, to grant summonses and hear cases. The justices have now power to award costs as against the putative father, including 10s. to midwife and 10s. in the event of the death of the child.

Judicial Resignation in the Isle of Man.—We understand that his Honour Deemster Christian, who has filled the important situation of Deemster for both the southern and northern districts of this island for the last twenty years, is about to retire from the duties of public life, in consequence of the infirmities of old age.—Mona's Herald.

By the death of Iltid Nicoll, esq. an important appointment reverts to the Crown. That gentleman, since the year 1815, has held the office of her Majesty's Procurator-General, more commonly called Queen's Proctor. Although there is no salary attached to this appointment, the emoluments, especially during the time of war, are very large. They then have been estimated at 20,000*l.* a year; being derived from fees on droits of Admiralty, and on legal proceedings connected with prizes and booty captured in war. Of late years the fees for business performed in all cases of property escheated to the Crown have, we believe, constituted the principal portion of the emoluments of the office. The form of appointment of her Majesty's Procurator-General is by letters of privy seal, emanating from the Home Department, although, we believe, the nomination does not rest with the Secretary of State, but with the First Lord of the Treasury.—Observer.

Of the yearly total levy of 12,000,000*l.* sterling for "local rates and taxes" in England and Wales, 10,750,000*l.* are raised in England; of that, above 30 per cent. are upon houses, and 56 per cent. or 6,000,000*l.* are levied upon (30,500,000*l.* sterling as not value or rental of) land in cultivation, comprising 25,500,000 acres of cultivated land. The Report on Local Taxation says—"This burden was so intolerable as in some places to throw land out of cultivation." These local rates extend over above 14,000 parishes, and engage above 180,000 persons in their collection and expenditure, which the Poor Law Commissioners (report) recommend should be placed in their hands! On 27 English railways, 1,200 miles in length, and averaging 12,000 acres, the statistics (taking the actual figures on six months of 1843 as a guide) are as follows:—for one year, gross receipts, above 5,000,000*l.*; working expenses, 1,500,000*l.*; interest on loans, &c. 750,000*l.*; Government duty of 5 per cent. 161,081*l.*; local rates and taxes, 111,000*l.* (besides tithes, land and assessed taxes, &c.), leaving only 2,000,000*l.* for dividend, which was subject to some deductions, the income-tax being about 60,000*l.* The yearly assessment to the poor-rate of those 27 railways was 555,000*l.* being an average of 48*l.* an acre, and a yearly payment of 9*l.* 2*s.* per acre (at 4*s.* in the pound) towards local rates for a quantity of land, which, as such, averaged less than 8,000*l.* assessed value, or 15*s.* per acre, and would have paid (at 4*s.* per acre) less than 2,400*l.* Every year the traffic and the taxation increase. There are above 2,000 miles of railways now in work, with a capital sunk of above 100,000,000*l.*; another 1,000 miles in progress of formation, and another 1,000 to be applied for next session. This enormous difference in local taxation arises from including the profits of the railways and their trade—a principle from which canals, Irish, Scotch, and continental railways are exempt. This contribution is, besides that to 5,000,000*l.* of tithe (the commutation increasing it from 3,500,000*l.* under the old law, and a portion of which was never recovered), 1,250,000*l.* of land-tax and sewers, assessed, and state taxes, &c. and for which and all other taxes the poor-rate assessment is the guide. —Railway and Land Taxation.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

We trust that the great inconvenience of the Winter Circuits will rouse the Profession to a united endeavour to urge upon the Government the necessity of substituting for their imperfect Local Courts Bill a measure for reconstructing the Courts of Quarter Sessions, by placing in them lawyer judges, and enlarging their jurisdiction, with an appeal, so that then the work both of a Winter Circuit and of Local Courts may be done, as it would be, with despatch, with satisfaction to the public, and without the inconveniences of the system just begun, and the still worse one threatened.

TESTIMONIAL

TO MR. CARTER, SOLICITOR, BIDEFORD, ON HIS RETIREMENT FROM PRACTICE.

(From the North Devon Journal.)

In our last number we stated that the professional friends of Charles Carter, esq., of Bideford, had subscribed and presented to him a piece of plate as a token of their regard, and of their sense of his high character for professional ability and integrity, on his retirement from the profession after the unusually lengthened period of fifty years' practice. We are now enabled to state, that the subscription list contains (in addition to the names of Richard Preston, esq. the celebrated conveyancer, William Mackworth Praed, esq. the Recorder of the boroughs or Barnstaple, Bideford, and Southmolton, and J. W. Willcock, esq. of the Chancery bar, formerly an articled clerk of Mr. Carter) the names of eight others of his articled clerks, now in full practice in different parts of the kingdom, and of thirty-three other members of the legal profession, mostly resident in the North of Devon. Many of Mr. Carter's clients and private friends wished to become subscribers, but they were not admitted, it being intended that the offering should be strictly professional.

On Wednesday, the 23rd ult. the subscribers invited Mr. Carter to dinner at the "Marine Hotel," Instow, at which Charles Roberts, esq. the senior practitioner present, was chairman, and Charles Smale, esq. the senior practitioner at Bideford, was vice-chairman, and which was attended by several county magistrates, all of them having been long standing clients and friends of Mr. Carter. After the removal of the cloth, and the disposal of some general and professional toasts, the chairman proceeded to the business of the evening by proposing the health of Mr. Carter, and presenting to him, in the name of the subscribers, a massive silver tureen, which stood on the table in front of the chair, and is to bear the following inscription :—

"To CHARLES CARTER, ESQ. OF BIDEFORD, THIS TUREEN was presented on his retirement from the Profession of the Law, after fifty years' practice, by forty-four members of the same Profession, residing in his neighbourhood, and by whom he was well known ; in testimony of their esteem and warmest regards for the strict integrity and most honourable conduct manifested by him while in the Profession : 23rd October, 1844."

The presentation was accompanied by the following address, which had been unanimously adopted by the Subscribers present, and was read by Cadwallader Palmer, esq.

"To Charles Carter, esq.

"SIR,—On the announcement of your retirement from the profession, after a practice of fifty years, it appeared to many of your professional friends that the event should be marked by some testimonial of their personal respect and esteem, and of their approbation of your more public and professional conduct which has earned for you so distinguished a reputation. A subscription was accordingly opened, limited in amount to one guinea each, and confined to members of the legal profession, for the purchase of a piece of plate to be presented to you in the name of the subscribers. It might have been more massive and splendid had the subscription list been opened to those clients and private friends who wished to add their names as contributors; but such an extension would have been incompatible with our design ; and perhaps the offering will not be the less regarded, on account of its being the spontaneous and exclusive gift of those who have the best opportunity of forming a judgment of professional character; and it is with pleasure we point to the names of Richard Preston and William Mackworth Praed, esqrs. the one at the head of that branch of the law in which you were more particularly distinguished, and the other at the head of the profession in the town in which your professional life has been passed. We therefore, who are present on this occasion, in the name of the whole of the subscribers, present to you as a public testimonial of our respect and esteem for your private character, of our estimation of the superior legal attainments and ability which have marked your professional career, of our admiration of the unvaried integrity by which it has been distinguished, and of our desire that such attainments and ability, and such integrity, may be exhibited as a model for the imitation of those who are commencing their professional life. And now, dear Sir, permit us in conclusion to congratulate you on the success which has rewarded your exertions; on the circumstances of domestic happiness by which you are surrounded; and above all, on the unblemished reputation you are privileged to enjoy ; and to express the hope that in your declining years you may have the continued enjoyment of health, and every blessing that can render life desirable ; that you may be useful as a magistrate, a citizen, and in every relation of life ; and whenever it shall please divine Providence that this life shall terminate, you may enter upon a state of bliss that shall know neither interruption nor decay."

Mr. CARTER then rose, and spoke nearly as follows : "My Professional Friends,—In rising to return you my thanks for the honour you have this day conferred upon me, I do so with feelings of gratification and embarrassment. My feelings of gratification are, that an humble individual, like myself, should be so highly distinguished by respectable professional friends and fellow-countrymen, and that by the spontaneous bounty of those friends a token of plate so splendid should be presented to me, and a banquet so sumptuous provided, in testimony of your approbation of my professional conduct, during a period of fifty years. My feelings of embarrassment are, in consequence of my utter inability to unbosom the feelings of a grateful heart, in the elevated station to which your kindness has raised me. But my friends, is not the highest honour reflected on yourselves, as well individually as collectively, by your fixed determination, in the display now made, to maintain and uphold the profession and practice of the law in its purity and integrity? And is not the honour thus conferred on me conjointly participated by yourselves and me? And now, my friends, I have again to offer you my thanks for the honour you have this day conferred upon me : and may all of you, when arrived at the age of seventy-three, enjoy the blessings of health and happiness in retirement from a useful professional life."

Other toasts followed, and the meeting separated highly pleased with the proceedings of the day.

THE BAR.

It appears by an examination of the records of admissions to the bar by the four Inns of Court—Lincoln's-inn, the Inner Temple, the Middle Temple, and Gray's-inn—that there are now on the books of these societies, as members of the bar, no less than 2,243 individuals.

Of this number we find there are seven gentlemen who were called at periods varying from 50 to 54 years since—namely, called in

Mr. J. Wyatt, of the Inner Temple	..	1790
Mr. T. Quayle, of the Middle Temple	..	1790
Sir C. E. Carrington, ditto	.. ..	1792
Mr. R. Smith ditto	.. ..	1792
Mr. G. N. Best, ditto	.. ..	1793
Mr. R. Gresley, ditto	.. ..	1794
Sir C. Wetherell, of the Inner Temple	..	1794

Of these the latter gentleman is the only one who now practises at the bar.

There are 17 who have been called at respective periods varying from 45 to 50 years, most of whom are benchers of the several inns of court, and have altogether discontinued practice.

There are 28 who have been called from 40 to 45 years since.

There are 122 at periods varying from 30 to 40 years since, that is to say, from 1814 up to 1804 ; in this number we find most of the senior Queen's Counsel of the Chancery and Common Law Bar, as Messrs. Simpkinson, Wakefield, Twiss, Tinney, Swanston, Burge, Temple, Barber, Spence, Wilbraham. Mathews, Koe, &c. of the Chancery ; and Messrs. Preston, Shepherd, Starkie, and Armstrong of the Common Law Bar. In the above number of 122 there are but few "without the bar" who still practise as barristers or conveyancers, but there are several metropolitan and local commissioners, retired police magistrates, and others who have ceased to practise. Of those who have been called from 20 to 30 years, that is, from 1824 to 1814, the number is 308. In this number we find the present Attorney-General, Sir W. Follett, who was called in 1824, and the Solicitor-General, Sir F. Thesiger, who was called in 1818 [also the newly-appointed judge, Mr. Justice Erle, who was called in 1819]. Of the Chancery Bar, we have Messrs. Cooper, Teed, Kindersley, Stuart, Walker, Kenyon Parker, Turner, James Russell, Anderdon, Roupell, Bethell, &c. Queen's Counsel and of the Common Law Bar, Messrs. Platt, Rogers, Law, Chilton, Evans, Andrews, Whateley, Godson, Crowder, Dundas, Jervis, Kelly, Knowles, Lewin, Whitehurst, &c. Queen's Counsel. A considerable number of senior members of the bar who are now in practice and retain their stuff gowns were called during the above time, whilst many who hold commissions and most of the police magistrates are of the same standing.

Many who were practitioners, but whose business has ceased from effluxion of time, are also comprised in the above 308. Of those of 10 to 20 years, that is to say, from 1834 up to 1824, there are 701 members of the bar; of these Messrs. Romilly, Loftus, Wigram, &c. are of the Chancery ; and Messrs. Austin, Cockburn, Talbot, Martin, Stuart Wortley, Roebuck, &c. Queen's Counsel, of the Common Law. Most of the men of "business," both in Equity and Common Law, were called during the last-mentioned time, whilst no small portion belong to the class "briefless."

From 1834 to the present time about 1,200 have been called to the bar, and of this number upwards of 1,100 appear as members of it, and no inconsiderable portion have a share in the legal business of the day. The senior member of the bar was called by the benchers of the Inner Temple in 1790 ; the junior, Mr. T. H. Ware, was called by special order of the bench of the Middle Temple, June 12, 1844, the last day of Trinity Term.

The senior Queen's Counsel in years' standing at the bar is Sir C. Wetherell ; the junior Queen's Counsel in point of time at the bar is Mr. Roebuck.

REDUCTION OF CHANCERY FEES.

When the Bill for the abolition of certain offices of the Court of Chancery, which passed in the year 1842, was first contemplated, one great object in the view of those who projected it is understood to have been, the reduction of expense to the suitors, by remitting from time to time a portion of the fees which, before the passing of that Act, were received for their own benefit by persons whose offices have been abolished by its provisions.

This object has been already accomplished to an extent of which the public are little aware.

It appears, by a return printed in February last, that the amount of fees and sums of money which became payable to the clerks of enrolments, six clerks, sworn clerks, and controller of the Hanaper, under the old constitution of the Six Clerks' Office, in the year ending on the 29th of October, 1842, was 77,319*l.* 19s. 1d.

Since the printing of that return, four orders for the reduction of fees have been issued, having for their object the diminution of the charge for office copies.

By the first of them, dated the 22nd of March last, an old fee was reduced from 10d. to 8d. per folio of 90 words. Thus a reduction of one-fifth was effected in the office of the Clerks of Records and Writs.

By the second order, dated the 15th of April last, an old charge of 1s. 2d. per folio was reduced, in the Examiners'-office, to 8d.

By the third order, dated the 21st of June last, the reduced charge of 8d. per folio, in the two offices of the Clerks of Records and Writs and of the Examiners, was again reduced to 6d.—i. e. by one-fourth.

By an order just issued, dated the 13th of November, the reduced charge of 6d. per folio upon copies in these two offices, has been still further reduced to 4d. per folio.

We have been informed that the estimated amount of these several reductions exceeds the sum of 18,000*l.* a year, which is nearly one-fourth of the whole receipts in the four departments existing prior to the passing of the Court of Chancery Offices' Abolition Act, as these receipts appear stated in the return to which we have adverted ; and this is the result of reductions in the course of less than eight months, under an Act which has been in operation about two years.

REGISTRATION APPEALS.

The Court of Common Pleas has appointed Monday and Thursday next for the hearing of the registration appeals. There are thirty-three set down for hearing, being twenty more than the number heard last year. The following is a list of the thirty-three appeals :—

Sir W. Follett and family left Milan on the 29th ult. for Genoa and Leghorn. The learned Attorney-General continued to improve in health.

Middle Temple.—The undermentioned gentlemen were called to the bar on Friday the 8th inst:—Messrs. Thomas Edward Lloyd, William Eldridge, Richard Meade, Charles Molloy Campbell, George Thomas Jenkins, Richard Levinge Swift, Sidney Billing, Frederick Last.

The New Vice-Chancellors' Courts.—A meeting of the Queen's counsel and Chancery barristers took place on Saturday last, at Westminster, for the purpose of taking into consideration the great inconvenience which all the members of the Chancery bar are now suffering, by reason of no efficient courts having been provided for the two Vice-Chancellors, Sir J. K. Bruce and Sir J. Wigram, the former of whom has been sitting in the Sessions Court, Westminster, whenever that court was vacant; and the latter has been occupying the large dining-room appropriated to the use of the county magistrates. The distance of these courts from those in Westminster-hall has been felt most severely during the late inclement weather. A deputation of three Queen's counsel has been appointed to wait upon the Lord Chancellor, to request that, since the Government have thought proper to appoint two new equity judges, they will also provide proper courts for them within the precincts of Westminster-hall.—Observer.

Newcastle District Court of Bankruptcy.—Re John Lambton Loraine's Bankruptcy.—A decision given by the learned Commissioner, last week, on a question arising in the above matter, demands notice, the point being one of very considerable importance to the public, though the amount involved was, in this particular case, but small. It appeared that Mr. Loraine, in 1840, deposited with the North of England Joint Stock Banking Company, by way of equitable mortgage, to secure advances on a banking account, certain certificates of his shares as a proprietor in the Newcastle and Gateshead Union Gas Company. Mr. Loraine continued, after the deposit of the shares, to exercise the rights of a proprietor in that co-partnership, and appeared to the world in that character, down to the time of his bankruptcy, when, it appearing that direct notice of the pledge had not been given to the gas company, the assignees contended that the shares (which, it was admitted by the banking company, came under the meaning of the provisions in the bankrupt laws relating to reputed ownership), passed to them for the benefit of the general creditors. The banking company, on the other hand, contended that Mr. Loraine, being a partner in the gas company, he, in point of law, gave notice to that partnership of the transfer of his interest in the shares at the moment when he deposited them with the banking company, and that this constructive notice was sufficient to take the shares (or the proceeds of the shares, for they were sold) out of the operation of the clause relating to reputed ownership. With the view to save the estate the expense of trying the question at law, the learned Commissioner permitted the question to be argued before him, the banking company having agreed to be bound by his decision. The question was, therefore, gone into at considerable length on two former days. The arguments were of a strictly legal nature, and cannot be intelligibly reported in a small space. It may be sufficient to state, that Mr. Commissioner Ellison, in his judgment, elaborately reviewed the case of Duncan v. Chamberlain, decided by the present Vice-Chancellor of England, on the rule of law which renders notice to one partner a sufficient notice to the partnership, which case was relied on by the banking company, the case of Ex parte Hennessey, decided by the present Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and other cases referred to in the argument; and, deducing from the whole that the principle which guided the judgment of Sir Edward Sugden in the last-mentioned case was good law, conformable to reason and public policy, and applicable to the present question, decided that a direct notice by the banking company to the gas company was requisite, in order to take the case out of the clause relating to reputed ownership, and that no such notice having been given, the shares passed to the assignees, and were assets divisible among the creditors. A dividend of the estate was declared on Monday. In the estate of Johnson, Adamson, and Hope, of Whitehaven, bankers, the final dividend will probably be not less than tenpence in the pound. The Court was occupied on Monday in receiving proof of further debts, and the dividend will be formally declared in the course of a few days.—Newcastle Journal.

Local Legislation.—The Gazette of Tuesday extends to the extraordinary length of seven sheets, and is almost entirely occupied with "notices" for Railway Bills; among which, some others of greater interest are not unlikely to escape observation. The New Zealand Company are to apply for enlargement and amendment of the powers conferred by their charter, and for the granting to them of "further and other powers, rights, and privileges;" and also "for regulation of the conveying of lands in the colony to and by the company." Several Enclosure Bills are mentioned - one for Nottingham. There appear to be projects for erecting a new bridge over the Floating Harbour in Bristol; for enabling the London and Birmingham Company to raise more capital; for the improvement of the harbours of Harwich and Lowestoffe (in connection with railways); for regulating further the police of Birmingham; for giving small debt courts to Devonshire; for the further improvement of Bridgewater, Newcastle, &c. Among the plans connected with the metropolis, may be mentioned that for forming an embankment along the Thames from Vauxhall to Battersea, and one for building a suspension-bridge at Hungerford-market. New streets are also projected from Westminster to Pimlico (abolishing the "Almonries" and other low places in Westminster), and from Lothbury to London wall (with some "colonnades") and other minor improvements.

The Attorney-General v. Gibbs.—We are enabled to state, that in this suit there is no likelihood of a report being made. The suit was originally referred to Sir George Rose, but from the alleged anxiety to bring the cause to a conclusion, an order was obtained to refer it to the vacation Master, who has done nothing, and sent it back to Sir George Rose.—Times.

A New Case.—The question of whether the Crown can grant a commutation of capital punishment in opposition to the wish of the culprit has been raised at the Hague, and resolved in the following manner: Two men named Fox and Van Link, who were condemned to death, refused to solicit their pardon. The King, however, commuted their punishment to that of being flogged, and having their neck marked with a rope, which sentence was executed on the 26th ult.—Constitutionnel.

Will of Lord Keane, G.C.B.—The will of Lord Keane has just been proved in Doctors' Commons. His lordship by this instrument gives to his wife, Charlotte Maria, his mansion, carriages, wine, several articles of plate, and the sum of 10,000*l*. To his daughter Charlotte, 5,400*l*. He observes:—"As my son Edward Arthur Wellington Keane is entitled to a pension of 2,000*l*. a year from government, I consider him sufficiently provided for, and bequeath him my Ghuznee sword." To his son George Keane he gives "the sword given me by the king of Cabul, and the Lahore matchlocks and artillery models brought from India." To his son Hussey Fane Keane, his "Cutch sword and Scinde rifle." He observes:—"My collar, ribbon, and badge of the Order of the Bath will have to be given up to the Herald's Office, but my other stars are my own property, and I bequeath them to my wife." He gives to his sons a bond of Lord Vivian for 10,000*l*. To his executors he gives 2,000*l*. to purchase a company in one of her Majesty's regiments for his son John, and directs them to apply an additional 2,000*l*. for his benefit till such company is obtained. To his "faithful servant, Richard Hyman, 200*l*." The remainder of his property is bequeathed to his wife and two sons, Hussey and George Keane. The executors appointed are Ronald Macdonald, esq. George Keane, esq. and Charles Hopkinson, esq. (the banker). The property is sworn under 45,000*l*. The will bears date July 1844.—Britannia.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—With reference to the forms of Conveyance and Mortgage (in other respects very useful), in the Law Times of August 31, p. 420, it appears highly desirable to call the attention of the Profession to an error therein, as regards the setting out or description of the statute dispensing with the necessity of a lease for a year; the title of the statute being "An Act for rendering a Release as effectual for the Conveyance of Freehold Estates," &c. not "valid," as in the forms in question. The mistake, I doubt not, would lead to considerable difficulties on a future disposition of property so conveyed; there being, indeed, no such statute as the one therein described or referred to, I am very much disposed to think the conveyance would be void for want of a lease for a year.

I am, &c.

VETERANS OF THE LAW.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—Under the title of "Veterans of the Law," you a short time ago gave the names of Mr. Cross, of Bolton, who was stated to have been admitted an attorney so long ago as 1775, and then followed that of "Thomas Eyde, Montgomery, admitted in 1779." I presume by the latter you meant my father, whose name is Edmund Edye, and who, I am happy to say, is still in good health, in the eighty-eighth year of his age, and has completed the sixty-fifth of his practice, having been admitted in the beginning of Michaelmas Term, 1779, and I have reason to believe is the Father of the Profession, for I have ascertained that Mr. Cross is considerably his junior, having been born only some few years before my father's admission.

How the error arose I know not, but as some other "gentleman, one, &c." may be entitled to the honour, I should be sorry to rob him of it, and, therefore, should be gratified in seeing him prefer his claim, which, perhaps, you will allow him to do through your valuable columns.

I am, yours, &c.

Thomas Edye.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"A Solicitor" submits to the experience of practitioners the following query:—

Can you, or any of your numerous readers, inform me whether a solicitor or attorney, not having taken out his annual certificate, or having retired from practice, can take affidavits in the common law courts by virtue of his commissions for that purpose, and whether such affidavits made before him are or would be received? The commissions themselves do not seem to take any notice about an annual certificate being taken out, but appear to be granted to him quite independent of it. The same thing applies to a Master in Chancery Extraordinary.

The following complaint of S. S. is not new; but the remedy is in his own hands. He should not give his briefs to counsel whom he cannot insure. He does it with his eyes open, knowing the hazard, and has absolute free-will to give them to some obscure man. The monopoly is of his own making.

I have been a subscriber to your valuable paper but for a very brief period—a trifle to your loss, much to mine—yet I have not failed to observe, and as a member of the Legal Profession to feel thankful for, your strenuous exertions in endeavouring to bring into prominent view those blots and stains on our system that now so unhappily degrade and disfigure it, in order that the exposure and notoriety may lead to their removal. Feeling, therefore, Sir, perfectly assured that it is your desire, as far as in you lies, to render our system as perfect as its nature will allow, and free from any just cause of complaint, I trouble you with this letter, in order to draw your attention, and that of the Profession, to an injustice and hardship that ought not to be overlooked or allowed. Many of the evils and abuses in our system are too deeply seated to admit of removal, but the one to which I allude is not of that class. It might, and ought to be remedied. I mean the migration of Counsel. Surely, Sir, in our courts of equity (falsely so called), the natural inherent procrastination and delay are sufficiently tormenting without being further aggravated by the avarice of counsel (for no milder term will meet the case) in accepting briefs when they know full well it is quite impossible for them to attend when the cause is called. The following case has just happened to myself, and therefore I speak feelingly. I have a cause down for hearing before the Vice-Chancellor of England. Shortly before the commencement of Term my agent wrote and informed me it was sure to be heard early in the first week; I came up to town accordingly. Now what is the result? This is the eleventh day of Term, and his Honour has only been on causes four days. This is bad enough, but is it all? By no means! Two days out of the four he was compelled to close his court, because counsel were not in attendance. Now, Sir, this, I say, is "too bad." It ought not to be tolerated. Let me entreat you to attend to the matter, and perhaps you, or some of your numerous and experienced readers, may be enabled to devise a remedy. A very simple one is, in my opinion, available and practicable. Confine counsel to one particular court, or, if that is objected to—and I cannot see why it should—then, in case a cause is called, and goes over on account of the absence of counsel for anything save ill-health, inflict upon the absentee a fine—say 50*l*.—payable to his suffering client. It would be a trifling balm to his wounded feelings, and, I am confident, mitigate, if it did not entirely remove the evil. The confinement of counsel to one court would be beneficial in every way. It would assist the despatch of business, and in some degree check the monster monopoly that now exists to such a baneful degree, warping the energies, blasting the hopes, tiring the patience, and keeping empty the pockets of many a man deserving a better fate, and who would prove a bright star in our hemisphere could he but once break through the impervious misty veil that now obscures him.

"A SUBSCRIBER," with great justice, complains of the inconvenience of the present Law Courts.

Perceiving that the Bar of the Chancery Courts have applied to the Lord Chancellor for accommodation for the two new Vice-Chancellors at Westminster, pray exert your influence for the removal of all the Chancery courts, if not the common law courts also, to Lincoln's-inn, or its neighbourhood, where a sufficient site could be easily and cheaply obtained, at the back of the Law Institution, for the erection of proper courts, in a locality really centrical and convenient to the suitors, barristers, and solicitors.

The Lord Chancellor of England now sits, by sufferance, in a dining hall!! The two new Vice-Chancellors occupy (by sufferance also) temporary courts in Lincoln's-inn, unwholesome to enter from their small size and bad ventilation!! and during Term have to sit where they can at Westminster!! Surely this scattering of judges, with no sufficient accommodation anywhere, should, long ere this, have been removed, and all the courts brought to a centrical point in the neighbourhood of those who frequent them.

I am sure barristers and solicitors would generally sign a petition having this object.

TO READERS.

A SUPPLEMENT to-day enables us to bring up a small portion of the long arrear. It contains some valuable matter. The Table of Abbreviations has been prepared with great labour and research. It will be printed, with some additions, both on paper, for transmission by post, at 6d. postage included; and also on stout pasteboard, for hanging in offices or chambers, for ready reference, price 1s. 6d. and may be either inclosed in parcels or had through the booksellers by the description of the Table of Reports, published at the LAW TIMES Office. We fear that its size, not its weight, would prevent its transmission by post.

HONOUR TO WHOM HONOUR.

WE have had occasion to denounce many malpractices, and to expose to the indignation and scorn of their injured brethren not a few disreputable members of the Profession.

A very different and more grateful duty now devolves upon us. With extreme pleasure we direct the attention of our readers to the report, which they will find among the Legal Intelligence of the week, of the presentation of a piece of plate, by his professional brethren, to an attorney on his retirement from a practice of fifty years, conducted with unsullied honour and integrity, and with a strict observance of all those established rules of etiquette which distinguish the profession from the trade, and which are based upon the presumption that those who belong to a profession are gentlemen, and are to be bound by the simple law of honour which with a gentleman is more potent than an Act of Parliament.

We trust that the example of this patriarch will rouse in the breasts of the younger lawyers an emulation to deserve by the like conduct the like esteem. Let this be to them a proof that a scrupulous observance of the strict rules of professional bearing, without turning aside for any seeming temporary advantages, will in the long run be their interest, in the most worldly sense of the term. Let them be assured that by such conduct they will secure the confidence of the public, and confidence will bring clients. It will be seen that the public would have been eager as the Profession to pay their tribute of respect to this honourable lawyer and honest man, but that the testimonial was to be limited to his brother lawyers. It is, therefore, certain that to maintain a lofty professional character in every respect is a man's interest as well as his duty.

This is the first of such delightful tributes of esteem we have had to record since the commencement of our labours; we trust they will become more and more frequent, and that, as the Profession wakens to the necessity for purification from those who disgrace it, it will confer honour upon those by whose conduct it has been itself honoured.

MR. GEORGE FARREN.

ABUSIVE and angry as it was, we regret that we did not print Mr. FARREN's letter, addressed to the Legal Observer, and of which a copy was sent to us, because, our contemporary having declined its insertion, we cannot exhibit in its true colours the meanness of the insinuation attempted in that epistle, with even more effrontery than in the previous one addressed to the LAW TIMES, that the document we published had not emanated from him, Mr. FARREN, that he had not offered to take any such fees as there are set forth, and that he was not cognizant of its circulation.

But, if report speaks truly, for we have no authorized information on the matter, these letters to us and to the Legal Observer are not the only shufflings of which Mr. FARREN has been guilty. The Benchers of his Inn have taken up the affair with commendable spirit, and, it is said, that to them he has played the same double part as with us; not, perhaps, expressly disowning the advertisement, but insinuating that we had no authority for attributing it to him, and that he had never published any such advertisement, &c.

As by the LAW TIMES the utmost vigilance has been and ever will be employed to authenticate any statements it may make, and especially such as affect Professional reputations, it being a rule with us to publish no document on any less authority than actual possession of the document itself, we certainly felt somewhat annoyed that a printed paper (and nothing less would we have ventured to make the foundation of such a charge), should have been, even though by implication, denied by the person whose name was attached to it. Improbable as it was that any other person should have incurred the trouble and cost of writing, printing, and circulating such an advertisement for the benefit of Mr. FARREN, still we felt that if we could personally affix him with it we ought to do so. And that self-justification we are now enabled to establish, beyond the possibility of quibbling even by Mr. FARREN himself.

The correspondent by whom that memorable advertisement was forwarded to us, seeing how Mr. FARREN had denied its authorship, has felt himself bound, in justice to us, to place us in a position to prove the fact. Accordingly he has given us permission to publish the letter which accompanied the advertisement (it was addressed to an attorney), and which is now in our possession, and beyond all doubt in the handwriting of Mr. FARREN. Here it is:—

SIR,—Believing the communication I now make may prove of some convenience to you in the course of your business, I send a printed table, framed entirely from the suggestions and experience of solicitors, who have induced me (after having found that during the eight years I have been at the Chancery Bar, my services have been chiefly required in "will" cases) to confine myself to that branch of law.

The table shews the "fixed fees" on which I shall conduct business, and enables all expense to be calculated in every case, previously, and at once.

As I should feel proud to be indulged with your confidence, you may rely on my being assiduous in the fulfilment of your instructions, and I desire to hear from you on an emergency happening.

I remain, Sir, truly yours.
GEORGE FARREN.

1, Symond's-Inn, Chancery-lane.

N.B.—If you will allow me to estimate you as an agent, I shall be happy to forward you a commission of 5*l*. per cent. on any sum forwarded to me through you.

This letter is, as a professional misdoing, even worse than the advertisement. A barrister deliberately offering an attorney a commission of 5 per cent. on business he may send him.

But what must that man be, who, after writing that letter, inclosing that advertisement, attempted a denial of the document, and insinuated that the charge against him was false!

We will not add to the pain with which we have discharged our duty in this sad affair one word by way of reproach or reproof. His own sense of shame, if he have any, will be Mr. FARREN's best monitor.

THE BANKRUPTCY COURTS.

EVERY body is complaining,—counsel, solicitors, and the public,—of the inconvenience of the present Commissioners' Courts in Basinghall-street. The business has grown to be of such magnitude and importance that it is quite time we should have a suitable court for conducting it, in which there may be accommodation for all whose duties take them there, and in which a speedy access may be had from one court to another. The formation of a regularly attending Bar would add much to the dignity of these, as it certainly does to that of all other courts; but counsel will not, unless specially brought there, submit to the present inconveniences. We believe a good site might readily be procured, and that there needs but an energetic remonstrance from the Profession and the public to obtain the much required erection of a regular court-house with every convenience that could be desired, and this, too, without any cost to the country; for the accumulations of the interest of the funds of the court are ample for the purpose.

Since the above was in type, we find by an advertisement that the Legal Association has prepared a memorial on this important subject, which now lies for signature.

PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

THERE has been a world of discussion about the power of the Benchers to disbar a barrister for misconduct, and the journals, both legal and general, have been calling for the exercise of that power in certain cases that have recently come before the public. Many wits have been at work to devise more efficient means of preserving the Bar from the invasion of men without character or responsibilities, for it is most truly said that the reputation of the Bar in a free country is not so much a professional as a public concern. The liberty of the subject is not unfrequently dependent upon the influence of the advocate; that influence can only be maintained by the holding of the office in honour; and that honour will be given so long only as it is commanded by the characters of those who claim it. Thus, whatever lowers the Bar in position and esteem, deprives the citizen of his surest safeguard against the invasions of power, and the first step in the decline of a nation would assuredly be seen in the degradation of its Bar. Some have recommended a more strict examination previous to the call; but this would not effect the particular object sought, for a candidate might be a very good lawyer and a very indifferent gentleman. Nor will the more frequent exercise of the power of suspension, or of disbarring, serve to deter the unscrupulous and the needy. All such schemes will fail in practice.

But there is a remedy for the acknowledged evil which we believe would be found efficient, and the application of which is so easy, that we are surprised it should have been recommended by none of those who have already treated the subject with so much ability. By the existing regulations of the Inns of Court, a rein is now in the hands of the benchers, and if they please to make proper use of it they might effectually prevent the entrance of disreputable persons into their societies. Before admission as a member, the applicant must obtain a certificate of character from two barristers and a bencher. The former are too numerous and too irresponsible to permit a hope that they might all be induced to exercise due viligance in the scrutiny of those for whom they vouch. But the benchers are comparatively few, and if they feel a becoming regard for the honour of their societies, they will refuse to sign any certificate unless the party they recommend be personally known to them, or they obtain the most satisfactory assurances from some other person known to them and knowing to the applicant. In like manner, a bencher must propose the student for his call. That proposition should be deemed a sort of voucher for personal knowledge, and should not be made without such knowledge, or the most satisfactory assurances of fitness for the position to which he is to be called from some persons competent to judge, in whom the proposer has confidence. If a minute were made of the certificates and propositions of each bencher and he were to feel that he was in some measure responsible to the society for those he has introduced into it, we are satisfied that the Bar would speedily be purged, and that there would not be again such professional malpractices as we have lately recorded, with shame and sorrow, but with no other desire than by exposure to deter the wrongdoers and prevent the spread of the mischief through the contagion of example.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

THE following appeared in Lloyd's Weekly London Newspaper of the 3rd inst. page 11, col. 4 :—

TO DEBTORS AND CREDITORS.

A Solicitor, experienced in the law of Debtor and Creditor, begs to inform debtors who are unable to meet their engagements with creditors, that he is enabled, under Lord Brougham's recent Act, not only to obtain the protection of the person from arrest without advertising or gazetting, but also to procure an order from the Court of Bankruptcy (with the consent of one-third of the creditors), to carry out any proposal for future payment or compromise of debts which they have been unable to effect through the opposition of some particular creditor.

JOHN TINSLAY, Solicitor,

A sort of circular letter from a personage unknown to us, even by name, but whom some of our readers may recognize, will amuse by its cool reference to the writer's "engagements as advocate." Is he an attorney, or a sham lawyer, or what? Can any one inform us?

Dear Sir,—My engagements as advocate in the courts not detaining me generally later than twelve o'clock in the day, I am anxious to increase my business as a referee. Having had considerable experience in mercantile business, AS WELL AS LEGAL, it appears to me the combination would in most cases be desirable. I, perhaps, need not add, that I should give my best attention to any case you or your friends might favour me with.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

THE second number of Cox's Criminal Law Cases is ready for delivery, but as it is of no instant interest, we wait until the fifth number of the Real Property and Conveyancing Cases shall be ready, on Monday or Tuesday, to transmit both together, which will be a saving of time and trouble.

Able writers have been secured for some of the proposed Practical Text-Books :—namely, the Practice of Conveyancing; the Practice of Vendors and Purchasers, and the Practice of the Common Law.

Many of the members urge the propriety of publishing, at the close of the present year, a complete digested Index to all the Reports and Statutes of the year; a sort of alphabetical summary of the law made or decided during the preceding twelvemonth. At the rate of sixpence per sheet, large 8vo. (the Society's price), it would require a sale of six hundred copies to repay the expenses. Would so many of the members order it? Before the hazard of engaging authors can be incurred, it will be necessary to ascertain this, for which purpose a circular will, in the course of a few days, be forwarded to the members, with a form, which they are requested to return by the following post.

Another work much in request is one in the nature of a continuation of Chitty's Practical Statutes.

The general Digest cannot be attempted until there are more members, as its cost will necessarily be very great.

We have again to report a very gratifying addition to the roll of members during the last week. They are—

Greaves, Edwin Ley, Belper.
Rutter, John, Shaftesbury.
Wallingford, E. A. St. Ives, Huntingdonshire.
King, A. 27, Queen street Cheapside.
Pearce, William, Portsea.
Gervis, Henry, Thorverton, near Collumpton.
Pearson, Thomas Turner, Crowle, near Bawtry.
Stanton, E. D. Chorley.
Bennett, John, 44, Bloomsbury square.
Broomhead, Henry, Sheffield.

THE REPORTS.

So many misunderstandings appear to exist as to the plan of the reports of the LAW TIMES, that, in reply to all past correspondents, and to prevent the necessity of future explanations, we will state that plan as briefly but as intelligibly as possible.

In the EQUITY COURTS, only cases of permanent interest for their law, or present interest as points of practice, are reported.

In the COMMON LAW COURTS every case is noticed.

Where cur. adv. vult. the case is only so noted among the business of the day and it is not reported until the judgment is given.

Every case in which a point of law is raised and decided is briefly reported, stating the point so raised, the cases cited, and the judgment, with only so much of the facts as may be necessary to elucidate the point.

Cases that involve no reportable point are merely noted among the "Business of the Week" at the close of each week's report.

Motions on rules nisi are reported (stating concisely the grounds of the motion and the cases cited), both when the rule is granted, that the opposing party may learn what is the case he has to meet, and also when the motion is refused, and the refusal is in itself a decision of a point of law raised in the motion. In all other cases a rule nisi refused is not reported, but only noted among the "Business of the Week."

All written judgments will be reported verbatim by short-hand writers.

The Exchequer Chamber, for its great authority, will be more fully reported.

The Nisi Prius reports are limited to cases in which the decision of a single judge is an authority, such as those on practice and evidence.

May we ask our readers, before they complain of apparent omissions, to cast their eyes over the foregoing scheme, and they will probably find the cause of postponements and curtailments which may at first perplex them. This plan is the result of long experience and mature deliberation, and we believe it will be found to give to the Profession all the intelligence that can be required for immediate use, and a great deal more than they can obtain from any other source. Still it is open to improvement, and we shall be obliged by suggestions from any quarter.

THE FRENCH BAR AND PRESIDENT SEGUIER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I hasten to forward to you the result of the quarrel between the Parisian Bar and the President Seguier, which was only terminated at the annual meeting of the beginning of term, called L'Audience de rentrée de la Cour Royale de Paris.

Custom has long regulated the ceremonies of that solemnity, which usually creates little or no excitement even at the Palais de Justice; but this year the quarrel between the magistracy and the Bar lent great interest to the scene.

Out of respect to tradition and to the Court, as well as from deference to the law, the council of the Order of Advocates had resolved upon appearing at the Bar. Prudent and private negotiations had warranted the hope that the opening speech of the Procureur-General would pave the road to a reconciliation, and it was even generally understood that a few words of explanation from the First President would close the debate.

Accordingly, as early as ten in the morning, the Palais de Justice presented an unusual scene of agitation. The library of the barristers was thronged with members of the Bar in their gowns. The council of the order, in their [illegible], were there assembled; precisely at twelve o'clock, a beadle announced that the Court was sitting, and they entered the audience chamber.

The whole Court was assembled— the counsellors [illegible] members of the [illegible] Attorney-General Hebert [illegible] Court. The [illegible] though [illegible] benevolent, and the First President Seguier [illegible] evidently [illegible] affected.

An immense crowd thronged the passages, [illegible] of the barristers and [illegible] numbers of those who had interested themselves in the contest were most anxious to know the result. At the opening of the doors, therefore, the seats reserved for the Bar were soon filled, and the rush became so great, that cries for air were heard, and it was some little time before the tumult could be appeased and silence restored.

The subject selected by the Attorney-General Hebert for his [illegible] was, the influence of ideas of justice [illegible] on society; and his discourse, [illegible] simple, constantly kept alive the attention of his auditory. After observing that stability in the laws is the first element of a good organization of the social body, he proved the importance and the benefits arising from ideas of right and equity, propagating wise and moderate freedom, and assisting the uninterrupted progress of public liberties. He concluded with the following words:

"Barristers, how shall we not think of you in speaking of the interests of justice and truth? [illegible] to some [illegible] and [illegible] from these daily debates, [illegible] by your knowledge and talent. Without you the judicial family is incomplete, its toil less easy, its appearance less brilliant. Who then would [illegible] impossible separation, who would wish to divide what the laws have united, to destroy our ancient traditions and to deprive justice of one of its means of success.

"Let us yield to other feelings in this accustomed meeting, when, confident of your respect, the magistracy is glad to testify to you its esteem and regard.'

"Let us hasten to meet again in the judgment-hall, animated by the same zeal and pursuing the same end, and, glad of each other's assistance, let us renew together the useful labours we have assembled to inaugurate.

"And to you, lawyers (avoués), we are only awarding a well-deserved acknowledgment, in thanking you, conformably, we believe, with the wishes of the Court and the Bar, for your useful concurrence, amidst circumstances often unforeseen and difficult. It is our duty to inform you that, during the course of this year, you have gained a further right to the confidence of litigants and the goodwill of magistrates."

The First President then announced that the barristers present at the bar were admitted to renew their oath, which is thus worded:—

"I swear to be faithful to the King and to obey the constitutional Charter; never to say or publish any thing, either as defender or counsel, contrary to the laws, rules, good morals, the safety of the state and public peace; and never to fail in the respect due to the Courts and to the public authorities."

Each member of the council was summoned by his name, and took the oath.

The First President Seguier then immediately read the following speech, which had been previously deliberated upon and drawn up, it is said, by all the presidents of the cour. His voice betrayed his emotion.

"The Court recognizes the oath the barristers here present have just renewed, and always sees them with satisfaction assembled at the opening of the courts. The members of the Bar are aware of the esteem entertained by the Court for their character, and of its confidence in their talents. With regard to the zeal of the magistrates, that has long been tried. The Court will, therefore, again return to its accustomed labours. The barristers will contribute by their efforts to the good and prompt distribution of sovereign justice. The concurrence so desirable of the magistracy and the Bar will not be wanting in the King's service and for the peace of the citizens."

The First President added—

"The court is suspended, and will retire to its respective courts to proceed to business."

The audience retired in the greatest silence, and the members of the Council of Discipline withdrew to deliberate, and, after two hours' absence, they made known the result. The conciliatory words of the Attorney-General, and the First President's speech, which was the opinion of the whole Court, appeared to them sufficient and complete satisfaction. The decision met with the unanimous assent of the Bar, and a decree, expressing the motives of the resolution, was immediately drawn up, to the following effect:—

"The undersigned members of the council of the order of Advocates met together in consequence of the beginning of Term, in their usual place of sitting.

"Considering that in consequence of the grievous circumstances in which the Bar has been placed, the Attorney-General, in his opening discourse, addressed the Barristers in the following manner:—

"'Barristers, how shall we not, &c.'

"Considering that after the renewal of their oath by the audience the First President, in recognizing the oath, pronounced these words:—

"'The Court, &c.'

"That these words, pronounced at the audience solennelle de rentrée, not only in the name of the First President, but in the name of the Court, are calculated to efface all recollection of the past, and to re-establish the concurrence, indeed, so desirable, of the magistracy and the Bar.

"Decide that they will immediately return to the exercise of their profession before the first chamber of the Court."

Here follow the signatures.

Thus has ended a lamentable conflict. A last question remains to be proved. A judgment has been given inflicting a disciplinary penalty upon honourable men, justly careful of their dignity. An appeal to the Court of Cassation has been lodged by them. New discussions have become impossible after this day's reconciliation, and it is to be hoped that the Cour Royale will simply withdraw its judgment.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

The Joint-Stock Companies Acts of the 7th and 8th Victoria, comprising the Joint-Stock Companies Regulation Act, cap. 110; the Joint-Stock Companies Insolvent Act, cap. 111, and the Banking Companies Act, cap. 113; with Introduction, Notes, and copious Index. By WILLIAM PATERSON, Esq. of Gray's-Inn, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition, containing the Orders, Regulations, and Forms relating to Joint-Stock Companies, framed by the Board of Trade, in pursuance of the Statute. London, 1844. Law Times Office.

FOR obvious reasons we do not offer an opinion upon the merits of this volume. We purpose merely to describe it, and the reader will then judge if it be, in its arrangements at least, likely to be useful.

It opens with an elaborate Introduction, in which the alterations effected by the new statutes, and the forms to be observed by joint-stock companies, are described with great particularity. Then follow the Rules and Orders of the Board of Trade, with the forms prescribed by them under the directions of the Act; information which, we may observe, can be found nowhere but in the Gazette, and that now cannot be procured. The three statutes then follow in the order set forth in the title-page. The editor has adopted with these the very convenient plan of placing the illustrative note at the close of each section, and it is distinguished from the statute by a larger type. In these notes, all the cases bearing upon the subject-matter of the new statutes are cited for the purpose of explanation. The volume is rendered complete by an Index, which we may venture to describe as the most copious we have ever seen in a law book. It extends to upwards of fifty pages of close print. The extreme value of such a means of ready reference will be appreciated by every lawyer; and we cannot but express our obligations to Mr. Paterson for the immense labour he must have bestowed upon this curious index, as well as for the research and legal ability he has displayed in a Commentary, which gives to an edition of statutes the value of a treatise.

THE LEGISLATOR.

NEW STATUTES.

Of the Session 8 Victoria.

[In this record of Annual Legislation, we adopt the plan of giving the titles alone of the statutes of no general or professional interest; and analyses of the more important changes in the law, printing at length such statutes or parts of statutes only as are of particular interest to our readers.]

44. Contracts: requisites of contracts. Report to secretary. Liability.—And for the purpose of regulating contracts entered into on behalf of any joint stock company completely registered under this Act (except contracts for the purchase of any article, the payment or consideration for which doth not exceed the sum of fifty pounds, or for any service, the period of which doth not exceed six months, and the consideration for which doth not exceed fifty pounds, and except bills of exchange and promissory notes), be it enacted, That every such contract shall be in writing, and signed by two at least of the directors of the company, on whose behalf the same shall be entered into, and shall be sealed with the common seal thereof, or signed by some officer of the company on its behalf, to be thereunto expressly authorized by some minute or resolution of the board of directors applying to the particular case; and that in the absence of such requisites, or of any of them, any such contract shall be void and ineffectual (except as against the company on whose behalf the same shall have been made); and that every such contract for the purchase of any article, the consideration of which doth not exceed the sum of fifty pounds, or for any services, the period of which doth not exceed six months, and the consideration for which doth not exceed fifty pounds, entered into on behalf of any joint stock company completely registered under this Act, may be entered into by any officer authorized by a general bye law in that behalf; and that every such contract, whether under seal or not, shall, immediately after the same shall have been entered into, be reported to the secretary or other appointed officer of the company on whose behalf the same shall have been entered into, who shall enter the same in proper books to be kept for that purpose; and that if any such contract be not so reported and entered, then the officer by whose default such contract shall not be so reported or entered shall be liable to repay to the company on whose behalf such contract may be made the amount of the consideration agreed to be paid by or on behalf of such company in respect of such contract.

45. Requisites of bills and notes by company. Signatures of two directors. Countersign of secretary. Indorsation. Report and entry thereof. Liability. Directors and officers not personally liable. Liability of company and members.—And be it enacted, with regard to bills of exchange and promissory notes made, accepted, or indorsed on the behalf or account of any such company, as far as relates to the mode of making, accepting, or indorsing the same, and to the liability of any such company thereon, That if the directors of the company be authorized by deed of settlement or bye law to issue or accept bills of exchange or promissory notes, then every such bill of exchange or promissory note shall be made or accepted (as the case may be) by and in the names of two of the directors of the company on whose behalf or account the same may be so made or accepted, and shall be by such directors expressed to be made or accepted by them on behalf of such company; and that every such bill of exchange and promissory note so made or accepted as aforesaid shall be countersigned by the secretary or other appointed officer of the company in whose behalf the same is expressed to be made or accepted; and that every bill of exchange so made as aforesaid, or received by or on behalf of the company, may be indorsed in the name of the company by any officer authorized by deed of settlement or bye-law in that behalf; and that every such bill of exchange or promissory note so made, accepted, or, indorsed as aforesaid shall, immediately after the making, accepting, or indorsing of the same, be reported to the proper officer of the company on whose behalf the same shall have been made, accepted, or indorsed, and such last-mentioned officer shall enter the same in proper books to be kept for that purpose; and that if any such bill of exchange or promissory note be not so reported and entered, then the officer by whose default such bill or note shall not be so reported and entered shall be liable to repay to the company the amount which the company shall pay or be liable to pay in respect of such bill or note: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to make any such secretary or officer personally liable upon any such bill of exchange or promissory note, nor be deemed to make any such directors personally liable thereon, except as shareholders of the company; and that every such company on whose behalf or account any bill of exchange or promissory note shall be made, accepted, or indorsed, in manner and form aforesaid, shall and may sue and be sued thereon, as fully and effectually, and in the same manner, as in the case of any contract made and entered into under their common seal.

46. Deeds, &c. to be signed by two directors.—And be it enacted, That all deeds and instruments bearing the seal of the company shall be signed by two at the least of the directors of the company.

47. Bye laws. Form of bye laws. Registration and publication thereof.—And be it enacted, That all bye laws made by any joint stock company completely registered under this Act, in pursuance of the power hereinbefore given, must be reduced into writing, and must have affixed thereto the common seal of the company; and that such bye laws must be registered at the office for registering joint stock companies, and until they be so registered they shall not be of any force; and that such bye laws must be printed and circulated for the use of the shareholders, and a copy thereof must be given to every officer of the company, and to every shareholder who shall require the same.

48. Bye laws to be evidence.—And be it enacted, That in all actions, suits, and other legal proceedings for the enforcement of such bye laws, or other penalties for the breach thereof, the production of a written or printed copy of the bye laws of the company, having the seal of office of the registrar of joint stock companies affixed thereto, shall be sufficient evidence of such bye laws.

49. Capital: register of shareholders.—And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the directors of every joint stock company registered under this Act to keep or cause to be kept a book, to be called the "Register of Shareholders," and from time to time in such book to enter the following particulars; that is to say: —

The names and addresses of all persons or corporations being shareholders of the company; and also,

The number of shares to which such shareholders shall be respectively entitled, distinguishing each share by its number; and also,

The amount of the instalments paid on such shares.

50. Inspection of register of shareholders.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for every shareholder, or if such shareholder be a corporation, then the clerk or principal officer of such corporation, at all convenient times to search the register of shareholders gratis, and to require a copy thereof or of any part thereof; and that the company may demand a sum not exceeding sixpence for every one hundred words so required to be copied.

51. Requisites of certificates of shares. Fee for certificate. Form of certificate.—And be it enacted, That, on demand of the holder of any share in any joint stock company completely registered under this Act, the company shall cause a certificate of the proprietorship of such share to be delivered to such shareholder, specifying the share in the undertaking to which such shareholder is entitled, and the amount paid up in respect of such share at the date of such certificate, and shall have the common seal of the company affixed thereto; and for such certificate the company may demand any sum not exceeding one shilling; and that such certificate must be according to the form in the schedule (I) to this Act annexed, or to the like effect.

52. Legal effect of certificate as evidence.—And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of all courts of justice, judges, justices, and others to admit such certificate as primâ facie evidence of the title of the shareholder to the share therein specified; nevertheless the want of such certificate shall not prevent the holder of any share from disposing thereof.

53. Renewal of certificate. Substituted certificate. Entry thereof.—And be it enacted, That if any such certificate be worn out or damaged, then, upon such certificate being produced at some meeting of the directors, it shall be lawful for them to order such certificate to be cancelled; and that thereupon another similar certificate shall, if he require the same, be given to the party in whom the property of such certificate and of the share therein mentioned shall at the time be vested; or if such certificate be lost or destroyed, then, upon proof thereof, a similar certificate shall, if he require the same, be given to the party entitled to the certificate so lost or destroyed; and that in either case it shall be the duty of the secretary, and he is hereby required, to make a due entry of the substituted certificate in the register of shareholders; and for every such certificate so given or exchanged the company may demand any sum not exceeding the sum of one shilling.

54. Transfer of shares. Deed to be registered. Indorsement of transfer. Effect of non-delivery of transfer. No transfer if shares not paid up.—And be it enacted, That, subject to the regulations herein contained, and to be contained in any deed of settlement of any joint stock company completely registered under this Act, it shall be lawful for every shareholder of such company, and he is hereby entitled, to sell and transfer his shares therein by deed duly stamped, in which the full amount of the pecuniary consideration for such sale shall be truly expressed, and which instrument of transfer must be according to the form in the schedule (K) to this Act annexed, or to the like effect; and that the directors of the company shall cause a memorial of such instrument of transfer, when produced at the office of the company, to be entered in a book to be called "The Register of Transfers," and the entry thereof to be indorsed on the instrument of transfer; and for every such entry and indorsement the company may demand any sum not exceeding one shilling; and that until such instrument of transfer shall have been so produced at the office of the company the purchaser of the share shall not be entitled to receive any of the profits of the company, or to vote in respect of such share: provided always, that if at the time of such transfer the shareholder shall not have paid the full amount due and payable to the company on every share held by him, then he shall not be entitled to transfer any share, unless there be a provision to the contrary in the deed of settlement.

55. Proceedings to recover instalments of capital. Form of declaration for instalments. Evidence. Recovery of instalments and interest.—And be it enacted, That if any shareholder fail to pay any instalment of capital due upon or in respect of any share held by him, when the same shall become due, it shall be lawful for any such company, and they are hereby authorized, to sue such shareholder for the amount in an action of debt in any court having competent jurisdiction in respect of the same; and that in the declaration in any such action it shall be sufficient to state only that at the time of the commencement of the suit the defendant, as the holder of certain shares (stating how many) in a certain company or undertaking, as the case may be (naming it), was indebted to the company in a certain sum (stating the amount of the instalments, or so much thereof as is sought to be recovered), for certain instalments of capital then due and payable in respect of the said shares, and that the defendant hath not paid the same; and that if upon the trial of any such action it shall be proved that the defendant was the holder of any share when such instalments, or any of them, in respect of the same, and for which the action is brought, became due, then such company shall recover such instalments, or so much thereof as is due, together with interest for the same, at the rate of five pounds per centum per annum, to be computed from the day on which such instalment shall have become due.

56. Notification to joint proprietors.—And be it enacted, That if any share be held jointly by several persons, then any notice required to be given shall be given to such of the said persons whose name shall stand first on the register of shareholders, and notice so given shall be sufficient notice to all the proprietors of such share, and the person so standing first shall be entitled to vote, and to have all the privileges hereby conferred on shareholders.

57. Deeds of settlement. Publication thereof. Inspection thereof on demand. Penalty.—And be it enacted, That at every principal place of business of any joint stock company completely registered under this Act it shall be the duty of the directors and officers of the company, and they are hereby respectively required, to have written or printed copies of an index or abstract of the deed of settlement, approved by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, and a list of the shareholders of the company, and the number of shares held by each, and also a list of the directors and officers thereof, and a copy of the bye laws sealed with the seal of the company, as returned to the said registry office; and that if at any reasonable time any shareholder, or any person authorized in writing by him, apply at any such place of business of the company, to inspect the same, then, on demand thereof made during the usual hours of business, it shall be the duty of the directors or officers, and they respectively are hereby required to permit such inspection; and that if on such demand any such director or officer to whom such demand is made do not thereupon permit such inspection, then, on conviction thereof, he shall be liable to pay for every such offence a sum not exceeding forty shillings.

58. Existing companies. Registration of existing companies. Returns of matters for registration. Certificate of registration gratis. Penalty.—And be it enacted, with regard to all joint stock companies to which this Act is hereinbefore made to apply, and which shall exist on the first day of November, one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, whether incorporated by Act of Parliament or by charter, or privileged by letters patent, or established by virtue of a deed of settlement, or of any other instrument, or by virtue of any authority whatever, or in any other way whatever, that within three months from the said first day of November the directors, managers, officers, or others having the direction, management, conduct, superintendence, or execution of the affairs of any such company, shall register such company at the office for the registration of joint stock companies, and for that purpose shall make or cause to be made a return of the following particulars, according to the schedule (I) hereunto annexed; that is to say,

1. The name or style of the company; and also,
2. The purpose of the company; and also,

3. The principal or only place for carrying on its business:

And that on such registration every such company shall be entitled to have a certificate of registration, without paying any fee either for such registration or for such certificate, but such certificate shall be for the purpose of shewing that such company had registered, and shall not be considered as a certificate of complete registration, so as to confer on any such company the powers and privileges of this Act; and that if within the said period the persons hereby required to register any such company fail so to do, then, on conviction thereof, every such company so failing shall forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding fifty pounds.

59. Privileges of future companies under this Act extended to existing companies fully constituted, or existing companies fully complying. Effect of certificate of complete registration. Incorporation. Alteration of deeds of settlement in compliance with this Act. Fees for certificates of complete registration for existing companies.—And be it enacted, with regard to such existing companies as aforesaid (except assurance companies), That if any such existing company be so constituted as is by this Act required with regard to any future company, or if the deed or deeds of settlement of such existing company contain the particulars by this Act required to be contained in some one or other deed of settlement of such future company, and if any other conditions required to be fulfilled by or in respect of any such future company, in order to obtain a certificate of complete registration, be fulfilled in respect of any such existing company, then such existing company shall be entitled to obtain a certificate of complete registration; but if such existing company be not so constituted, or if such deed of settlement do not contain such particulars, or if such other conditions be not fulfilled, then, on such existing company returning a deed or deeds according to the provisions of this Act, and also, in addition to any other matters by this enactment required to be returned by such existing company, such other matters as are by this Act required to be returned by any future company in order to obtain or before obtaining a certificate of complete registration as aforesaid, or such modification of the said deeds or returns, or any of them, as the Committee of Privy Council for Trade shall direct by any regulation to be made in that behalf, either on the part or in respect of any one company or of any class of companies, and signed by one of the secretaries of the said committee, such existing company shall be entitled to a certificate of complete registration; and on such certificate of complete registration being granted by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, it shall be lawful for such existing company, its shareholders, its directors, and its officers, and they are respectively hereby empowered, to have and exercise all such powers and privileges as are by this Act conferred upon joint stock companies to be hereafter formed; subject nevertheless, with respect to all such powers and privileges, to the provisions of this Act, or of any other Act to be hereafter passed for regulating the same; and that every such company not incorporated shall be incorporated for the purposes of this Act, as from the date of the certificate of complete registration, in such manner as hereinbefore provided with regard to companies to be formed after the first day of November next; and that any directors or other managers of any such company as last aforesaid, with the consent of at least three-fourths in number and value of the shareholders of such company present at a general meeting summoned for that purpose, may at any time or times hereafter make any alterations in the constitution of the said company or otherwise as shall be necessary for enabling such company to come within the provisions of this Act, so as the same shall be approved of by the said Committee of Privy Council for Trade; and the order of such committee, signed as aforesaid, shall be sufficient evidence of such provisions having been complied with, and that any such company has come within the provisions of this Act: provided always, with regard to existing companies, that in the event of any such company becoming entitled to a certificate of complete registration as aforesaid, it shall not be necessary to pay in respect of such certificate any higher fee than the sum of five pounds, and also the sum of sixpence additional in respect of every thousand pounds value of capital, as declared on the formation of the company in the deed of settlement, or by any other special authority.

60. Registration of companies begun or formed after the passing of this Act.—And be it enacted, That so much of the provisions of this Act as are applicable to companies formed after the first day of November next shall apply to companies begun or formed since the passing of this Act, so far as such provisions shall on or after the first day of November be applicable to such last-mentioned companies.

61. Effect of incorporation of existing companies in respect of their obligations.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That, notwithstanding the incorporation of any existing company in pursuance of this Act, every such company, and the members and officers of every such company, shall be liable to be sued in respect of any valid obligation incurred before such incorporation, in the same manner and with the same legal consequences as if such company had not been incorporated.

62. Modification of conditions and regulations as to companies. Board of Trade to receive and decide applications. Return to Parliament by Board of Trade.—And be it enacted, That if at any time during the period of five years from the said first day of November a memorial be presented to the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, by or on the part of any company, whether now existing or hereafter formed, except assurance companies, making application that any of the conditions and regulations prescribed by this Act be dispensed with or modified, and setting forth the special grounds of such application, and if such application be registered at the office of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, and if, before such application be granted, the same be three times advertised, at intervals not less than one week, in the London Gazette, then from time to time during the said period of five years, and six months after the expiration thereof, it shall be lawful for the said committee, and they are hereby empowered, both as regards companies formed before this Act shall come into operation and afterwards, either to dispense with or modify such of the conditions by this Act required to be fulfilled by any future company for the purpose of obtaining a certificate of complete registration, and such of the regulations by this Act made for the government or management of such companies, as to the said committee shall seem fit for facilitating the application of this Act to the constitution and arrangements of any such company, but so that nevertheless the order or instrument by which such dispensation or such modification shall be made be in writing, and be registered at the office for registering joint stock companies; and this Act shall be construed as if such modifications or alterations were herein contained, and further, that annually it shall be the duty of the said committee to cause to be laid before both Houses of Parliament a return of all such applications for such dispensation or modification, and of the orders made on such applications.

63. Act not to extend to certain partnerships for working mines, &c.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That nothing in this Act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to any partnership formed for the working of mines, minerals, and quarries, of what nature soever, on the principle commonly called the cost book principle.

64. Nor to Irish anonymous partnerships. 21 & 22 Geo. 3, c. 46 (I).—Provided always, and be it enacted, That nothing in this Act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to partnerships in Ireland commonly called "Anonymous Partnerships," formed under and by virtue of an Act passed in the Parliament of Ireland in the twenty-first and twenty-second years of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act to promote Trade and Manufactures by regulating and encouraging Partnerships."

65. Prevention of fraudulent companies. Punishment for pretences as to patronage, &c.—And forasmuch as great injury has been inflicted upon the public by companies falsely pretending to be patronized or directed or managed by eminent or opulent persons; now for the purpose of preventing such false pretences, be it enacted, with regard to every company or pretended company whatsoever, whether registered or not, and whether now existing or not, That if any person shall make any such false pretences, knowing the same to be false, in any advertisement or other paper, whether printed or written, and whether published in any newspaper, or handbill, or placard, or circular, then every such person shall forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding ten pounds.

66. Legal proceedings. Effect of judgments against a company and shareholders. Former shareholders. No execution against former shareholders beyond three years after ceasing to be a shareholder.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That every judgment and every decree or order which shall be at any time after the passing of this Act obtained against any company completely registered under this Act, except companies incorporated by Act of Parliament or charter, or companies, the liability of the members of which is restricted by virtue of any letters patent, in any action, suit, or other proceeding prosecuted by or against such company in any court of law or equity, shall and may take effect and be enforced, and execution thereon be issued, not only against the property and effects of such company, but also, if due diligence shall have been used to obtain satisfaction of such judgment, decree, or order, by execution against the property and effects of such company, then against the person, property, and effects of any shareholder for the time being, or any former shareholder of such company, in his natural or individual capacity, until such judgment, decree, or order shall be fully satisfied; provided, in the case of execution against any former shareholder, that such former shareholder was a shareholder of such company at the time when the contract or engagement for which such judgment, decree, or order may have been obtained was entered into, or became a shareholder during the time such contract or engagement was unexecuted or unsatisfied, or was a shareholder at the time of the judgment, decree, or order being obtained; provided also, that in no case shall execution be issued on such judgment, decree, or order against the person, property, or effects of any such former shareholder of such company after the expiration of three years next after the person sought to be charged shall have ceased to be a shareholder of such company.

67. Reimbursement of shareholders against whom execution issued. Contribution by other shareholders.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That every person against whom, or against whose property or effects, execution upon any judgment, decree, or order obtained as aforesaid shall have been issued as aforesaid shall be entitled to recover against such company all loss, damages, costs, and charges which such person may have incurred by reason of such execution; and that after due diligence used to obtain satisfaction thereof against the property and effects of such company, such person shall be entitled to contribution for so much of such loss, damages, costs, and charges as shall remain unsatisfied, from the several other persons against whom execution upon such judgment, decree, or order, obtained against such company, might also have been issued under the provision in that behalf aforesaid; and that such contribution may be recovered from such persons aforesaid in like manner as contribution in ordinary cases of copartnership.

68. Proceedings in execution against the person or property of a shareholder. Alteration of orders by the Court. Notice.—And be it enacted, That in the cases provided by this Act for execution on any judgment, decree, or order in any action or suit against the company, to be issued against the person or against the property and effects of any shareholder or former shareholder of such company, or against the property and effects of the company, at the suit of any shareholder or former shareholder, in satisfaction of any moneys, damages, costs, and expenses paid or incurred by him as aforesaid in any action or suit against the company, such execution may be issued by leave of the Court, or of a judge of the court in which such judgment, decree, or order shall have been obtained, upon motion or summons for a rule to shew cause, or other motion or summons consistent with the practice of the Court, without any suggestion or scire facias in that behalf; and that it shall be lawful for such Court or judge to make absolute or discharge such rule, or allow or dismiss such motion (as the case may be), and to direct the costs of the application to be paid by either party, or to make such other order therein as to such Court or judge shall seem fit; and in such cases such form of writs of execution shall be sued out of the courts of law and equity respectively for giving effect to the provision in that behalf aforesaid as the judges of such courts respectively shall from time to time think fit to order; and the execution of such writs shall be enforced in like manner as writs of execution are now enforced: provided that any order made by a judge as aforesaid may be discharged or varied by the Court, on application made thereto by either party dissatisfied with such order: provided also, that no such motion shall be made, nor summons granted, for the purpose of charging any shareholder or former shareholder, until ten days' notice thereof shall have been given to the person sought to be charged thereby.

69. Recovery of penalties. Proceedings before two justices.—And be it enacted, That all penalties and forfeitures inflicted or authorized to be imposed by this Act, and all costs and expenses for which any person may be liable under this Act or by virtue of any bye law and the recovery of which has not been otherwise specially hereinbefore provided, shall and may be recovered, by any person who shall proceed for the same, before any two of her Majesty's justices of the peace of the county, city, or place where the offender or person liable to pay such costs or expenses shall reside, or where the offence shall be committed.

70. Appropriation of penalties. 3 Geo. 4, c. 46.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That all penalties and forfeitures recovered under this Act, and not otherwise specially appropriated, shall be applied as follows; one half thereof shall be paid to the person who shall sue or proceed for the same, and the other half to her Majesty's use, and shall be paid to the sheriff of the county, city, or town where the same shall have been imposed; and that all convictions before justices shall be returned to the Court of Quarter Sessions under the provisions of an Act passed in the third year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the more speedy return and levying of Fines, Penalties, and Forfeitures, and Recognizances estreated," and shall be paid to the sheriff of the county, city, or town, and shall be duly accounted for by him.

71. Summons in the recovery of penalties. Proceedings.—And be it enacted, That in all cases in which any penalty or forfeiture or any costs or expenses are recoverable before two justices of the peace under this Act, it shall and may be lawful for any one justice of the peace to whom complaint shall be made of any such offence to summon the party complained of, and the witnesses on each side, before any two such justices; and at the time and place mentioned in such summons, or at any adjournment of such summons, the said two justices may hear and determine the matter of complaint, and upon due proof thereof, either by confession of the party or by the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, give judgment or sentence on such complaint, with costs, to be allowed by such justices, although no information in writing shall have been exhibited or taken; and all such proceedings by summons without information shall be as good, valid, and effectual to all intents and purposes as if an information in writing had been exhibited; and all penalties, forfeitures, and costs so adjudged may be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the party offending, by warrant under the hand and seal of any one justice; and in default of such distress the offender may be committed to prison by any one justice, by warrant under his hand and seal, there to remain for any time not exceeding three months, unless such penalties, forfeitures, and costs shall be sooner paid.

72. Compulsory attendance of witnesses.—And be it enacted, That if any person shall be summoned as a witness to give evidence before such justices of the peace touching any matter which such justices are hereby authorized to inquire into, and shall neglect or refuse to appear at the time and place to be for that purpose appointed, without a reasonable excuse for such neglect or refusal, to be allowed by such justices, or appearing shall refuse to be examined on oath and give evidence before such justices, then every such person shall forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding five pounds, to be levied and paid in such manner and by such means as are hereinbefore directed as to other penalties recoverable before justices under this Act.

73. Limitation of proceedings for penalties.—And be it enacted, That every proceeding for any offence punishable on summary conviction by virtue of this Act shall be commenced within six months after the commission of the offence, and not after.

74. Appeal to Quarter Sessions. Proceedings.—And be it enacted, That if any person shall think himself aggrieved by the judgment of such justices, he may, within one month next after such conviction, and upon giving ten days notice of appeal in writing to the party in whose favour such judgment shall have been given, stating the nature and grounds of appeal, and upon entering into recognizances with two sufficient sureties to the amount of the value of such penalty and costs, together with such further costs as shall be awarded in case such judgment shall be affirmed, appeal to the next General Quarter Sessions of the peace for the county, city or place where such conviction shall have been made; and the justices at such sessions are hereby empowered to summon and examine witnesses on oath, and to hear and finally determine the matter of such appeal, and to award such costs as the Court shall think reasonable to the party in whose favour such appeal shall be determined.

75. Informalities. No certiorari.—And be it enacted, That no conviction or other proceeding before justices under this Act shall be set aside for want of form, nor be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any of her Majesty superior Courts of Record.

76. Recovery of penalties by action. Specification of amount.—And be it enacted, That in any case to which a penalty is annexed by this Act the whole or any part of such penalty may be recovered by action of debt in any court now or hereafter having competent jurisdiction, by any person who shall sue for the same; and that in every such action for the recovery of such penalty, so much of such penalty as is sought to be recovered shall be indorsed on the writ of summons, and the plaintiff shall not be entitled to recover a greater sum than the sum so indorsed; and if the party suing for any such penalty recover the sum or any part as aforesaid, he shall be entitled to full costs of suit.

77. Actions, &c. for penalties to be in the name and with the consent of the Attorney-general; otherwise void.—And be it enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any person to commence or prosecute any action, bill, plaint, information, or prosecution in any of her Majesty's superior courts, for the recovery of any penalty or forfeiture incurred by reason of any offence committed against this Act, unless the same be commenced or prosecuted in the name and with the consent of her Majesty's Attorney-general; and that if any action, bill, plaint, information, or prosecution, or any proceeding before any justices as aforesaid, shall be commenced or prosecuted in the name of any other person than is in that behalf before mentioned, the same shall be and are hereby declared to be null and void.

78. Miscellaneous. Authentication of acts by committee of Privy Council for Trade.—And be it enacted, That with regard to every act, instrument, or writing by this Act required or authorized to be done or to be made or executed by the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, that if the same purport to be so done, made, or executed by or on behalf of the said committee, and be signed by one of the secretaries of the said committee, and (if it require a seal) be sealed by the seal of the said committee, then it shall be deemed to be sufficiently done, made, or executed, to all intents and purposes.

79. Annual report to Parliament.—And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies to make a report annually to the said Committee of Privy Council for Trade, setting forth,—

1. A list of companies provisionally registered during the past year:
2. A list of companies completely registered during the past year:
3. A list of cases in which application shall have been made for the enforcement of penalties for failure to register, and the proceedings, whether by prosecution or otherwise, taken in consequence of such applications, and the results of such proceedings:
4. A list of companies which shall have been provisionally registered but which have not obtained complete registration:
5. A return of the regulations made by the said committee with regard to the returns required to be made by companies:
6. A return of persons appointed to the office of Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, and other officers and clerks, and of their salaries or other remuneration, and of the rules made for the regulation of the said office:
7. A return of the amount of all fees paid for certificates of provisional or complete registration, and for every other purpose:
8. A return of the scale of fees appointed by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the services to be performed by the registrar, and of the respective amounts of such fees.
9. A return of the cases in which the companies had failed to appoint auditors, and of the proceedings taken thereon:
10. A return of prosecutions under this Act for any offenses not herein before specified:
11. A return of the number of bankruptcies of joint stock companies, and of the amount of the debts and assets of such companies respectively:
12. A return of modifications made by the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, in pursuance of this Act, in the conditions and regulations to be observed by companies, whether existing or future:

And that, within six weeks after the meeting of Parliament next after the first day of January in every year, such report shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament.

80. Amendment of Act.—And be it enacted, That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

SCHEDULES to which the Act refers.

Schedule (A)—See Section 7.

19. For the appointment of the chairman of the directors at meetings at which the permanent chairman may not be present.
20. For regulating the appointment by the directors of officers, clerks, and servants.
21. For recording the proceedings of the directors.
22. For keeping and entering of minutes of such proceedings.
23. For ensuring the safe custody of the seal of the company, and for regulating the authority under which it is to be used.
24. For providing for the remuneration of the auditors of the accounts of the company.
25. For providing for the appointment of a secretary or clerk (if any) of the directors.
26. For providing for the receipt, custody, and issue of moneys belonging to the company.
27. For providing for the keeping of books of account, and for periodically balancing the same.
28. For keeping the records and papers of the company.
29. For prescribing and regulating the duties and qualifications of officers.
30. For determining what books of accounts, books of registry, and other documents may be inspected by the shareholders of the company, and for regulating such inspection.

3. For the distribution of the capital of the company into shares, or for the apportionment of the interest in the property of the company, viz.:—

31. For determining whether calls or instalments of payments (if any) are to be made in certain amounts and at fixed periods, and if so, what amounts and at what periods.
32. For determining whether, on failure to pay any instalments or calls, the share shall or shall not be forfeited, and if forfeited, whether and on what conditions the property in such share may be recovered by the shareholder.
33. For determining whether, and under what circumstances, and on what conditions, the capital of the company may be augmented by the conversion of loans into capital or otherwise, or by the issue of new shares or otherwise.
34. For determining whether the amount of new capital shall or shall not be divided so as to allow such amount to be apportioned amongst the existing shareholders.

4. For the borrowing of money, viz.:—

35. For determining whether the company may borrow money, and if so, whether on bond or mortgage, or any other and what security.
36. For determining whether the directors may contract debts in conducting the affairs of the company, and if so, whether to any definite extent.
37. For determining whether, and to what extent, the directors may make or issue promissory notes.
38. For determining whether, and to what extent, the directors may accept bills of exchange.

CAP. CXI.

An Act for facilitating the winding up the Affairs of Joint Stock Companies unable to meet their pecuniary Engagements. (Sept. 5, 1844.)

This statute also we present entire.

If any incorporated commercial or trading company, or any other body of persons associated together for commercial or trading purposes, as herein described, shall commit any act which is hereby deemed an act of bankruptcy on the part of such company, a fiat in bankruptcy may issue against the same, and be prosecuted in like manner as against other bankrupts, subject to the provisions hereinafter made.—Whereas it is expedient to extend the remedies of creditors against the property of such joint stock companies or bodies as hereinafter mentioned when unable to meet their pecuniary engagements, and to facilitate the winding up of their concerns; and it may also be for the benefit of the public to make better provision for discovery of the abuses that may have attended the formation or management of the affairs of any such companies or bodies, and for ascertaining the causes of their failure; be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That if any commercial or trading company now or at any time hereafter incorporated by charter or Act of Parliament, or any company or body of persons now or at any time hereafter associated together for any commercial or trading purposes, and to which any privilege or privileges or power or powers shall, before or after the passing of this Act, have been granted under the authority of the statute made and passed in the first year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for better enabling her Majesty to confer certain Powers and Immunities on trading and other Companies, or by any Act of Parliament," or any commercial or trading company or body which by the said statute made and passed in the first year of the reign of her present Majesty is to be considered as subsisting, and to be subject to the provisions of the said statute in manner therein mentioned, or any company or body of persons now or at any time hereafter associated together for any commercial or trading purposes, and registered either provisionally or completely under the provisions of any Act passed or to be passed in the present session of Parliament, for the registration and regulation of joint stock companies or any joint stock company now existing and comprehended within the definition therein contained of a joint stock company, shall commit any act which by this Act is to be deemed an act of bankruptcy on the part of any such company or body, a fiat in bankruptcy may issue against such company or body by the name or style of the said company or body, upon the petition of any creditor or creditors of such company or body (whether a member or members of such company or body or not), to such amount as is now by law requisite to support a fiat in bankruptcy; and the Court authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat, and all persons acting under such fiat, may proceed thereon in like manner as against other bankrupts, subject always to the provisions hereinafter made.

2. Bankruptcy of company not to be construed to be the bankruptcy of any member individually.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That the bankruptcy of any such company or body in its corporate or associated capacity (as the case may be) shall not be construed to be the bankruptcy of any member of such company or body in his individual capacity.

3. Service of adjudication of bankruptcy on company, and surrender, how to be made.—And be it enacted, That the duplicate of the adjudication of bankruptcy under a fiat against any such company or body shall be served on the person who was at the date of such fiat a chief clerk or secretary or registrar of such company or body, or (if there be no such person) on any person who was at such date a director of such company or body, personally, or by leaving the same at the head office for the time being of such company or body; and the surrender to such fiat for the purpose of consenting to, and the consent to, the advertisement of such adjudication before the expiration of the five days allowed for shewing cause against the validity thereof, may be made on behalf of such company or body by such person; provided such person shall, at the time of such surrender, make a deposition, and swear that he was, at the date of such fiat, such chief clerk or secretary or registrar, as the case may be, and that he is authorized to make such surrender.

4. Declaration of insolvency in pursuance of a resolution of the board of directors under the common seal of the company, or signed by the chairman, and attested by the solicitor of the company, and filed in the office of the Secretary of Bankrupts, to be an act of bankruptcy.—And be it enacted, That if any such company or body shall, by virtue of a resolution to be duly passed in that behalf at a board of directors of such company or body duly summoned for that purpose, file or cause to be filed in the office of the Lord Chancellor's Secretary of Bankrupts a declaration in writing, in the form specified in the schedule (A) No. 1 hereunto annexed, that the said company or body is unable to meet its engagements, and also a minute of such resolution in the form specified in the schedule (A) No. 2, such declaration and minute of resolution respectively being under the common seal of such company or body, and if such company or body have no common seal, then signed by the chairman of the board of directors who was present at the passing of such resolution, and in either case such declaration and minute of resolution being respectively attested by the attorney or solicitor of the said company or body for the time being, every such company or body shall be deemed thereby to have committed an act of bankruptcy at the time of filing such declaration, provided a fiat in bankruptcy shall issue against such company or body within two calendar months from the filing of such declaration; and a copy of such declaration and minute of resolution respectively, purporting to be certified by the said secretary, or his clerk, as a true copy, shall be received as evidence of such declaration and minute of resolution respectively having been filed by such company or body, and that, upon such evidence being given, and upon proof by the attesting witness of the sealing or signature, as the case may be, of the said declaration and minute of resolution, no further evidence shall be required of the said act of bankruptcy.

5. Company not paying, securing, or compounding for a judgment debt upon which the plaintiff might sue out execution, within fourteen days after notice requiring payment, an act of bankruptcy.—And be it enacted, That if any plaintiff shall recover judgment in any action personal for the recovery of any debt or money demand in any of her Majesty's courts of record, against any such company or body, or against any person duly authorized to be sued as the nominal defendant on behalf of such company or body, and shall be in a situation to sue out execution upon such judgment, and there be nothing due from such plaintiff by way of set-off, or which may be legally set off against such judgment, and such company or body shall not, within fourteen days after notice in writing, served upon the said company or body, by service of the same on a chief clerk or secretary or registrar of the said company or body, or (if there be no officer of such denomination) on any director of the said company or body, personally, or by the same having been left at the head office for the time being of such company or body, requiring immediate payment of such judgment debt, pay, secure, or compound for the same to the satisfaction of such plaintiff, such company or body shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the fifteenth day after service of such notice: provided always, that if such execution shall in the meantime be suspended or restrained by any rule, order, or proceeding of any court of justice having jurisdiction in that behalf, no further proceeding shall be had on such notice, but that it shall be lawful nevertheless for such plaintiff, when he shall again be in a situation to sue out execution on such judgment, to proceed again by notice in manner before directed.

6. Company disobeying order of any Court of equity, &c. for payment of money after service of order for payment on a peremptory day fixed, an act of bankruptcy.—And be it enacted, That if any decree or order shall be pronounced in any cause depending in any court of equity, or any order shall be made in any matter of bankruptcy or lunacy against any such company or body, or against any person duly authorized to be sued as the nominal defendant on behalf of such company or body, ordering any sum of money to be paid by such company or body, and such company or body shall disobey such decree or order, the same having been served upon such company or body, by service of the same on a chief clerk or secretary or registrar of the said company or body, or (if there be no officer of such denomination) on any director of the said company or body, personally, or by the same having been left at the head office for the time being of such company or body, the person entitled to receive such sum under such decree or order, or interested in enforcing the payment thereof pursuant thereto, may apply to the Court by which the same shall have been pronounced, to fix a peremptory day for the payment of such money, which shall accordingly be fixed by an order for that purpose; and if such company or body, being served in manner aforesaid with such last-mentioned order fourteen days before the day therein appointed for payment of such money, shall neglect to pay the same, such company or body shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the fifteenth day after the service of such order.

7. Creditor filing an affidavit of debt in one of the superior courts, and issuing a writ of summons thereon, if the company do not, within a month, pay, secure, or compound to the satisfaction of the creditor, or satisfy a judge of their intention to defend on the merits, and enter an appearance to the action, an act of bankruptcy.—And be it enacted, That if any creditor or creditors of any such company or body to such amount as is now by law requisite to support a fiat shall file an affidavit or affidavits in any of her Majesty's superior courts of law at Westminster that such debt or debts is or are justly due to him or them respectively from the said company or body, and that such company or body, as he or they verily believe, is a commercial or trading company, or body incorporated or associated as aforesaid (as the case may be), and shall sue out of the same court a writ of summons against such incorporated company, or against any person duly authorized to be sued as the nominal defendant on behalf of such associated company or body, as the case may be, and serve a chief clerk or secretary or registrar of such incorporated or associated company or body, as the case may be, or (if there be no officer of such denomination) any director of the said company or body, personally, with a copy of such summons, if such company or body shall not, within one calendar month after service of such summons, pay, secure, or compound for such debt or debts to the satisfaction of such creditor or creditors, or make it appear to the satisfaction of one of the judges of the court out of which such writ of summons shall issue that it is the intention of such company to defend the action upon the merits, and within one calendar month next after service of such summons cause an appearance or appearances to be entered to such action or actions in the proper court or courts in which the same shall have been brought, every such company or body shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy from the time of the service of such summons.

8. Assignees of the estate of a company may maintain action to recover a debt: and any person may claim under a fiat against a company any debt due on the balance of accounts.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the assignees of the estate and effects of any such company or body to maintain any action, suit, or other proceeding against any person or persons (whether a member or members of such company or body or not) to recover any debt or demand on behalf of the said company or body against such person or persons, and for any person or persons to prove or claim under the fiat against such company or body such debt or demand as may be due to him or them (whether a member or members of such company or body or not) on the balance of accounts between him or them and the said company or body.

9. Member's share not to be set off against a demand which the assignees of the estate and effects of a company adjudged bankrupt may have against such member.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That no claim or demand which any member of any such company or body may have in respect of his share of the capital or joint stock thereof, or of any dividends, interest, profits, or bonus payable or apportionable in respect of such share, shall be capable of being set off, either at law or in equity, against any demand which the assignees of the estate and effects of such company or body may have against such member on account of any other matter or thing whatsoever, but all proceedings in respect of such matter or thing may be carried on as if no claim or demand existed in respect of such capital or joint stock, or of any dividends, interest, profits, or bonus payable or apportionable in respect thereof.

10. No action, &c. by a creditor of a company, so far as concerns his recourse against the person or property of any individual member, to affect his right to issue or prove under a fiat against the company for any debt remaining unsatisfied: and a fiat, or a proof or proceeding thereon, not to affect any action by a creditor, so far as concerns his recourse to the person or property of any individual member.—And be it enacted, That no action, suit, or other proceeding by any creditor or creditors of any such company or body shall, so far as concerns or may be necessary for the recourse of such creditor or creditors against the person, property, or effects of any member or members thereof for the time being, or any former member or members thereof, be deemed to prejudice or in any manner affect the right of such creditor or creditors to sue out or prosecute a fiat against such company or body, or his or their right to prove or claim under any fiat against such company or body any debt or demand remaining unsatisfied; and that no such fiat, or proof, or proceeding thereunder, shall be deemed to prejudice or in any manner affect the right of any creditor or creditors of such company or body to institute or maintain any action, suit, or other proceeding, so far as concerns or may be necessary for the recourse of such creditor or creditors, against the person, property, or effects of any member or members thereof for the time being, or any former member or members thereof: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall prevent remedy against copartners: provided also, that no execution in respect of any debt or demand proveable under the fiat against any such company or body adjudged bankrupt shall be issued against the person, property, or effects of any member or members for the time being of such company or body, or any former member or members thereof, until after such debt or demand shall have been proved under such fiat, nor shall any such execution be issued after the appointment of a receiver in manner hereinafter mentioned, without leave of the High Court of Chancery.

11. The law and practice in bankruptcy to extend, so far as applicable, to fiats under this Act.—And be it enacted, That the law and practice in bankruptcy now in force shall extend, so far as the same may be applicable, to this Act, and to fiats in bankruptcy issued by virtue of this Act, and to all proceedings under such fiats, save and except as may be otherwise directed by this Act.

12. The Court may order the directors of a company adjudged bankrupt, &c. to prepare and file a balance- sheet and accounts, and to make oath of the truth thereof; and the Court may make allowance out of the estate for the preparation thereof.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Court authorized to act in the prosecution of a fiat in bankruptcy against any such company or body, at any time after the advertisement of the bankruptcy in the London Gazette, to order that the persons who were at the date of such fiat directors of such company or body, or such of them as such Court in its discretion shall think fit, or if there be no directors, then such members of the company as such Court in its discretion shall think fit, shall prepare such balance-sheet and accounts, and in such form as such Court shall direct, and shall subscribe such balance-sheet and accounts, and file the same in such court, and deliver a copy thereof to the official assignee ten days at least before the last examination under such fiat; and such balance-sheet and accounts, before such last examination, may be amended from time to time as occasion shall require, and such Court shall direct; and such persons shall make oath of the truth of such balance-sheet and accounts whenever they shall be duly required so to do; and such Court may from time to time make such allowance out of the estate of such company or body for the preparation of such balance-sheet and accounts, and to such person or persons, as such Court shall think fit.

13. Persons ordered by the Court to prepare the balance-sheet to be under the like obligation to surrender at the last examination under the fiat, and to submit to be examined, &c. and to incur such danger or penalty for not conforming, &c. as is now provided against a bankrupt.—And be it enacted, That every such person ordered as aforesaid to prepare such balance-sheet and accounts shall be under the like obligation to surrender to the Court authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat, at the hour and upon the day allowed for finishing the last examination under such fiat, and to sign and subscribe such surrender, and to submit to be examined before such Court from time to time upon oath, and to make a full and true discovery of the estate and effects of such company or body, and shall incur such danger or penalty for not surrendering, or for not signing or subscribing such surrender, or for not coming before the Court, or for refusing to be sworn and examined, or for not fully answering to the satisfaction of the Court, or for refusing to sign or subscribe his examination, or for not delivering up at the last examination under such fiat all such part of the estate of such company or body, and all books, papers, and writings relating thereunto, as shall be in his possession, custody, or power, or for removing, concealing, or embezzling any part of such estate to the value of ten pounds or upwards, or any books of account, papers, or writings relating thereto, with intent to defraud the creditors of such company or body, as is now by the law in force concerning bankrupts provided as to a bankrupt for not conforming to the like requisitions for the discovery of and in relation to the estate and effects of such bankrupt.

14. Persons ordered to prepare the balance-sheet to have the same freedom from arrest, &c. as a bankrupt.—And be it enacted, That every such person so ordered as aforesaid to prepare such balance-sheet and accounts shall have such freedom from arrest and imprisonment in coming to surrender to such fiat, and such discharge, if arrested in coming to surrender, as a bankrupt now has or may have under a fiat in bankruptcy against him; and such person or persons, if in prison, may be brought before such Court, by warrant, in like manner as such bankrupt now may.

15. The Court, before adjudication, may summon any person, whether a member of the company or not, to give evidence as to the trading and any act of bankruptcy; and, after adjudication, the Court may summon and examine any person who is suspected to have property of the company in his possession, or to be indebted to the company, &c. and compel him to produce books, &c.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Court authorized to act in the prosecution of a fiat in bankruptcy, issued against any such company or body, before adjudication, to summon before such Court any person (whether a member of such company or body or not) whom such Court shall believe capable of giving any information concerning the commercial dealings or trading of, or any act or acts of bankruptcy, within the meaning of this Act, committed by, such company or body, and also to require such person so summoned to produce any books, papers, deeds, writings, and other documents in the custody, possession, or power of such person which may appear to such Court to be necessary to establish such dealings, trading, or act or acts of bankruptcy; and it shall be lawful for such Court to examine every such person upon oath, by word of mouth or interrogatories in writing, concerning the dealings or trade of, or any act or acts of bankruptcy, within the meaning of this Act, committed by, such company or body; and it shall also be lawful for such Court, after adjudication, to summon before it any person (whether a member of such company or body or not) known or suspected to have any of the estate of such company or body in his possession, or who is supposed to be indebted to such estate, or any person (whether a member of such company or body or not) whom such Court believes capable of giving information concerning any person or persons who was or were a member or members of such company or body at or before the date of the fiat, or concerning the trade, dealings, or estate of such company or body, or concerning any act or acts of bankruptcy, within the meaning of this Act, committed by such company or body, or any information material to the full disclosure of the dealings of such company or body; and it shall be lawful for such Court to examine, in manner aforesaid, every such person so summoned concerning the person of any such member, or concerning the trade, dealings, or estate of such company or body, and also to require every such person so summoned to produce any books, papers, deeds, writings, or other documents in his custody, possession, or power which may appear to such Court necessary to the verification of the deposition of such person, or to the full disclosure of any of the matters which such Court is authorized to inquire into; and every such person so summoned shall incur such danger or penalty for not coming before the Court, or for refusing to be sworn and examined, or for not fully answering to the satisfaction of such Court, or for refusing to sign or subscribe his examination, or for refusing to produce or for not producing any such book, paper, deed, writing, or document, as is now provided against persons summoned to be examined under a fiat in bankruptcy.

16. As to costs where a person summoned under a fiat against a company, was a member thereof.—And be it enacted, That where any person who, at or before the date of a fiat in bankruptcy issued against any such company or body, was a member of such company or body, shall be summoned to attend before the Court authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat, every such person shall have such costs and charges only (if any) as such Court in its discretion shall think fit.

17. Penalty on members (other than those who are ordered to prepare the balance-sheet), and on other persons, wilfully concealing the estate of the company, 100l. and double the value of the estate concealed; and allowance to persons, other than members of the company, for making discovery thereof.—And be it enacted, That if any person who, at or before the date of the fiat against any such company or body, was a member of such company or body, but not being a person so ordered as aforesaid to prepare such balance-sheet and accounts, or if any other person shall wilfully conceal any real or personal estate of any such company or body, and shall not within thirty days after the issuing of the fiat against such company or body discover such estate to the Court authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat, or to the assignees, every such person shall forfeit the sum of one hundred pounds, and double the value of the estate so concealed; and any person, other than a person having been a member of such company or body, who shall, after the time allowed for finishing the last examination under such fiat, voluntarily discover to such Court or the assignees any part of the estate of such company or body not before come to the knowledge of the assignees, shall be allowed five pounds per centum thereupon, and such further reward as the major part in value of the creditors present at any meeting called for that purpose shall think fit to be paid out of the estate recovered on such discovery.

18. The Court, after adjudication, may order any treasurer, &c. or solicitor or agent of the bankrupt, to deliver to the official assignee, or to the Bank of England, all moneys and securities in his custody or power, which he is not by law entitled to retain as against the bankrupt or his assignees.—And be it enacted, That, after the adjudication of bankruptcy under any fiat already issued or hereafter to be issued shall have been advertised in the London Gazette, it shall be lawful for the Court authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat, to order any treasurer or other officer, or any attorney or solicitor, or other agent of the company or body, or person or persons, adjudged bankrupt under such fiat, to pay and deliver over to the official assignee appointed under such fiat, or to the Bank of England, or any of the branches thereof, to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, according to the rules now or hereafter in force with respect to payments into the Bank of England of moneys due to any bankrupt's estate, all moneys or securities for money in his custody, possession, or power, as such officer or agent, and which he is not by law entitled to retain as against the bankrupt or bankrupts, or his or their assignees.

19. If any person disobey any rule or order of the Court duly made, the Court to commit him to prison, there to remain until he conform, or until the Court or Lord Chancellor shall otherwise order.—And it is hereby declared and enacted, That if any person shall disobey any rule or order of the Court authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy, duly made by such Court for enforcing any of the purposes and provisions of this Act, or of any other Act relating to bankruptcy or insolvency, now or hereafter to be in force, or made or entered into by consent of such person for carrying into effect any of such purposes or provisions, it shall and may be lawful for such Court, by warrant under hand and seal, to commit the person so offending to the Queen's Prison, or to the common gaol of any county, city, or place where he shall be found or where he shall usually reside, there to remain without bail or mainprize until such person shall have fulfilled the duty required by such rule or order, or until such Court or the Lord Chancellor shall make order to the contrary.

20. The Court may direct the assignees of the estate of a company adjudged bankrupt to petition the Court of Chancery for directions for winding up the affairs of the company, upon which petition an order of reference may be made, and accounts taken, and upon the confirmation of the Master's report a receiver may be appointed.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Court authorized to act in the prosecution of any such fiat in bankruptcy to direct the creditors' assignees of the estate and effects of any such company or body to apply to the high Court of Chancery, by petition in a summary way to the Lord Chancellor or the Master of the Rolls, praying that all such orders and directions may be given as shall be necessary for the final winding up and settling the affairs of such company or body, and to compel a just contribution from all the members of such company or body towards the full payment of all the debts and liabilities of such company or body, and of the costs of winding up and finally settling the affairs of such company or body, and that upon the hearing of such petition it shall be lawful for the said high Court of Chancery to refer it to one of the Masters of the high Court of Chancery to take all such accounts and make all such inquiries as shall be required for the purpose of ascertaining what sum of money in the whole, and what sums of money as proportionate parts of the whole, or what sum or sums of money from time to time on account, will (having regard to the deed of settlement of such company, and the calls, contributions, debts, or demands actually paid by the several and respective members thereof, and also having regard to any proceedings in the Court of Bankruptcy, or any district Court of Bankruptcy) be necessary and proper to be raised by calls or contributions from the respective members of such company or body for the payment and satisfaction of all the debts and liabilities of such company or body, and also of all the costs of winding up and settling the affairs of the said company; and that the high Court of Chancery, upon confirmation of the Master's report made upon any such reference, or upon making such reference, or otherwise, may order the payment of the several and respective sums of money which by such report are found necessary and proper to be paid, and may refer it to the Master to appoint a receiver to collect and receive such sums of money, and either to pay the same into the Bank of England, in the name and to the account of the Accountant-General of the high Court of Chancery, to the credit of such company or body, and may, upon the petition of such assignees, order such sums of money to be paid in or towards satisfaction of the debts which by the proceedings in bankruptcy shall have been found to be due to the creditors of such company or body, and all persons having claims and demands thereon, and also in satisfaction of costs, or may order such receiver to pay such sums of money in satisfaction of such debts, claims, and demands, and costs, in the first instance.

21. The Court of Chancery may make order in individual claims of members in respect of the transactions of the company.—And be it enacted, That if it shall appear that any individual members of such company or body have claims against each other in respect of the affairs or transactions of such company or body, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery, upon the petition of any member of such company or body, alleging that he hath any such claim against any other member of the said company or body, to make all such orders as shall be just for the purpose of finally settling and determining such claim, and may order the payment of such sum of money (if any) as shall appear to be due in respect of any such claim.

22. The Lord Chancellor, with the advice and consent of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors, to make rules and orders as to the form and mode of proceeding, for settling and enforcing contribution to be made by members of company, and the practice to be observed by the Court of Chancery and the Masters in such proceeding.—And whereas the law is defective in the means of making the members of joint stock companies contributaries for paying their debts in full, and in the means of giving relief where execution may have been had in respect of a debt due from any such company against one or a very few members of such company, and also in the means of adjusting the rights of the members of any such company amongst themselves, and finally winding up the affairs of such company; be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and consent of the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors for the time being, or any two of them, from time to time, and as often as circumstances shall require, to make and prescribe such rules and orders touching and concerning the form and mode of proceeding to be had and taken in the Court of Chancery for settling and enforcing the contribution to be paid by any member or members for the time being of any such company, or any former member or members thereof, or any real or personal representative, or other persons liable in that behalf, and the practice to be observed by such Court in or relating to such proceeding, or any matters incident thereto, and the form and mode of proceeding to be had and taken before any one of the Masters of the said Court, primarily or by reference from the said Court, in any matter for or relating to contribution, as shall from time to time seem necessary and proper for the advancement of justice in such cases, and for adjusting and determining the rights and equities of the parties concerned, and for suing for and getting in the assets, and for ascertaining and discharging the liabilities of such companies, and requiring the creditors thereof to claim their debts, and finally winding up the affairs thereof, with as little delay, expense, and uncertainty as possible: Provided always, that such rules and orders shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within one month from the making thereof, if Parliament be then sitting, or, if Parliament be not then sitting, within one month from the commencement of the then next session of Parliament; and every rule and order so made shall be binding and obligatory, and be of like force and effect as if the provisions contained therein had been expressly enacted by Parliament.

23. The Act 41 Geo. 3 (U. K.), c. 90, to extend to decrees or orders made by the Court of Chancery in any suit under this Act.—And be it enacted, That an Act passed in the forty-first year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled "An Act for the more speedy and effectual Recovery of Debts due to his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, in right of the Crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and for the better Administration of Justice within the same," shall extend to decrees or orders made by the said Court of Chancery in any suit, proceeding, or matter under or by virtue of this Act.

24. Decrees or orders made under this Act by the Court of Chancery may be registered in Scotland, and execution may be had as upon a decree interponed upon a bond, with a clause of registration.—And be it enacted, That on production of an office copy of any decree or order of the Court of Chancery made in any proceeding under or by virtue of this Act, and of an affidavit that application has been duly made to the person mentioned in such decree or order for payment of the sum thereby ordered to be paid by him, and that default has been made in payment thereof, to one of the principal clerks of the Court of Session in Scotland, or his deputy, for registration there, such decree or order shall thereupon be registrable and registered there in like manner as a bond executed according to the law of Scotland, with a clause of registration therein contained, and execution shall and may pass upon a decree to be interponed thereto in like manner as execution passes upon a decree interponed to such bond, and shall have the like effect upon and against the person named in such decree or order of the said Court of Chancery as if he had executed such bond.

25. Previous to passing the last examination the Court shall inquire into the cause of the failure of a company, and after the last examination shall cause a copy of the balance-sheet to be transmitted to the Board of Trade, and certify the cause of the failure, and any special circumstances, and annex a copy of any examinations deemed material.—And be it enacted, That previous to passing the last examination under a fiat against any such company or body adjudged bankrupt, it shall be the duty of the Court authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat to inquire, by the examination of such person or persons as such Court shall think fit, into the cause of the failure of such company or body; and after the passing of such last examination, or after the time allowed by such Court for that purpose shall have elapsed, such Court shall cause a copy of the balance-sheet filed in the court under such fiat to be transmitted to the Committee of Privy Council for Trade and Plantations, and such Court shall at the same time certify in writing to the said committee what, in the opinion of such Court, was the cause of the failure of such company or body, and shall have liberty to state any special circumstances relating to the formation or management of the affairs of such company or body, and shall cause to be annexed to such certificate a copy of the examination of any person or persons taken under such fiat, and which such Court shall deem material, relating to the formation or management of the affairs of such company or body.

26. After the Court shall have certified to the Board of Trade the cause of the failure of such company, the Queen, upon the recommendation of the Board of Trade, may revoke and make void any privileges granted to the company, and determine the company.—And be it enacted, That after the Court shall have certified to the Committee of Privy Council for Trade and Plantations the cause of the failure of any such company or body adjudged bankrupt, it shall and may be lawful for her Majesty, her heirs and successors, upon the recommendation of the said committee, by any instrument in writing under her or their Great Seal of Great Britain, or Privy Seal, to signify her or their pleasure for revoking and making void, and thereby to revoke and make void, all the powers, privileges, and advantages at any time, by any charter or letters patent or Act of Parliament, granted to such company or body, and to determine the same; and thereupon the said powers, privileges, and advantages shall accordingly be revoked, and the same company or body shall be determined, without any inquisition, scire facias, or any matter or thing to make void or determine the same, any thing in such charter or letters patent or Act of Parliament contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

27. After the Court shall have certified to the Board of Trade the cause of the failure of any company adjudged bankrupt, the Board may institute prosecutions in certain cases.—And be it enacted, That after the Court shall have certified to the Committee of Privy Council for Trade and Plantations the cause of the failure of any such company or body adjudged bankrupt, the said committee may, whenever it shall think fit, cause all the papers relating to such failure, and to the formation and management of such company or body, and to the conduct of any of the directors or other officers of the said company or body therein, or to any or either of such matters, to be laid before her Majesty's Attorney General, who shall direct whether any and what proceedings shall be taken thereupon against any person who was a director or other officer of such company or body, or any other person; and any prosecution or other proceeding which shall be thereupon directed by the Attorney-General shall be conducted by or under the direction of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury.

28. Until determination of company by the Crown, it shall be considered as subsisting for the original purposes, and, notwithstanding such determination, shall be considered as subsisting so far as necessary for winding up.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That until the determination of such company or body by her Majesty, her heirs or successors, such company or body, and the persons who were officers thereof at the time of such determination, shall respectively be considered as subsisting, and as continuing such officers as aforesaid, for all the purposes for which the same was originally constituted, and that, notwithstanding such determination as aforesaid, the same shall be considered as subsisting and continuing respectively so long and so far as may be necessary for the winding up of the concerns of such company or body under the fiat issued against such company or body.

29. Notwithstanding determination of company in any other manner, the same to be considered as subsisting so long as any matters remain unsettled.—And be it enacted, That, notwithstanding the determination of any company or body incorporated or associated within the meaning of this Act, as the case may be, by any other means than as last aforesaid, such company or body, and the persons who were officers thereof at the time of such determination, shall respectively be considered as subsisting, and as continuing such officers as aforesaid, for all the purposes of this Act, so long and so far as any matters relating to such company or body shall remain unsettled.

30. Any member of a company adjudged bankrupt, with knowledge of or in contemplation of a bankruptcy, destroying or falsifying books, &c. of the company, or making false entries, &c. guilty of a misdemeanor.—And be it enacted, That if any person, being a member of any such company or body which shall be adjudged bankrupt, shall, after and with knowledge of an act of bankruptcy within the meaning of this Act committed by such company or body, or in contemplation of the bankruptcy of such company or body, have destroyed, altered, mutilated, or falsified any of the books, papers, writings, or securities of such company or body, or made or been privy to the making of any false or fraudulent entry in any book of account or other document, with intent to defraud the creditors of such company or body, or to defeat the object of this or any other statute relating to bankrupts, every such person shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to be imprisoned in any common gaol or house of correction for any term not exceeding three years, with or without hard labour.

31. Construction of the Act.—And be it enacted, That in construing this Act all powers given or duties directed to be performed by the Lord Chancellor may be performed by the Lord Keeper or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal; and every word importing the singular number only shall extend and be applied to several persons or things as well as one person or thing, and bodies corporate as well as individuals; and every word importing the plural number shall extend and be applied to one person or thing as well as several persons or things; and every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend and be applied to a female as well as a male; and the words "fiat in bankruptcy" shall mean also and include any commission of bankrupt; unless (in the cases above specified) a different construction shall be provided, or the construction be repugnant to the subject-matter or context.

32. Commencement of Act.—And be it enacted, That this Act shall commence and take effect on the first day of November next.

33. Act may be amended, &c. this session.—And be it enacted, That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

COUNTY PALATINE OF LANCASTER. — The County Palatine, of which the sovereignty is in the Queen as Duke of Lancaster, has an Equity court of its own, which sits alternately at Lancaster, Liverpool, and Preston, and which, for some years past, if an equity barrister had presided in it, would probably, from its comparative cheapness and great local convenience to the suitors, have been called upon to despatch a large portion of the business which has been transmitted, at a vast expense, from those populous manufacturing regions to London. The Vice-Chancellorship of this Court having lately become vacant by the death of the amiable and respectable gentleman who had long held it, Lord Granville Somerset, the Chancellor of the Duchy has, we find, availed himself of the opportunity for endeavouring to make the jurisdiction practically useful to the wide circle it extends over, by selecting as Vice-Chancellor of the Court and Councillor of the Duchy, a leading man of the equity bar, who for the last three years (during which her Majesty's law-officers have neither of them been in that department of Westminster-hall) has been, and still continues to be, charged on the part of the Government with the high and responsible functions of the Crown's Attorney-general in all the courts of equity. Our legal readers will have understood from this, that the new Vice-Chancellor is Mr. Twiss—a gentleman who is held in estimation by men of all parties for his energy, his industry, his temper, and his habits of business, and whose long Parliamentary and official experience must render him also more than commonly efficient as a member of the Duchy Council.

NEW LUNATIC ASYLUM FOR WARWICKSHIRE. —It has been officially announced that the important subject of a county lunatic asylum for Warwickshire will be taken into consideration by the magistrates at the next quarter sessions, which are fixed to be held at Warwick, on Monday, the 30th of December next.

THE MAGISTRATE.

POOR LAW CIRCULAR.

PAUPERS.—1. CHARGEABILITY OF. June 8, 1844.

Chairman of the Wellington Union, Somerset—Stated, firstly, that the turnpike road leading from Beam-bridge, the present extreme western station of the Bristol and Exeter Railway, passed through the parishes of Culmstock, Burliscombe, and Uffculm, towards all the West of England: in that road, within the distance of a mile and half, or thereabouts, were situated two public inns, and one licensed beer-house; one in each parish: an accident happened to a man in the parish of Burliscombe, and he was carried to the Lamb Inn, in the parish of Uffculm, and was there supplied with all necessaries and surgical attendance. Inquired, which parish was to pay the expenses and the surgeon's bill, Burliscombe or Uffculm. Referred to the cases of Tomlinson v. Bentall (5 B. & C. 738), and Lamb v. Bunce (4 M. & S. 275). Secondly. A pauper belonging to the parish of Ashbrittle, in the Wellington Union, but residing in the town of Taunton, in the Taunton Union, met with an accident in Taunton. Inquired, whether he should be treated as casual poor, and be relieved by the guardians of Taunton Union, or whether he was a proper subject for a suspended order of removal, and as such, to be relieved by the Wellington Union. (R. v. St. James, Bury St. Edmunds, 10 East, 25.)

Ans.—Firstly. It is presumed that the pauper referred to was not settled in either of the parishes where the accident happened, or where he was removed to, though this does not affect the case as stated. The liability to relieve, in such cases, does not lie exclusively on the parish where the accident happens; but, if removed without fraud to a place, such as an inn, where the pauper can be most conveniently or readily attended to, he is apparently entitled to be relieved at the expense of the poor-rates of that place. In the present case, the inn was a more proper place of reception, as well as nearer than the beer-house. The carrying to the inn was, therefore, justifiable; and being, apparently, without fraud on the part of the parish of Burliscombe, it would seem that the burden lawfully falls on the parish of Uffculm. The Commissioners need not remark, that the question is one of great nicety, and often depends on some minute point in the individual case. The decisions of the Court are, perhaps, somewhat difficult to reconcile. The view just expressed is as precise as the Commissioners can undertake to give, without having all the circumstances of the individual case more fully before them. Secondly. The pauper was resident where the accident occurred. He was there, therefore, with the intention to settle, according to the terms of the statute 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12, s. 1. His case was not one of those falling within the rules applicable to casual poor; but he was liable to be placed under an order of removal, to be suspended before execution, if, at the time for its execution he remained unfit to be removed. (R. v. Oldland, 4 Ad. & E. 929.)

2. CHARGEABILITY OF PAUPER, HOW TO BE PROVED. May 29, 1844.

Clerk of Honiton Union—Transmitted a copy of a certificate of chargeability which had been used by the guardians of the Honiton Union, under the provisions of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 57, and called the attention of the Commissioners to the decision in Reg. v. The Inhabitants of High Bickington, by which it seemed that the word "chargeable" was not sufficient. In the 17th section of the above Act a "certificate of such pauper having become so chargeable," &c. are the words used; and there might be a question whether a certificate, stating that the pauper was receiving relief, would be deemed evidence of that fact. The guardians wished the Commissioners to send them such a form of certificate as they would recommend the guardians to adopt to meet the case, and at the same time say whether they thought the chargeability could be legally proved in any other manner than by the relieving officer.

Ans.—The Commissioners have referred to two authentic reports of the case of Reg. v. High Bickington, one in 8 Jurist, p. 377, and the other in 13 Law Journal (n. s.) M. C. 74 (see Bittlest. & Sym. Mag. Cases, Ver. Rep. p. 1.—ED. Law T.), and find that the question raised was as to the sufficiency of the examinations of the pauper and the relieving officer, both of whom stated that the former was chargeable, but no fact was alleged of relief having been given. The Court decided that there should have been evidence of relief having been given, and that the allegation by the witnesses of chargeability merely, was not sufficient. The Court had not before them a certificate of chargeability given in conformity with the provisions of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 57, and it may be a question whether the Court would consider such a certificate of itself evidence of chargeability.

If not, it does not appear to the Commissioners that the guardians can give that effect to the certificate by introducing any other words into it, not warranted by the statute. It is right, however, to refer to the statute, and it will be seen that the legislature authorize the reception of the certificate, not as proof of the fact of chargeability, but as sufficient proof to what parish and at what time the pauper became and was chargeable, in cases where it shall be necessary to prove to what parish a pauper has become chargeable. The Commissioners observe that the form of the certificate submitted to them goes beyond the terms of the statute; as, besides stating when the pauper became chargeable, it avers the continuance of the chargeability to the date of the certificate. Whether this be an important extension of the terms of the statute or not, the Commissioners cannot undertake to say. They have reason to believe, that certificates so framed have been rejected by justices, and they have seen other forms of certificates without these terms. As no decision has been pronounced upon the sufficiency of the certificate, for the purpose provided in the statute, the Commissioners are not prepared to recommend the adoption of any particular forms. In reference to the mode of proving the chargeability, it appears to be only necessary to prove the actual giving of relief to the pauper by the officer of the parish. This can generally be proved by the relieving officer, but it may also be proved in many cases by the pauper, or by the master of the workhouse, or other persons. All that the Commissioners can say is, that there is no rule of law which requires that the relieving officer alone can prove the chargeability.

COSTS OF RECOVERING POOR RATE, BY WHOM PAYABLE.

February 13, 1844.

Mr. J. Duncumb, Skeffling, Patrington Union—Inquired, whether the overseer of a parish was entitled to be paid the cost of summoning a party for the non-payment of his poor rates, and also the expenses of attending before the justices. Inquired, also, whether the expenses should be paid by the defaulter or the parish.

Ans.—The cost of the summons is in the first place demandable of the person at whose instance it is obtained; and is recoverable, or not, against the party summoned, according to the nature of the case, and the discretion of the justices. Where the justices may not, upon the hearing of the case, see fit to order payment of the costs by the party in arrear, the overseers will be answerable for the payment. If they had fair grounds for applying to the justices, they may charge the expense upon the poor-rates; but if they were not justified in making application, the poor-rates would not be liable. The allowance of the overseer's travelling expenses in such a case from the poor-rates will, of course, be governed by the same rule which is applicable to such expenses in all other cases—that is to say, by a consideration of the necessity of the occasion, and the reasonableness of the amount.

PROPERTY TAX.

LIABILITY TO ASSESSMENT OF INTEREST ON LOAN.

February 24, 1844.

Clerk of Ellesmere Union—Inquired whether the guardians were bound to give the surveyor of taxes a statement of the amount of interest which was paid annually by the Ellesmere Old Incorporation, for money borrowed upon bonds; and stated, that the guardians had already paid one year's property-tax upon the assessment; but in consequence of the Commissioners' circular of the 24th of June, 1843, relative to the property-tax charged upon workhouses, the clerk was directed to appeal against any further charge, and endeavour to get the duty which had been already paid, returned; the surveyor of the tax required to be furnished with an account of the interest payable by the guardians on mortgage or bond, stating that the property-tax should be charged upon the interest, to be repaid by the parties to whom it was payable, and not upon the assessment on the workhouse.

Ans.—The Commissioners consider the interest referred to in your letter is assessable to the income-tax, under schedule C of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35; and by the rule in sec. 88, the guardians who have the payment of that interest, must be charged therewith, and are to retain the same, according to sec. 93, out of the amount payable to the bondholders. The guardians of the Ellesmere Union will thus see that the poor-rates are not affected by these payments, and the circular of the Commissioners dated the 24th of June, to which you refer, relative to property-tax upon workhouses, does not apply to this case.

RATING.—1. MACHINERY.

June 11, 1844.

Clerk of Stourbridge Union—Stated that the iron-masters in that union contended that they were not liable to be assessed to the poor-rate on the annual value of their works, including the steam-engines and other machinery, but only on buildings without reference to the steam-engines and other machinery, and requested the Commissioners' opinion on the point.

Ans.—In deciding the case of Reg. v. Guest (7 A. & E. 951) Lord Denman laid down the rule, "that real property ought to be rated according to its actual value, as combined with the machinery attached to it, without considering whether the machinery be real or personal property, so as to be liable to distress or seizure under a fieri facias, or whether it would descend to the heir or executor, or belong, on the expiration of a lease, to the landlord or tenant."

2. OWNERS OF COTTAGES.

May 16, 1844.

Overseer, St. Mary's, Newmarket—Stated that it had been resolved in vestry to assess the owners of certain cottages in the parish to the poor-rate instead of the occupiers; and inquired whether the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 19, applied to cottages let weekly or quarterly for sums between 6*l*. and 20*l*. a year.

Ans.—The provision of the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 19, applies to rents, the rate of which, when estimated for the whole year, would not be less than 6*l*. nor more than 20*l*. a year; and to no other rents. As regards the letting, if it be by the week, month, or quarter, or for any other term less than a year, and the rent is within the described limit, the provision of the Act applies. Or if the letting is for a whole year, or any longer term, and the rent being within the limit described, is made payable at periods shorter than three months, the provision likewise applies.

RELATIONS.

LIABILITY OF CHILDREN TO MAINTAIN PARENTS.

June 6, 1844.

Clerk of Selby Union—Stated, that Richard Liddell, a poor man belonging to the township of Cawood, had, with his wife, become chargeable to that township; and that he had two sons, either of whom was able to maintain his parent, but both refused to do so. Inquired, first, whether justices could include both sons in an order on them for maintenance, under the 43rd Eliz. and 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 26, or whether the order should be confined to one son only; or, whether it should be made upon one son for one moiety of the maintenance, and upon the other son for the remaining moiety. Secondly, whether the sons should be summoned before the justices?

Ans.—Firstly. Both of the sons of Richard Liddell are liable to contribute to the support of their parent, if they are of sufficient ability. The justices can, therefore, in their discretion, make an order on each of the sons to contribute such weekly sum as, in the opinion of the justices, might be his fair proportion of the charge of maintenance. The order should be several. Secondly. The Commissioners think the most advisable course will be to summon the parties upon whom it is sought to make the order of maintenance to appear before the justices.

REMOVAL.

1. OF A PAUPER NOT INHABITING IN THE REMOVING PARISH.

June 25, 1844.

Clerk of Wellington Union, Somerset—Stated, that William Coleman, a pauper, resided with his wife and five children in the parish of West Buckland, in the Wellington Union, but his settlement was in the parish of North Curry, in the Taunton Union. He had become chargeable to West Buckland in consequence of want of work. Being an able-bodied man, the guardians could only administer relief to him through the medium of the workhouse. The workhouse was locally situate in the parish of Wellington. It has been stated, that by a recent decision of the quarter sessions in the county of Somerset, it had been held, that where a pauper, at the time of the making of an order of removal, was an inmate of a workhouse, such workhouse not being situated in the removing parish, it was not such a constructive inhabitancy in the removing parish as would support the order. Out-door relief to the pauper being illegal, and a residence in the workhouse being in that case considered not to be an inhabitancy, the guardians wished the Commissioners to suggest to them how the difficulty besetting the removal of the pauper and his family might be obviated. A similar difficulty presented itself to the removal of William Blackmore and his family, then inmates of the union workhouse, and chargeable to the parish of Sampford Arundel, in the Wellington Union, but belonging to Staplefitzpaine, in the Taunton Union.

Ans.—The Commissioners have always entertained the opinion that the union workhouse is, in respect of the several parishes whose paupers are relieved therein, to be deemed to be a part of those respective parishes, so that the relief therein will support the allegation of chargeability to any parish from which the paupers may be removed to the union workhouse. Although the Commissioners are aware that a different opinion is held by justices in some parts of the country, they think that the recent decision of Reg. v. St. Giles-in-the-Fields (8 Jur. 467, and 1 Dav. & Mer. 110) strongly supports the view which they entertain. A question there arose as to the effect of relief to a pauper chargeable to the parish of St. Giles-in-the-Fields, which was given in the house of a person who was contractor to maintain paupers, which house was situate in another parish. It was contended that this was relief to a non-resident pauper, and was therefore evidence of the settlement of the pauper in the parish of St. Giles. But the Court of Queen's Bench decided that it had not such effect, and held that the house out of the parish to which the pauper was removed in this case, was to be considered as a house of the parish, and Lord Denman stated, that it was exactly similar to the case of R. v. St. Peter's and St. Paul's (Bath. Cald. 213). If the house locally situated out of the parish is to be considered with reference to the settlement as virtually within it, the Commissioners can see no ground for applying a different principle in regard to the question of chargeability to any particular parish in the union having a central workhouse. The Commissioners make these remarks upon the difficulty which has been referred to by you on the subject of paupers, and they wish at the same time to state, that if the guardians should think fit to give temporary relief out of the workhouse, under article 4 of the Prohibitory Order, in particular cases, for the purpose of satisfying the supposed legal requirements to establish the chargeability, the Commissioners will be prepared to give their sanction to it, on the cases being duly reported to them. (See s. 56 of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101.)

2. REMOVAL OF A PAUPER WHO HAS A SETTLEMENT BY ESTATE.

March 2, 1844.

Clerk of Aberayron Union—Stated, that a pauper of Trefilan parish had given notice of marriage with a widow of Dihewid parish, who was, with her children, then chargeable to the latter parish, in which she rented a cottage as a yearly tenant: the male pauper would, by the marriage, gain a settlement, by estate, in Dihewid, if he resided in his wife's cottage for forty days. Inquired, what steps could be taken to remove him to his parish before he completed his forty days' residence, in case the family became chargeable during that time; and whether, if the forty days should expire after the making of an order of removal, but before the twenty-one days' notice had expired, the family would be removable.

Ans.—The principle on which a settlement is derivable from the possession of an estate, is this,—that a man cannot lawfully be removed from his land, and consequently, if he reside while thus irremovable, for forty days in the parish, he will, by the operation of 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12, gain a settlement therein. It has been held, as you seem to be aware, that a husband, acquiring by marriage an interest in a leasehold, will thereby gain a settlement, although such leasehold would not have been sufficient, before her marriage, to confer a settlement on the wife. According to the principle above referred to, the husband, in the present case, is irremovable from his property, and his residence upon it for forty days will give him a settlement. The circumstance of the husband's becoming chargeable will not render him removable from the estate derived from his wife. (R. v. Martley, 5 East, 40; R. v. North Cerney, 4 B. & A. 463.)

3. A FRESH ORDER OF REMOVAL MUST BE TAKEN OUT WHERE A PAUPER HAS RETURNED TO THE PARISH FROM WHICH HE HAD BEEN REMOVED.

Feb. 17, 1844.

Overseer, Whitchurch, Monmouth Union—Inquired, whether it was necessary to take a second order for the removal of a pauper from a parish from which he had previously been removed by order, but to which he had subsequently returned and again become chargeable.

Ans.—Although a pauper may have been once removed, by an order of justices, to his place of settlement, if the pauper subsequently return to the parish from which he was so removed, and again become chargeable, the parish can only lawfully get rid of the burden by obtaining a second order of removal. A pauper, however, who returns to the parish from which he has been removed, under an order of justices, and becomes chargeable without certificate, is liable to be punished under the Vagrant Act.

PRACTICE—PLEADING—EVIDENCE.

By Professor Carey.

Delivered at University College, London.

LECTURE XIII.

With respect to the manner of establishing the truth of the facts in issue, our law does not in any civil case require the testimony of more witnesses than one; but it is a general rule that in proof of every fact the best evidence is to be produced; hence hearsay evidence is not admitted. Information given upon hearsay does not derive its effect solely from the credit to be attached to the witness himself, but rests also, in part, on the credit and competency of some other person from whom the information was received. If evidence of any particular fact is required, the person to be called as a witness must be one under the cognizance of whose senses the fact in question came; no statement he may have made to another person will supply the place of his own evidence.

The rule against the admissibility of hearsay does not extend to words or writings which are the ultimate fact of inquiry. Thus if the question is whether a certain person had notice of certain facts, this may be proved by evidence of letters or of conversation in which the intimation was given. (Cotton v. James, Moody & M. 276.) As far as relates to the truth of the facts mentioned, this is mere hearsay; but as far as relates to the question whether notice of the facts was given or not, it is direct evidence. (Whitehead v. Scott, 1 Moody & Rob. 2.) So also words or writings may be given in evidence when they are part of the res gesta, i.e. when they accompany the transaction which is the subject of inquiry. (1 Phillipps, 6th Ed. 220; Phillipps and Amos, 206.) Thus in an action by husband and wife, for wounding the wife, Lord Chief Justice Holt allowed what the wife had said immediately upon the hurt received, and before she had time to devise any thing to her own advantage, to be given in evidence as part of the res gesta. So also words or writings may be receivable in evidence as the natural and immediate result of particular situations, impulses, or feelings. (Thompson v. Trevanion, Skinner, 402.) What is said by a person under particular circumstances of suffering, or of doing, is evidence of the nature of what is suffered, or done, and in the latter case is evidence of the intention of the agent. (Aveson v. Lord Kinnaird, 6 East, 188.) Thus, where the question is what was the impression produced on the public mind by a certain picture, the expressions used by spectators were admitted. (Du Bost v. Beresford, 2 Campb. 511.)

To the rule which excludes hearsay evidence there are the following exceptions:—

1. In questions of pedigree, the declaration of deceased members of the family may be given in evidence. Thus in such points as the following—who was related to whom—by what links was the relationship made out—was it a relationship of consanguinity or of affinity only—when did the parties die—or, are they actually dead?

2. In all such questions as these lying peculiarly within the knowledge of relatives, and many of which could never be decided if the inquiry was conducted by the same rules as in the case of an ordinary contract, the facts may be proved by evidence of the oral declaration of members of the family, or by any statement of theirs which may have been preserved either in written memorandums, descriptions in wills, family documents, inscriptions on tombstones, or the like. (Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russell & Mylne, 161; Berkeley Peerage, 4 Campb. 401.) In the case of the Leigh Peerage, the question turned on the existence of a monument alleged to have been surreptitiously removed from Stoneleigh church. These declarations cannot be received unless made ante litem motam.

Another exception to the rule which excludes hearsay, is in matters of public or general interest. In questions respecting the rights of a corporation or customs of a manor—the boundaries of a parish—common reputation and the declarations of deceased persons are admissible in evidence. (Weeks v. Sparke, 1 Maule & Selwyn, 679; Thomas v. Jenkins, 6 Adol. & E. 525.) Common reputation may be shewn not only by oral declarations, but also by old deeds and other documents. Thus in an action for tolls, claimed under the corporation of Cambridge, a deed of the reign of Henry VIII. relating to the tolls in question was admitted in evidence, as being in the nature of reputation of the existence of the tolls. (Brett v. Beales, 1 Moody & M. 416.) Under this class of evidence must be included manorial documents, such as an ancient customary or the presentment of a custom entered on the rolls of the manor. (Denn v. Spray, 1 T. R. 466; Roe v. Parker, 5 T. R. 26.) Under the same head also are included verdicts obtained in other actions.

In general a verdict, followed by judgment, is binding upon the parties to an action, but does not affect the right of strangers; being, as far as they are concerned, res inter alias acta. But in the case of public rights, a verdict in one action is admissible between other parties, where the same right is in question. Thus in the case of customary commoners, a verdict in an action for or against one is evidence for or against another claiming in the same right; and this is the reason why one commoner was, at common law, not admissible to give evidence for another. (See 1 East, 355.) The general rule is, as we have already seen, that if a person, not being a party to the cause, makes any statement, whether by word of mouth or in writing, the statement itself cannot be adduced as evidence of the fact; but the person by whom the statement was made must be called as a witness; he is then examined upon oath, and subject to cross-examination by the party against whom he appears, who is thus enabled to test the credit due to him, or to elicit facts by which his statement may be either contradicted or explained. To this rule there are some exceptions, of a different nature to those in which mere hearsay is admitted. These are certain cases in which the statements made by a third person may, after his death, be given in evidence.

1. If he had peculiar means of knowing the truth of what he stated; and if at the time it was made the statement was against his own interest. In Higham v. Ridgway (10 East, 109), the question in issue was whether on a certain day A B was of age. It was proved that at his birth his mother had been attended by a certain man-midwife; the man-midwife being dead at the time of the trial, his entry-book and ledger were tendered in evidence to shew the day on which the child was born—were the entries admissible? Lord Ellenborough said, "that the books would be evidence in themselves as recording this and other similar events, in the course of the doctor's attendance on his patients;" but he added: "at the several times when they took place I am by no means prepared to say." The result of subsequent decisions is, that certainly they would not; but in the case I have alluded to, there was a circumstance which altered the case. At the foot of the entry was, "Pd." This made all the difference; the entry of payment was against the interest of the man-midwife, because he thereby repelled a claim he would otherwise have had for his attendance and medicines; and for this reason the statement, which would otherwise have been rejected as mere hearsay, was admitted as a declaration against the interest of the party making it. (See De Rutzen v. Farr, 4 A. & E. 53, Stephen v. Gwenap, 1 Moody & Rob. 120; Middleton v. Melton, 10 B. & C. 317, 328; Gleadow v. Atkins, 3 Tyrwh. 288; and 1 Crompton & M. 110.)

2. A statement is admissible in evidence after the death of the person who made it, if it was made in the regular course of business, and contemporaneously with the transaction to which it refers. A brewer brought an action against Lord Torrington for beer sold and delivered. (Price v. Lord Torrington, 1 Salk. 285.) The drayman who delivered the beer was dead. But the usual course of the brewer's dealing was for the drayman every night to give to the clerk a statement of the beer that he had delivered in the day. This the clerk entered in a book, and the drayman signed the entries. These were contemporaneous entries made in the ordinary course of business by a person who had no interest to mis-state what had occurred, and they were admitted by Holt, C.J. to prove the delivery of the beer; but whatever effect may be due to an entry made in the course of any office, reporting facts necessary to the performance of a duty, the statement of other circumstances, however naturally they may be thought to find a place in the narrative, is no proof of those circumstances. (Chambers v. Bernasconi, 4 Tyrwh. 531, T. T. 1834.) Where a question arose as to the place where a certain arrest took place, it appeared that the officer was dead; but after executing the writ he sent to the sheriff a written certificate, in which the place was named. It was held, then, admitting the entry to be evidence of the fact, and even of the day of the arrest, it was not admissible to prove in what particular spot within the bailiwick the caption took place; that circumstance being merely collateral to the act done.

When a person who has been called as a witness and given his evidence, afterward dies; if another action is brought between the same parties, and the point in issue is the same, the evidence of the deceased witness on the former trial is admissible, and may be proved by any one who heard it. (1 A. & Ellis, 21.) The declarations made by persons in their dying moments are admissible in criminal cases where the death of the person who made the declaration is the subject of the charge, and where the circumstances of the death are the subject of the declaration. (R. v. Mead, 2 B. & C. 607.) But in civil cases it appears that no such declarations would be admitted. (Stobart v. Dryden, 1 M. & W. 615.)

Another case in which statements are admissible, not being within the rule applying to hearsay evidence, is one of very frequent occurrence in practice. If either of the parties to the suit has at any time said or done any thing inconsistent with the facts on which he rests his claim or his defence, evidence may be given of such sayings or doings. The express admissions of a party to the suit, or admissions implied from his conduct, are evidence, and strong evidence, against him. In an action for goods sold and delivered, if the defendant has stated to any one that he has received the goods, that statement may be used against him as an express admission. So in an action for goods sold and delivered, brought by a tradesman, if the tradesman originally sent in his bill to another person, this fact may be used by the defendant as an implied admission by the plaintiff that the goods were not originally supplied on his credit, but that the tradesman looked for payment to the person to whom he first sent in his bill. Such admissions are evidence against the party who made them: but they are not in themselves conclusive evidence. It may in general be shewn that such admissions were mistaken or untrue. The force of an admission depends much upon the mode in which it is made. If a party makes a statement on oath in an answer in Chancery, the answer may be used against him in a subsequent action as an admission of any fact therein contained. A receipt given of the payment of money is in the nature of an admission, and is strong evidence of the money having been paid; but unless it be contained in a deed under seal, it is not conclusive evidence, but may be contradicted or explained. (Graves v. Kay, 3 B. & A. 318; 9 B. & C. 586.)

There is, however, one case in which an admission is conclusive against the person making it. If another person has been induced by the admission to alter his condition, the party who made the admission is estopped from disputing the truth of it with respect to that person (and those claiming under him), (Richard v. Scares, 6 A. & E. 469), and that transactions of the same nature as admissions made by the party himself are the declarations made by another person identified with him in interest. (Carne v. Nichol, 11 Brough. 430), provided he had such interest when he made the declaration; such declaration of a third person is admissible whether he be alive or not at the time of the trial. (Woolway v. Rowe, 1 A. & E. 114.)

There is another point of view in which it is necessary to consider the rule that the best evidence must always be given; in order to understand which, it is necessary to be acquainted with the distinction between primary and secondary evidence. The most apt illustration of this distinction is the rule, that what is in writing shall always be proved by the writing itself. Thus in an action for the use and occupation of a house (Brewer v. Palmer, 3 Esp. 213), if it comes out in the cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses that there was an agreement in writing, that agreement must be produced; no other evidence of the agreement can be given, and if the plaintiff does not produce it, he will fail in proving the agreement on which his claim is founded, and so will not be entitled to a verdict.

It frequently happens that the instrument in question is not in the possession of the party who wishes to use it. If it is in the possession of a third person, that person may be required to produce it by a subpœna duces tecum (Amey v. Long, 9 East, 473); that is, a subpœna which not only requires the person on whom it is summoned to appear himself, but to bring with him the documents specified in the subpœna. (Davis v. Lovell, 4 M. & W. 678.)

Sometimes the documents, of which one party wishes to avail himself, are in the possession of the opposite party; in this case the party who has the documents cannot be compelled to produce them in order to make evidence against himself; but the other party may give him notice to produce them, and if this notice is not complied with, but the documents are witheld, the party who required their production may give any other evidence of their contents. This is termed secondary evidence, and may consist either in a copy or in the recollection of any person who has seen the orignal. For instance, if an action be brought by a tradesman, and the defendant wishes to prove that the credit was originally given to some other person; the tradesman's books could not be produced by the tradesman in support of his own claim; but they might be used against him by the defendant. And if they in fact contain an entry in which the goods are charged to the account of a third person, and not to that of the defendant, this would be a strong admission on the part of the plaintiff that credit was not given to the defendant. In such a case the defendant may give notice to the plaintiff to pro- duce his books. If he refuses to do so, the refusal is not to be deemed conclusive against him; the only authorized effect it has is to permit the defendant to give any other evidence he can obtain of the nature of the entries. Besides this, when the circumstances are such that it is not in the power of the party to produce the original document, he may, on proof of these circumstances, be admitted to give secondary evidence of their contents. Where a deed has been destroyed or lost, or after due inquiry in the proper quarter cannot be found, secondary evidence becomes admissible. When a document of any kind is produced (unless it be one of which the Court take judicial notice, such as a public Act of Parliament), it must be proved before it can be admitted in evidence. If a letter is tendered in evidence, purporting to be written by a particular person, it must be shewn that it was in fact written by him, which may be done either by direct proof, or by the testimony of one who knows the handwriting. But it cannot be proved merely by comparing the handwriting with other papers written by the same person. (Doe v. Suckemore, 5 A. & E. 703.)

It frequently happens that the facts about which there is no dispute are admitted by the parties, and the evidence at the trial is thus narrowed to the facts actually contested. There is no case in which this course can be more beneficially pursued than in the admission of documentary evidence; and it is now required by rule of Court that a party intending to produce written or printed documents should give notice thereof to the other party, and require him to admit them: if he refuses, the case may be brought before a judge by summons, and if he thinks that they ought to be admitted, he will make an order that unless they are admitted the party who refuses to admit them shall pay the costs of proving them. So that where no question can be raised as to the genuineness of a document, it is now made evidence without the expense of calling a witness to prove it.

The nature of the facts to be established in evidence depends upon the issue joined between the parties; hence the intimate connection between pleading and evidence. The allegations contained in the declaration may be very numerous, but the defendant, by disputing only certain facts, dispenses with the proof of the others; and if the pleadings are carried to another stage, the ground occupied by the defendant is narrowed still further by the replication: so that, however complicated the transaction between the parties may have been, the controversy may be reduced to one or two disputed facts, and to these facts the evidence must be applied. If the evidence does not prove the substance of the issue, the party on whom lies the onus of proof must fail. By the substance of the issue is meant the material allegations which it involves. If the facts proved at the trial are different from those stated in the pleadings, this is termed a variance; and if the difference is in any material allegation, the variance is false—that is, the party fails in proving the statement on which he has chosen to rely. In an action for goods sold and delivered, the day of the sale and delivery is not material; but in an action brought on a promissory note, if it is stated in the declaration to bear date on a certain day, if the promissory note produced at the trial bore date on another day, the action could not be supported—the note is not here identified; it is another and a different note, and this is a material variance. But, as I have before had occasion to observe, by the 9 Geo. 4, c. 15, the evil thus created was relieved by giving the judge power to amend the record (Beckett v. Dutton, 7 M. & W. 157); and this power of amendment was carried still further by stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42.

THE CRITIC.

Best on Presumptions of Law and Fact.

THE following are the Rules laid down by Mr. BEST for regulating presumptive or circumstantial proof:—

I. The onus of proving every thing essential to the establishment of the charge against the accused lies on the prosecutor.

II. There must be clear, unequivocal proof of the CORPUS DELICTI.

On this he remarks:—

Every criminal charge involves two things: first, that an offence has been committed; and, secondly, that the accused is the author of it. "When a criminal fact is ascertained," says Lord Stowell, "presumptive proof may be taken to shew who did it,—to fix the criminal, having then an actual corpus delicti; but to take presumptions, in order to swell an equivocal and ambiguous fact into a criminal fact, would, I take it, be an entire misapplication of the doctrine of presumptions." (Evans v. Evans, 1 Hagg. C. R. 105.) Lord Hale, also, has laid down two rules, which have met with general approbation: "I would never," says he, "convict any person for stealing the goods of a person unknown, merely because he would not give an account how he came by them, unless there were due proof made, that a felony was committed of those goods. I would never convict any person of murder or manslaughter, unless the fact were proved to be done, or, at least, the body found dead."(a) And Mr. Starkie states it to be an established rule, that, upon charges of homicide, the accused shall not be convicted unless the death be first distinctly proved, either by direct evidence of the fact, or by inspection of the body.(b)

Mr. BEST then takes an elaborate review of the various modes of proof of the corpus delicti, citing many curious cases, of which we take only the last:—

It remains to notice a class of cases where the supposed corpus delicti is the result of irresponsible, or unconscious agency. In one unhappy instance, in France, a respectable man was convicted and executed, on the strength of the presumption of a number of articles of silver, which were missing, having been found in a place to which he alone had access, and which were afterwards discovered to have been deposited there by a magpie. (3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 94.) Nor must the practice of sleepwalking be overlooked, of which the following curious illustration is given by a writer of the last century. Two persons, who had been hunting during the day, slept together at night. One of them was renewing the chase in his dream, and, imagining himself present at the death of the stag, cried out aloud, "I'll kill him! I'll kill him!" The other, awakened by the noise, got out of bed, and by the light of the moon beheld the sleeper give several deadly stabs with a knife on the part of the bed his companion had just quitted.(c) Suppose a blow given in this way had proved fatal, and that the two men had been shewn to have quarrelled previous to retiring to rest!

III. The evidence against the accused should be such as to exclude, to a moral certainty, every hypothesis but that of his guilt of the offence imputed to him.

IV. The hypothesis of delinquency should flow naturally from the facts proved, and be consistent with them ALL.

An instance of the neglect of this rule deserves to be quoted:—

But not only is it necessary to negative the existence of facts absolutely falsifying the hypothesis of guilt, but due attention should be given to all contrary hypotheses and facts tending to disprobabalise it. This rule was violated in the case of Eliza Fenning, who was convicted and executed in 1815, for attempting to poison a family with whom she lived as cook, by putting arsenic into some food. "The prisoner," says Mr. Wills, "had herself partaken of, and suffered severely, from the poisoned food, but of this important circumstance no notice was taken in the Recorder's charge."(d)

V. Presumptive evidence ought never to be relied upon when direct testimony is wilfully withheld.

VI. In cases of doubt it is safer to acquit than to condemn.

Having considered these six rules, Mr. BEST proceeds to the examination of the principal species of presumptive proof in criminal cases. The following are the most usual species of inculpatory evidence:—

1. Real evidence, or evidence from things.
2. Evidence derived from the antecedent conduct or position of the accused; such as peculiar motives, means, or facilities of committing the offence; preparations, or previous attempts to commit it; declarations of intention, or previous attempts to commit it.
3. Evidence derived from the subsequent conduct of the accused; such as sudden change in his life or circumstances; silence, when accused; false, or evasive statements made by him; suppression, or eloignment of evidence; forgery of exculpatory evidence; flight from justice and tampering with officers of justice; indications of fear, evidenced either by passive deportment or acts shewing a desire for secrecy.
4. Confessorial evidence.

In considering the first of these, Real Evidence, or the Evidence of Things, Mr. BEST prudently warns against the danger of trusting too much to coincidences, unless supported by corroborative proof:—

Some good illustrations of the nature and probative force of evidence derived from things are given by Mr. Starkie. (1 Stark. Ev. 562, 3rd ed.) Thus, in a case of burglary, where the thief gained admittance into the house by opening a window with a penknife, which was broken in the attempt, and a part of the blade left sticking in the window-frame, a broken knife, the fragment of which corresponded with that found in the frame, was found in the pocket of the prisoner. So, where a man was found killed by a pistol, part of the wadding of which was found in the wound, and consisted of a piece of paper, part of a printed ballad,(e) the corresponding part of which was found in the pocket of the prisoner. In another case of murder, a patch on one knee of the prisoner's breeches corresponded with an impression found on the soil, close to the place where the murdered body lay. In a case of robbery, the prosecutor, when attacked, struck the robber on the face with a key, and a mark of a key with corresponding wards was visible on the face of the prisoner. Mascardus also relates an instance where an inclosed ground, set with fruits, was broken into by night, and several of them eaten, the rinds and fragments of some of which were found lying about. On examining these, it appeared that the person who eat them had lost two front teeth, which caused suspicion to fall on a man in the neighbourhood, who had lost a corresponding number, and, on being taxed with the theft, confessed his guilt.(f) We have already seen, in the case of W. Richardson, how the fact of the accused being left-handed may become an adminiculum of evidence against a prisoner.(g) Strong, however, as coincidences of this nature undoubtedly are, we must be careful not to attribute to them, when standing alone, a conclusive effect in all cases. Just let it be remembered, that the men who were found in possession of the broken knife and the fragment of the ballad (the latter especially) might have picked them up, where they had been thrown away by the real criminals; that the person, the print of whose knee was visible on the soil near the murdered corpse, might have been a passer by, who knelt down to see if life were really extinct, or to render assistance to the sufferer: that the being left-handed, or having lost front teeth, are not very uncommon occurrences; and, even in the case of the impression made on the face by the key, the phenomenon might, by possibility, be a natural mark, &c. An excellent instance of how closely the propensity to run after coincidences ought to be watched is presented in the case of John Fitter, who was indicted at the Warwick Assizes of 1834 for the murder of a female. He was a shoemaker, and his leather apron had several circular marks, made by paring away superficial pieces, and it was supposed that they had been removed, as containing spots of blood; but it was satisfactorily proved in his defence that he had cut them off for plasters for a neighbour. (Wills on Circum. Ev. 159.) It is when taken in connexion with other evidence that physical coincidences are chiefly valuable, when they certainly press with fearful weight on a criminal.

So the possibility of accident, of the forgery of real evidence, either with a view to self-exculpation, or maliciously, or in sport, is to be carefully guarded against.

On the second presumption, derived from the existence of motives, means, and opportunity to commit an offence, it is to be observed that though the absence of a sufficient motive affords a strong presumption of innocence, the presence of one is no proof of guilt.

But here again we must rest for awhile.

(a) 2 Hale, P. C. 290. The coincidence between this and the following passages is singular:—"De corpore interfecti necesse est ut constet . . . . Si quis fassus se furem, confessio hæc non obest, nisi constet etiam in specie de rebus furto subtractis." (Matth. de Probat. c. 1, n. 4, p. 9.)

(c) Hervey's Meditations on the Night, note 35.

(d) Wills on Circumst. Ev. p. 158. The conviction of this very young woman created much difference of opinion at the time; but, Government having refused to interfere, she was executed, denying her guilt to the last. If we may credit a newspaper account, another person has since confessed the crime, when on his death-bed. Smith's Hints for the Examination of Medical Witnesses, p. 135, 136. Be this as it may, the general impression now seems in favour of her innocence. See Smith and Wills, in loc. cit.; and Beck's Med. Jur. 857, 7th ed.

(e) The facts are thus stated, 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 256; in 1 Stark. Ev. 562, the paper found in the prisoner's pocket is described as a letter.

In the case of Richard Patch, who was charged with shooting Isaac Blight, in 1806, under circumstances which shewed that the assassin, whoever he was, must have been left-handed, the prisoner was pressed by his counsel, at a conference held before the trial, to say whether he was left-handed, which he protested he was not; but when put to the bar, and called on to hold up his hand and plead, he held up his left hand. ADVOCATES.—Mr. Christie obtained a return in the last session respecting the admission of advocates in the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts of Doctors' Commons, &c. It appears that, according to the present rules, a candidate for admission as an advocate in the Arches' Court is required to deliver a certificate of his having taken the degree of Doctor of Laws. A petition is then presented to the Archbishop, who issues his fiat for the admission of the applicant, who is not to practise for one year. The admission in the Arches' Court qualifies the person for practising in any of the other ecclesiastical courts of Doctors' Commons. The present number of advocates is twenty-four. The same number practise in the Admiralty Courts. The advocates in the ecclesiastical courts of York must be barristers, and may practise by virtue of the Archbishop's fiat in all his courts, but it is not required that they should be doctors of civil law. The stamp duty on their admission is 50*l*. The number has been limited to four, but the present number is only two (Mr. Blanshard and Mr. T. H. Travis), who are of the common law bar.

SUDDEN DISAPPEARANCE OF MR. HURST, M.P.—Considerable excitement prevailed in this town (Horsham) on Thursday last, on its being ascertained that R. H. Hurst, esq. our member, had left with his family for France, having previously discharged all his servants. It has long been apparent to the tradesmen that the honourable gentleman's circumstances were much embarrassed, but none were prepared for his leaving the place on so short a notice. The household furniture and farming stock, &c. are intended to be sold by auction. Many of our tradesmen and others, we are concerned to add, are sufferers to the amount of several thousand pounds. [We hear from other sources that Mr. Hurst's liabilities exceed 150,000*l*. and that his son, Mr. R. H. Hurst, jun. has become responsible for his father's debts to the extent of 80,000*l*. The estates acquired by purchase by the late Mr. Robert Hurst are strictly entailed, and Mr. Hurst and his son only take life interests under the late Mr. Hurst's will.—ED.]—Brighton Guardian.

THE TRACY PEERAGE.—A NOVEL INQUIRY.—On Monday last an inquiry was held at Castleblack churchyard, before Captains Tibeaudo and Warburton and Messrs. G. Newcombe, J. W. Tarleton, and S. Sheane, magistrates, relative to the genuineness of the tombstone by which Mr. James Tracy proves his title to this long-disputed peerage, and which the House of Lords decided in his favour, subject to their proving this stone. A great number of respectable people attended to give evidence, as well as to hear such a novel inquiry. Mr. John Hafter, a stonecutter and builder, proved that the four pieces of stone produced must have originally been in one, they all corresponding with the grain, breaks, and letters when laid together closely to form one stone; and it was his opinion that the said stone was the original one belonging to the family, placed there as a tombstone; in which other witnesses also concurred, and signed declarations to that effect.—Leinster Express.

RIGHTS OF LANDLORDS.—In a case of assault this week (at the Middlesex Sessions) arising out of resistance offered by the proprietor of a house to the removal of her tenant's goods, on an execution, upon the ground that they were liable to a prior claim on account of rent due to her, the judge said, by the 7th and 8th of Victoria, in the case of a weekly tenancy, the landlord was not permitted to recover more than four weeks' arrear of rent, and so on in the like proportions where the tenancy was by the month, quarter, or otherwise; and in the present case (by the 66th section) the party ought to have applied to the clerk of the court out of which the process had issued, by whom her claim for rent, if clearly established, would have been satisfied.

THE LAW OF MORTMAIN.—The report of the select committee of the House of Commons on the law of mortmain, appointed last session upon the motion of Lord John Manners, has just been printed. The opinion of the committee is contained in the following passage, the concluding one in their report:—"Although your committee do not feel authorized by the terms of reference to report in favour of any specific alterations of the laws of mortmain, they feel bound to state, from an attentive consideration of the evidence submitted to them by witnesses whose means of information and authority must be held to be great, that the operation of the laws is most unsatisfactory, leads to doubt, expense, uncertainty, and litigation, and frequently defeats good and pious purposes, which the present aspect of the country would induce all men to wish fulfilled; while, from the existing facilities for evasion, they cannot be regarded as serving the main purpose for which they are supposed to be maintained, by securing the heir from the unexpected alienation of property to which he might reasonably have hoped to succeed."

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Wednesday, Nov. 6.

ROUSE v. JONES.

Decree in creditors' suit—Injunction to stay action at law—Notice—Delay—Costs—Administration of assets.

Where notice of the decree in a creditors' suit was served upon a bond creditor of the testator nearly three weeks before the trial of the action at law, and the motion for an injunction was made eleven days before the trial, it was held that the application for an injunction to stay proceedings at law was not made too late, and that it ought to have been granted. The bond creditor would be entitled to his costs up to the time he received notice of the decree.

Where a bond creditor succeeds in falsifying the heir's plea of no land by descent, and thereupon obtains execution against the proper goods of the heir, such heir will be entitled to stand in the place of the bond creditor against the deceased's real assets for the amount recovered by the bond creditor; and as the effect of this would be to withdraw so much of the assets from the general administration, the possibility of the bond creditor proving at law that the heir had pleaded falsely, forms no objection to an injunction to restrain such bond creditor from proceeding in his action after the decree in a creditors' suit.

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Owen Williams commenced an action against Robert Jones, as the heir-at-law and representative of Humphrey Herbert Jones, to recover on a bond given by him in the year 1821. The defendant in that action pleaded that he took no real estate by descent as the heir of Humphrey H. Jones; the plaintiff rejoined that he had; and on that plea issue was joined. In the meantime a bill had been filed for the administration of the estate of Jones by Rouse, on behalf of himself and the other creditors, and a decree in the creditors' suit was obtained on the 2nd of March, 1843. Notice of trial in the action upon the bond had been served for the ensuing [illegible] Beaumaris on the 21st of March. On the [illegible] March, the day of the decree, notice of the [illegible] served on the solicitor of Owen Williams. [illegible] solicitor refused to suspend proceedings in the action, and on the 10th of March notice of motion for an injunction to stay the trial was given, but the Vice-Chancellor of England refused that injunction upon the ground that the application came too late. It becomes, therefore, of importance, in deciding on this matter, to look with attention to the dates. The argument pressed upon the Court is, that the application was too late because it was made on the eve of the trial. Now the notice of the decree in the creditors' suit was given on the 2nd of March, the moment the decree was obtained; the plaintiff's attorney refused to stay the action on the [illegible]th, the notice of motion for an injunction was given on the 10th, and the trial, at the earliest, could not have taken place before the 21st of March. The attorney of the plaintiff in the action had, therefore, three weeks' notice of the decree; and as he was entitled to all costs incurred before such notice, there seems to be no sufficient reason for refusing the injunction on the ground of the lateness of the application to this Court. (Lord v. Wormleighton, Jacob's Rep.) There Sir John Leach said of the case of Torrewest v. Skinner (2 Mer. 480), which had been pressed upon him, "As to the plea of non assumpsit, I do not think that is a false plea; if the executor merely puts in issue the fact of the debt, that is not false. I am not sure that I had not a wrong notion of this at the time of deciding that case." Any delay on an application to stay a trial before judgment would, therefore, properly resolve itself into a mere question of costs. It was further insisted, in support of the decision of the Court below, that as the defendant at law had pleaded he had no land by descent as the heir of H. H. Jones, the plaintiff at law had a right to go to trial for the purpose of falsifying that plea. (Brook v. Skinner, 2 Mer. 481, n.) In order to understand the value of that objection, it is proper to consider the effect of the trial. If the jury found that the defendant had lands of the testator, the value of those lands would be assessed, and the plaintiff in the action would be entitled to execution against the defendant for his own debt. But on the principle of the case of Buckley v. Nightingale (1 Payne, 655), he might hold such lands in discharge of the testator's debts as far as he had paid under the execution. Otherwise he might be harassed by actions by the testator's debtors ad infinitum. It follows, therefore, that the plaintiff at law, if he succeeded in his action, and had been satisfied out of the real assets, would withdraw the amount of his debt from the assets that ought to be divided among the whole of the creditors. (Lees v. Pocock, 2 Ver. 601.) It has been said that the decree itself was not sufficiently comprehensive to include the plaintiff at law, but I find, on inquiry, that it was the usual and proper decree, and in the customary form. The plaintiff at law may go into the Master's office and prove his debt under this decree. All that was necessary to do in the first instance has been done, and there seems to be no occasion to make the mortgagees parties to the suit. I am of opinion, therefore, that the injunction ought to have been granted. As I understand that the trial at law has already taken place, the injunction must be to restrain the plaintiff at law from suing out execution, with payment of his costs up to the time his attorney was served with notice of the decree.

THE SHEFFIELD CANAL COMPANY v. THE SHEFFIELD AND ROTHERHAM RAILWAY COMPANY.

Pleading—Supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review—Discovery of new evidence—Notice—Due diligence.

Where the question between two joint-stock companies was, whether a proposal made by the defendants had been rejected or accepted by the plaintiffs, a report and resolutions of the directors of the defendant company in which that proposal was treated as a settled matter, is evidence so important, that the discovery of it by the plaintiffs after a decree is sufficient to induce the Court to give leave to file a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review. And the fact that several individuals were holders of shares in the two companies, and as such had received copies of the report before the decree, was not deemed, under the circumstances of the case, to be that sort of notice of the report which would prevent such leave being given by the Court. The railway company not having entered the report in their books, as by their Act of Parliament they were bound to do, formed a strong circumstance of inducement to the Court to permit the supplemental bill to be filed.

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is a motion for leave to file a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review. The question in the cause is, whether a proposal made to Messrs. Badger and Vickers, on the part of the railway company, in their letter of the 20th of June, 1836, was absolutely rejected by Mr. Wake, the solicitor of the canal company, at the meeting which took place the same day, or whether it was left open to allow Mr. Wake to consult Lord Wharncliffe before he finally decided. The Master of the Rolls was of opinion, on the evidence, that the proposal was definitively rejected at the meeting and the treaty closed; and that, as a necessary consequence, the plaintiff's solicitor could not, by afterwards declaring his acceptance of the offer, fasten an agreement on the defendants. It has been stated, in support of the motion before me, that since the decree at the Rolls was pronounced, the plaintiffs have discovered new and material evidence in support of their case, which, if produced at the time of the hearing, would have insured a decree in their favour. That evidence consists of a report of the directors of the railway, made at a meeting of the proprietors, and of certain resolutions passed at that meeting, by which the report was adopted. As the question depends on what passed at that meeting of the 26th of June, 1836, the representation of the transaction by the defendants themselves is undoubtedly very material. In that report they state the proposal, the counter proposition, the rejection of that of the plaintiff, and the final acceptance of the proposal of the defendants. There is no suggestion that the treaty had been broken off, or that the acceptance came too late, but they speak of the matter as something settled and agreed upon, though resting on the correspondence of the solicitors. They say, however, that it must be carried into effect by a formal document, thereby importing that the matter is settled, though informally. No one can doubt that this piece of evidence is most important; whether, in connection with other proofs, it would lead to a different result, I cannot at this moment decide. It is enough to say it would raise a question of great nicety, and would be a ground for a supplemental bill, in the nature of a bill of review, if the Court could be satisfied that the evidence was discovered after the decree, and that there has been no want of diligence in producing it.

It is necessary, therefore, to ascertain whether the plaintiffs did know of it before the decree, and whether the omission to produce it arises from their own neglect, because, if so, they are not, according to the rule of the Court, entitled to the relief they seek. It appears that some of the shareholders in the canal company are proprietors of shares in the railway, and were present when the resolutions passed. Among these are Marsh and Spencer, who were directors of the railway, and must have known of the report and resolutions, Marsh having been also a manager of the canal company in 1840, while the suit was proceeding. No affidavit was made by Mr. Parker, who was a member of the committee for some years, and his removal to Derby is not a satisfactory reason for the neglect to produce such evidence. Marsh also has not joined in the affidavit. He could not have done so, as he is one of the directors of the railway company to whom the report was presented. The affidavits say, however, that they were not aware, and that none of the canal proprietors were aware, of the report till after the judgment. The report and resolutions were, however, printed in the Iris newspaper, published in Sheffield, and to this paper some of the proprietors were subscribers, and they attended the news-rooms where all the papers which contained the advertisement were taken in. Copies of the report were also sent by post to each of the proprietors. It seems, therefore, very improbable that none of these persons knew of the report of 1836; but as the passage in question formed only a small portion of the report, it is not unreasonable to suppose that it may have escaped their recollection after such a considerable interval of time. With respect to the solicitor for the canal company, Mr. Wake, it is asserted that he alluded to the report in a conversation with Messrs. Badger and Vickers; but Mr. Wake is not alive to state his view of that assertion. It is proved that he kept books and made entries of all his transactions with great minuteness and preciseness, and his son swore positively that no entry was to be found in his father's book of any meeting with Mr. Badger on the subject: and that such an entry must have appeared if any meeting on the subject of the report had taken place. It seems, therefore, probable and reasonable to infer that the report was not in the recollection of Mr. Wake, by whom the bill was filed, and that he did not recollect [illegible] progress of the cause; for it would be [illegible] in any other way for his not making [illegible] part of the case. The omission is the more remarkable, as he had referred to a report presented to the canal company in which the agreement is stated; and he relied on Mr. Badger's acquiescence in that statement. In the absence of any direct evidence to impeach the statement of Mr. Badger, confirmed as it is by that of his partner, Mr. Vickers, I cannot, however, allow these things to outweigh his direct and positive testimony respecting the meeting with Wake on the subject of the report. The discovery of the report, too, is singular, as Mr. Wake, the present solicitor to the plaintiff, states it was left at this office in Sheffield, while he was absent, by a person he does not know. This is unsatisfactory, as he ought to have stated in his affidavit a reason for not giving the evidence of this person as to the circumstances of the discovery of the report. This view of the evidence will, on the whole, lead to the conclusion that the motion, according to the practice of the Court, ought not to be granted; but there is a circumstance in the case that, during the whole discussion, pressed strongly on my mind. It was the duty of the defendants to have entered the report in the books of the company according to the provisions of the Act of Parliament. Had they done so, the plaintiffs would have had the benefit of the entry, and the consequence of any neglect or mistake on the part of the solicitors would have been obviated. No satisfactory reason has been assigned for the omission. I think, therefore, I shall exercise a sound and just discretion in allowing the supplemental bill to be filed. I direct the costs to stand over till after the hearing of the cause. The circumstances are singular, and I will not now decide the question of costs.

Suppressing depositions—Commissioner—Irregularity—Evidence—Practice.

Where, after the publication of depositions, it was discovered that one of the commissioners was the nephew and agent of the plaintiff, such depositions will be suppressed. And the fact that publication has passed will not prevent such suppression, if the application for that purpose be made within a reasonable time after the discovery of the objection.
